Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): Will my right hon. Friend confirm the figure that he gave just now? If it is correct that we have a £1 billion current account surplus with Japan, that is a remarkable transformation. Only a few years ago, it seemed virtually impossible to export to Japan and there was a huge flood of Japanese imports into this country. Now, we have fantastic Japanese investment here, plus British exports to Japan.

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend is absolutely right, and the picture is reflected in many other markets around the world.

We are now selling not only manufactured goods, but expertise—British know-how—all over the world. Only yesterday, I hosted a major conference at the Department of Trade and Industry, when delegates from all over the world came to hear about the British experience of privatisation. They met, among others, British banks from the City of London that are imparting their expertise on privatisation in every continent.

Those privatised companies—which, as nationalised industries, were a national disgrace—are now international winners. They are almost invariably represented on the trade missions, which I and my ministerial colleagues lead, and I can tell the House from first-hand experience that they are among the most warmly welcomed by our foreign hosts, who are eager to do business with them—and excellent business they do. The companies that we privatised not only pay significant sums in tax every year—what a turnaround that is—but they now account for 10 per cent. of our exports. They are genuine, competitive exports, not subsidised by the British taxpayer. But still the Labour party, almost alone in the world, opposes privatisation.

Everywhere one goes around the world, one finds British goods and services being sold. Sometimes they dominate whole industries. Some hon. Members may follow motor racing and the Grand Prix circuit—the epitome of diverse international competition, one might think, but not a bit of it. Of the 22 formula one cars that started in the main Grand Prix this year, 18 were designed and built in Britain. What about the all-American Indy car circuit? Every car in this year's Indy 500 race was designed and built in Britain. At whatever position Damon Hill or David Coulthard take the chequered flag, we can be sure that Britain will be up among the winners every time.

It should be no surprise that British exports are booming. We have always been one of the world's great trading nations. The trouble is that for much of the post-war period, the venturing instincts of the British people were suppressed. They were weighed down with burdens on business, with taxes, with rules and regulations. We have liberated British business from the shackles of Government intervention, burdens and socialism. We have released the venturing instincts of British businesses—large and small.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for giving way and, obviously, proud of the United Kingdom's tremendous achievement in attracting so much inward investment. On the subject of bureaucracy and red tape, one factor that adds costs to business in the rest of Europe is the social chapter. If the 48-hour working time directive were imposed on Britain, the Labour party would embrace it—it does not mind having extra costs heaped on businesses and the subsequent unemployment that that creates. What progress is my right hon. Friend making with negotiations with businesses in this country on the impact of the imposition of the 48-hour working time directive on employment in this country?

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend is right and puts his finger on a particularly important distinction between the Conservative party's approach to burdens on business and that adopted by the Labour party. If my hon. Friend can bear with me, I shall develop that theme a little later in my speech. I shall be publishing a consultation paper on the working time directive later today.

The House will wonder how we have managed to achieve the turnaround and release the venturing instincts in British business. We have done so, first, by creating a stable and growing economy, which is blessed with low inflation, low interest rates and falling unemployment. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's Budget, which the House finished debating earlier this week, was living proof that we shall continue to run the economy in a sound, prudent way, while being true to our instincts as tax cutters and proponents of small government. My right hon. and learned Friend was able to point to low inflation, falling borrowing and strong growth; he was also able to cut taxes for individuals and companies alike. Next year, the average family will be £1,100 better off than at the previous election. We promised, and we delivered.

But a stable economy is not all that we have created. We have restored the competitiveness of Britain and so, by consequence, the competitiveness of British exports. Costs are low and burdens on business are kept to a minimum. In Britain, the average employer must add 18 per cent. to wage bills to cover social costs. In Germany, the figure is 32 per cent., in France it is 42 per cent. and in Italy it is 44 per cent. Those high costs mean low competitiveness, so it is no wonder that our exports are doing well. I shall say a little more about our inward investment record in a moment, but it is significant that foreign companies come to Britain in order to export. Some 40 per cent. of our exports are accounted for by inward investors.

Let us consider Cohline—a German manufacturer of automotive fuel lines and hydromatic components. It has built a new factory in Thanet for manufacturing and it exports 95 per cent. of its output back to Germany, where Cohline has important contracts with major German car makers such as BMW, Daimler Benz and Volkswagen. And 300 other German companies, including Siemens and Bosch, have also come to Britain to manufacture and export their goods. Our exports are booming as our burdens are low, and because we are becoming the enterprise centre of Europe.

Mr. Skinner: If everything in the garden is lovely, why, in the 17 years that the Tory Government have been in power, has the manufacturing base in Britain been reduced by nearly 40 per cent? Until 1983—shortly after a Labour Government were in power—we had a surplus of manufacturing goods in Britain. But now, despite the fairy story that this tin-pot Minister is trotting out this morning, his own statistics, from the Office for National Statistics, show that there was a current deficit on trade in goods in the third quarter of 1996 of £2.7 billion—those are the latest figures available. Over the past 13 years, the Tory Government have transformed the surplus on manufactured goods, which Britain proudly held during the period of a Labour Government, to one of continuing deficit, year after year after year.

Mr. Lang: Clearly, the hon. Gentleman did not hear the figures that I gave the House earlier. Is he aware that manufacturing industry has been growing in the past few years? We have increased employment in manufacturing by 150,000 jobs in the past three years. We now manufacture more than we ever did under any previous Labour Government in our history. That is the turnaround that we have achieved in this country. The Government play an active part in helping exporters into new markets.

Mr. Michael Stephen (Shoreham): Does my right hon. Friend agree that there is sometimes a problem of definition of what we mean by manufacturing? Is the creation and development of software regarded as manufacturing or as the provision of services?

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend makes a good point. There has been a definitional change. Many manufacturers have now subcontracted many of their processes to outside industries that are regarded as service industries—one such industry is transport. Despite the change in the structure of the definitions, our manufacturing output has expanded dramatically, our productivity has doubled in the lifetime of this Government and exports are at an all-time record. That is the telling picture that we are now able to present to the British people.

We in government play an active part in helping our exporters into new markets. I and my ministerial colleagues have taken thousands of British business men, from large and small companies, on trade missions to open up new markets for our exports. Everywhere we go—from Mexico to Mauritius, from China to South Africa—we are welcomed with open arms and with respect for the new competitiveness and quality for which Britain is now renowned.

Our embassies and consulates abroad now know that promoting Britain's commercial interests is at the centre of their mission. Our best overseas embassies are true launching pads for British industry. We operate a joint export promotions directorate with the Foreign Office so that we can work together to best advantage. In the Department of Trade and Industry, we have specialised country desks for export promotion, where businesses that want to export to a particular part of the world can get rapid, expert advice, often provided by people seconded from top private sector companies who have particular knowledge of the market or industry that they are helping.

Small firms are a particular priority for us. The business links network operates a national network of export counsellors, who have a specific responsibility for helping small firms to boost their export effort.

I believe in small government and would not operate those schemes if I was not absolutely convinced as to their value for money, but that value is irreproachable. In April this year, the National Audit Office published its report on our overseas trade services. Analysing our work in four key south-east Asian markets, the report found that £4.5 million in public spending had helped to generate an extra £345 million of additional business—in other words, every pound we spent generated £77 in additional exports for Britain.

Britain's export performance is now nothing short of spectacular and the world knows it. It is clear that without those policies, that success would be a world away, as it was during the 1970s under the previous Labour Government. The world is backing Britain by buying more of our goods and services than ever before; but the world's business community is paying us an even greater compliment by coming to locate its businesses here and doing so in record numbers.

Since 1979, the Invest in Britain Bureau has registered nearly 5,000 separate inward investment projects, and the exciting point is that that trend is accelerating. An inward investment bandwagon is rolling for Britain as the reputation of this country grows and companies look enviously at the performance of their rivals that choose to locate here. Last year, for the third year running, we increased the number of inward investment projects into this country. We had 487 successes—more than one a day—all choosing to locate in Britain. The investment grows and flourishes. Today, two new inward investments are about to be announced—one in Scotland, and one in Wales.

We are top of the European league for inward investment. We win a third of all inward investment into the European Union from the rest of the world. We win some 40 per cent. of all Japanese and American investment into the European Union and 50 per cent. of investment into the EU from Canada. For the world's fastest growing economies—the Asian tigers, such as Korea and Taiwan—Britain is the investment base of choice: we have more than half of all their investments in Europe.

Indeed, two of the most spectacular investments of 1996 have come from Korea. In July, the LG group announced Britain's largest single inward investment to date in terms of job creation, with its plans to spend £1.7 billion on two manufacturing plants in south Wales and so create some 6,100 jobs. In October, Hyundai announced that it would spend £2.4 billion on two microchip manufacturing facilities in Scotland, bringing 2,000 new jobs. If I had time, I could give many more examples and describe how every part of Britain is benefiting from the surge in inward investment, but let me illustrate the point by focusing on the effect of inward investment on one sector—the motor industry.

Last month, I was delighted to be able to announce confirmation by the BMW group that its new generation engine, the NG4, would be built in the west midlands. That £400 million project will safeguard 1,500 jobs at Rover and 5,000 more in the components supply industry. It was magnificent news, ensuring that we have a vibrant, world-class car manufacturer in the midlands with the strategic capability to design and build engines—the first plant outside Germany to build BMW engines. Land-Rover's commitment to a new sports vehicle and Rover's to the new Mini, and the recent investment decisions by Nissan and Vauxhall and by Proton of Malaysia, reinforce that picture of success.

What are the benefits of the riptide of inward investment? First, it brings jobs: since 1979, inward investment has brought over 800,000 associated jobs and the pace is quickening. In the past three years alone, 289,000 jobs have been created or safeguarded and last year the figure was around 100,000. Jobs resulting from inward investment are making a big contribution to the fact that unemployment in Britain—just over 7 per cent. and falling—is more than 4 per cent. lower than the EU average.

Mr. Skinner: Is the Minister aware that a couple of weeks ago, on 17 November, an editorial in the News of the World—a Murdoch newspaper—said that the Government's figure of just over 2 million unemployed was totally false? The newspaper had carried out a survey, which showed that there were 4.1 million people out of work—about 2.1 million were claiming unemployment benefit, but a further 2 million were either claiming other forms of benefit or not receiving any benefits at all.

[Mr. Skinner]

The truth of that calculation is amplified by a survey in Bolsover, which discovered that 50 per cent. of the population were out of work in the ex-mining villages in three wards of my constituency, because not a single pit is left and there is hardly any work to be had. Not only are Labour Members saying that the Government's unemployment figures are false, but Tory newspapers are now saying out loud that the figures are false. There are more than 4 million people out of work but, sadly, only slightly more than 2 million receive unemployment benefit.

Mr. Lang: I can understand the hon. Gentleman's sensitivity about unemployment, given the previous Labour Government's appalling record on job losses. The unemployment count carried out in this country is supported by broadly comparable figures from other surveys, including international ones.

Jobs are not the only benefit of investment. Investment improves our capacity to compete in the future. More than £11 billion of capital expenditure was brought to the United Kingdom by foreign investors in 1995. New techniques are introduced into British industry by foreign investors. Major projects give rise to a flurry of activity among small and medium-sized firms, which act as suppliers to larger companies. Competition is enhanced by expanding the number of players in the domestic market, leading to more choice for consumers. Whole swathes of the country have been regenerated by inward investment, which has often been based on redeveloping derelict sites.

Why do overseas companies choose to locate in Britain? They do so because, during the past 17 years, we have been building the enterprise centre of Europe here. In the words of Jan Timmer, president of that great Dutch company, Philips:

"The most competitive country in Europe today is the United Kingdom . . . The factories we have in the UK are the most changed factories in the world".

I spoke earlier about our flexible labour market, with low burdens on business; and about our stable economy, with low inflation and low interest rates. We have also transformed industrial relations in this country. Our strike record under the previous Labour Government was a national disgrace, but through a series of step-by-step reforms of our industrial relations law, we have brought order, and indeed harmony, to labour relations here. The number of days lost to strikes is now less than one twentieth of the level that we inherited from the previous Labour Government, and that helps to bring inward investment—and jobs—to Britain. One of this country's big inward investors has cited our improved industrial relations as one of the attractions.

Not only does Labour have a shameful record on strikes when in government; it has an equally shocking record when in opposition. The Labour party opposed each and every one of the trade union reforms that foreign companies endorse so warmly. If we had had a Labour Government during the 1980s, we would still have secondary action and flying pickets, the closed shop and car park mass meetings instead of secret ballots, and a strike rate way above that of our competitors.

More than 70 per cent. of strikes are now in the monopoly and public services. Last summer, millions of ordinary people suffered severe disruption at the hands of strikers in the London Underground and in the Royal Mail. What was Labour's response? A sponsored silence in support of the strikers—some comfort for the victims of those strikes, the general public, and some comfort for the potential inward investor attracted to Britain. The Government are prepared to ensure that such disruption does not plague Britain.

It is significant that many of our inward investors—an increasing number—are coming to Britain from continental Europe. They are fleeing from the burdens on business, the over-regulation and the high taxation that continental Governments are imposing.

Mr. Stephen: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the working time directive has nothing to do with a shorter working week, but is just an attempt by the unions to get more money for the same or even less work, and that such socialist and corporatist nonsense is making continental Europe uncompetitive?

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): Make them work longer—a 56 or 64-hour week.

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend is right. The working time directive, like many of the other burdens on business, is not to do with health and safety but is to do with social engineering—[Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. If the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) wishes to intervene, I am sure that the Minister will take account of that, but repeated sedentary interventions are not in order.

Mr. Lang: It is because continental Governments are imposing over-regulation and burdens on their business that so many of the companies from those countries are locating in this country.

Some hon. Members may be aware of the case of Mr. Olivier Cadic. He is a French business man who, earlier this year, announced that he planned to move his business—a high-tech graphics company—to Ashford in Kent. He said that high social costs in France were pricing him out of his market. He is not alone. The inward investment agency Locate in Kent has helped 33 foreign companies set up business in that county in the past year alone.

Continental employers know that burdens on business are destroying their competitiveness. They plead with their Governments to get rid of them. Hans-Olaf Henkel, president of the German employers federation, the BDI, said:

"we have too rigid labour laws. We have too high social costs and taxes. We work the shortest week in Europe. The German government spends 50 per cent. of GDP as opposed to 42 per cent. in Britain. No wonder we have a problem."

From our position of strength in the world—through trade and inward investment—we are able to be at the forefront in advocating multilateral free trade. The Government have the vision to recognise that globalisation—the increasing integration of economic activities throughout the world—means that the United Kingdom has no choice but to trade on a global scale. The growth in trade in goods has been phenomenal, increasing more than 14-fold since 1950. That has brought us enormous benefits, because about a quarter of our gross domestic product comes from trade in goods and services.

I want Britain, from that position of strength, to lead the world in promoting free trade. We did that in Europe; the single market was largely a British initiative and our leading role helped to galvanise other nations into action. Now is the time for Britain to turn evangelical in support of global free trade.

I am leaving for Singapore today, to pursue Britain's liberalising agenda, with more than 100 Trade Ministers from throughout the world, at the first ministerial conference of the World Trade Organisation.

Mr. MacShane: The President of the Board of Trade is now off, with a bevy of advisers, for a week in the sun in Singapore. We all wish him well on his trip and hope that he has a nice holiday, but is it not a scandal that Britain is being evangelical? A century ago, William Wilberforce took the lead in abolishing slavery, but the Secretary of State is going to the sun in Singapore to veto efforts to ban child labour in the context of World Trade Organisation discussions—efforts led by America, France and other progressive evangelical countries. It is a scandal that he is going there to veto efforts to place child labour on the WTO's agenda.

Mr. Lang: The World Trade Organisation is a trade organisation, not a social organisation. It is responsible for ensuring trade liberalisation, not for seeking to impose obligations on emerging economies. The best way to help economies that are emerging and that wish to raise their labour standards is to trade with them, so that prosperity spreads to those countries. I shall be in Singapore to support the agreed line of the European Union on trade and labour issues.

Our hand at the Singapore conference will be strengthened by our membership of the European Union. As members of the world's largest trading bloc, we have massive influence on international trade issues.

At next week's conference, I shall press for three priorities: first, a substantial work programme to carry forward trade liberalisation in the WTO; secondly, the completion, at least in outline, of an information technology agreement aimed at the progressive elimination of tariffs on IT products; and thirdly, real progress on negotiations to liberalise telecommunications services.

The information technology agreement will mean lower costs for users and manufacturers and it will help businesses to export. It is estimated that that agreement will benefit British industry by at least £200 million a year. That is a win-win objective in a sector of enormous importance globally, the backbone of developed and developing economies alike. Likewise, the potential gains from a world telecoms deal are huge.

We gain when both we and others open markets. For that reason, we want to secure a substantial work programme to tackle the barriers to trade that confront our companies in global markets. Our priorities offer the best prospect of real liberalisation for British industry and consumers. Let me expand on a few of them.

We want Government procurement to be opened up globally. That accounts for a substantial proportion of economic activity—as much as 10 to 15 per cent. of GDP in the European Union and in the United States—but large volumes of trade involving central and local government and nationalised industries are protected. We must ensure efficient use of what is, after all, public money.

We recognise that import and export regulations and procedures incur considerable costs for our businesses. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development has estimated that compliance with regulations averages as much as 10 per cent. of the value of world trade in goods. We want work to take place to simplify such procedures and cut costs.

Business continues to tell us that one of its biggest worries is that standards and technical regulations often differ regionally and nationally. Again, we need to focus work at an international level.

EU exporters are losing an estimated £2 billion a year on piracy of software, books and compact discs, to name just a few items. We would gain from measures in the area of intellectual property rights and we shall seek to make progress there.

Our record of success in investment—inward and outward—means that it is vital for our companies to be able to make their investment decisions confidently, at home and overseas. We are committed to working for liberal and open markets in investment world wide. To both British business and the Government, work in the WTO on trade and investment is a priority.

I have spoken about our record on inward investment, but I want to make it clear that outward investment is advantageous, too. Recently, someone said to me, on a very public platform—she is not here today, so I shall not name her—that the fact that we have record flows of investment overseas shows Britain to be in a decrepit state. I was flabbergasted at the scale of that incomprehension, because nothing could be a greater endorsement of the success that Britain enjoys than the fact that our self-confident investors are buying and setting up businesses and making money throughout the world.

For free traders, trade is not one-way. Just as wishing to export but not to import is a sign of a protectionist mentality, wanting to be the recipient of investment without wishing to engage in it betrays a fundamental lack of understanding of the virtues of trade. People should be free to find the best opportunities, the best markets, the best investments anywhere in the world, without constraints. In that way, people can make the fullest use of their skills and resources; competition can ensure maximum efficiency; people can enjoy the choice and diversity that the whole world offers; and the quantum of economic activity, and thence employment, increases.

Britain does extremely well out of its overseas investments. Last year, British companies earned nearly £25 billion from the total stock of outward direct investment of £214 billion—an extremely high rate of return. In fact Britain receives more income, and more interest and dividends, from its ownership of companies overseas than it pays out to those who own companies in Britain. The surplus is approaching £10 billion.

Outward investment benefits Britain in other ways, including our exports. The Government commissioned a major study by KPMG to study the effects of outward investment. Its principal findings were that, for most companies, overseas investment is driven by market expansion and development. Other companies sought to improve service to existing customers overseas, or to establish a regional hub from which to expand further an existing overseas market.

One example that I came across recently on a visit to Mexico was that of a United Kingdom manufacturer of high-tech equipment. Having successfully built up an export market for its products there, that company is considering building a production facility in Mexico, which would enable it to expand its marketing effort to include north America and perhaps Latin America.

Such investment brings benefits to the British companies involved and, therefore, to the United Kingdom as a whole, in ways that could not be achieved simply through exporting goods. Closeness to one's market and the ability to respond to changing customer requirements, as well as local good will, are vital to success. The KPMG study concluded that, far from displacing trade, such investment enhances it overall.

The assertion by some that outward investment is simply "exporting jobs" is simply not true. The KPMG survey found that in only a very few cases of outward investment was production moved overseas to reduce input costs. It found no evidence that investment overseas displaced British production and employment levels, domestic and export sales, or quality of service to existing customers. Indeed, the evidence showed that many outward investments were accompanied by increases in sales and production from British facilities.

The benefits of a liberal international investment regime are palpable. But the core of my thesis today is the proposition that inward investment and outward investment, linked to an export drive, can help to form a golden triangle of prosperity for Britain, each interacting with and benefiting the other.

Another return from the high level of overseas investment is the establishment of a depth of experience in a wide range of markets. That has made a significant contribution to the success of sales of British financial and advisory services abroad.

In short, investment abroad, wherever there are opportunities that are not matched at home, enables British resources to be used more efficiently and increases our national income. So although attention is often focused on the success stories and benefits of inward investment, I want to make it clear that I regard outward investment, too, as a source of major benefit to the British economy. Cross-border investment brings advantages to both sides. That is why overseas companies come here and why British companies look overseas, as well as at home, for opportunities. Both forms of investment help our exports.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): Is it not also true that where we make overseas investments, which our Select Committee on Trade and Industry has been anxious to promote, British companies that manufacture overseas source their components and raw materials from here, thereby increasing our exports?

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend is right. He makes an additional point in support of the general thesis that I am advancing. I am grateful to him.

Mr. Christopher Gill (Ludlow): Before my right hon. Friend moves off the question of investment, does he agree that there is a danger in always stressing inward investment as if it was the panacea for all ills? Does it not tend to send the wrong message to domestic investors if the Government and politicians talk all the time about inward investment? What the country should be talking about is investment of all sorts. As I hope to have the opportunity of saying later, not all inward investment is as good as it is cracked up to be. So I urge my right hon. Friend in his pronouncements to be even-handed between outward, inward and domestic investment.

Mr. Lang: My hon. Friend is right. That is the point that I have been seeking to make. Inward investment is important, outward investment is important and, of course, domestic investment is important. Indeed, some 60 per cent. of all the regional selective assistance grants that my Department makes go to domestic companies that are expanding or relocating their activities. The point is that investment of whatever kind can be encouraged only by the creation of a stable economic framework such as has been achieved by the Government.

We are negotiating in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development to conclude the multilateral agreement on investment. It will be the first multilateral, comprehensive and legally binding investment agreement. It will break down barriers, protect the rights of investors and provide effective dispute settlement procedures.

We are rightly proud of our record in promoting competition. We see that it is necessary to begin looking at competition issues on a global scale. We would welcome exploratory work on trade and competition in the World Trade Organisation. The United Kingdom is also working hard to help clarify the complex relationship between trade and the environment, and wants work to continue.

Another issue for Singapore will be how we give direction to the WTO's work on services. We are working, therefore, for a new financial services agreement to involve all major players. We are also keen to achieve results on professional services.

So overall, we are determined to see a successful outcome from the Singapore WTO ministerial conference, setting in train a comprehensive work programme on the broad front of core liberalisation issues. That programme can then lead into the launch of a new multilateral trade negotiating round, which should be launched before the end of the century, to deliver a further substantial liberalising package before 2010.

The ultimate goal beyond that should be a commitment by WTO members to global free trade by 2020—a plan set out last month in the White Paper on free trade and foreign policy, published jointly by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and myself.

Global free trade will bring huge benefits to the world economy and raise living standards. Those benefits will be, for consumers, lower prices, wider choice and better-quality products; and for producers, open markets to allow our companies to expand their operations and increased competitiveness from access to competitive sources.

Under the Conservative Government, Britain is riding high in the world. We have record exports; the world is buying our goods. We have record inward investment; the world is choosing to locate in Britain. We are leading the world in the cause of global free trade, just as we led Europe in the cause of the single market. Where once Britain was avoided lest the British disease of strikes and low productivity be contagious, today we set an example to the world.

The policies that we have pursued during the past 17 years have brought about that transformation. We took tough decisions. We reduced taxes and burdens on business. We improved industrial relations. We promised success, and we are delivering success. We are making Britain the enterprise centre of Europe.

The Government promised, and the Government are delivering, and we are the only party that can offer the United Kingdom continuing success, because we are the only party with the track record, the policies and the principles that can deliver it.

10.16 am

Mr. Stuart Bell (Middlesbrough): I am grateful to the President of the Board of Trade for the debate today on trade and inward investment. I apologise to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, to the President of the Board of Trade and to the House for the absence of my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett). She is unable to be here today, but I shall make some of the points that she would have made and, of course, I shall develop my own themes.

We have two Governments at the moment—a Government in situ and a Government in waiting. We have a Prime Minister who daily reconstructs the chaos theory of politics. We had a clear and precise statement on Tuesday from the Dispatch Box that the Government's policy on the single currency—I am glad to see that the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) is in his place and will seek to speak in the debate—would be unchanged: the Government would fight a general election with the offer of referendum to the British people. We were told that the Prime Minister would not rule out entirely the single currency, but hardly does he make that statement from the Front Bench than Back Benchers in the 1922 Committee meet upstairs and say clearly—

Mr. Stephen: The hon. Gentleman was not there.

Mr. Bell: I did not need to be there because they told me on television this morning what was said. The Prime Minister says one thing from the Dispatch Box and his Back Benchers say something else in the 1922 Committee. We know that prospective Conservative parliamentary candidates are against the single currency. I notice your stern gaze, Madam Deputy Speaker, so I will get to the point.

As we have a Government in waiting and a Government in situ, it was charitable and generous of Conservative Central Office to let me have its research document on trade and inward investment. I was glad to see the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) having a good read of it before he seeks to intervene later in the day. We enjoy the feeling of co-operation that exists.

Mr. Tim Smith: Read it out.

Mr. Bell: We will wait to hear whether Conservative Members read it out and we shall be sure that they stay with the document, with its myths, myths and shibboleths. It is remarkable that this document on trade and inward investment does not mention the single currency. As the President of the Board of Trade is discussing trade and saying that Britain is the enterprise centre of Europe, I should have thought that the single currency would be uppermost in the minds of researchers at Conservative Central Office, but they have not referred to it.

Mr. Skinner: The President of the Board of Trade did not refer to it either.

Mr. Bell: My hon. Friend is right. This will therefore be an interesting debate on inward investment, trade and outward investment, without a great deal of reference to either the single currency or the single market.

Mr. Tim Smith: I am not convinced that the single currency issue is important to Britain's trade. If the hon. Gentleman believes that it is so important, will he say what he and the Labour party think about it?

Mr. Bell: I am always grateful for interventions by the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith). I have followed his articles in Accountancy Age over the years and he and I share a common interest in that subject. He will be pleased to know that, in a Friday debate when we all have time on our hands, I should be glad to go through the issue of the single currency and I shall do so as part of my speech. If he sits patiently he will hear the points that I have to make.

Naturally, the President of the Board of Trade spoke highly of the inward investment programme. I was amused at some of his language: he used the word "spectacular" at least three times and I thought that he was writing a Hollywood script when he went through our inward investment record.

I was grateful for the intervention of the hon. Member for Ludlow because he made a pertinent point. Although we welcome inward investment and will welcome the next two projects to which the President of the Board of Trade referred, the massive outward investment from our country has not necessarily been so helpful. The investment in manufacturing that the Chancellor announced in the Budget was some 6 per cent. of domestic investment in our economy. We need a balance, and the intervention of the hon. Member for Ludlow rectified that balance somewhat.

As I have said, we welcome inward investment. Indeed, it would be churlish to stand at this Dispatch Box and say that the Opposition do not welcome inward investment to this country. It is remarkable—the President of the Board of Trade did not refer to this—that massive inward investment coincided with our signing of the Single European Act 1986. The President referred to the fact that many of the manufacturers coming to this country and investing here are doing so to get the benefit of the single market.

Mr. Gill: The hon. Gentleman will be the first to recognise that a business man deciding to relocate or make a large new capital investment somewhere bears in mind factors other than whether the United Kingdom is in the European Union. Those may include the availability of a suitable work force, the motivation of that work force, the conditions that the Government have created whereby labour relations are better than they have been for 100 years, and whether managers can manage. If we are to have a free and frank, and also constructive, debate this morning, the hon. Gentleman will probably concede those points.

Mr. Bell: Far from merely conceding them, I agree with everything that the hon. Gentleman said. If he continues to make interventions like that, I may make him an offer that he cannot refuse. Perhaps he should come over here and sit next to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Mr. Gill: The hon. Gentleman tempts me, but essentially I am a capitalist and those who sit on the Opposition Benches are socialists. There is a huge difference in our philosophies. Our joint aim, however, should be the prosperity of this country.

Mr. Bell: I thought for a moment that the hon. Gentleman was going to call me a capitalist, which would have been a terrible sin against me and especially against my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover.

Perhaps I may answer the specific point that the hon. Gentleman made. It was an excellent point and it anticipates my speech. I have before me the brochure of Toyota, one of the great inward investors, which says that its decision to locate its European manufacturing plants in the United Kingdom was influenced by many factors, including a reasonably sized domestic market, the tradition of vehicle manufacture, a substantial indigenous parts and components supply sector, good access to the rest of Europe, and the co-operative attitude of national and local government. So I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Butterfill: The hon. Gentleman may find that the Government's co-operative attitude was more important in that decision. The Library's figures—they were not supplied by the Conservative Central Office research department—show that when we took over from the Labour party net inward investment grew from £2.9 billion per year to £5.6 billion by 1986, which was before the decision to sign the Single European Act. So it had much more to do with the fact that we had created a benign environment than with the decision to sign that legislation.

Mr. Bell: The hon. Gentleman talks of the Government's benign attitude in relation to Toyota, but he should have mentioned the supportive action of the Labour-controlled local authority, which provided the framework and even a village to help Toyota invest in this part of the world. The hon. Gentleman should not rely too much on that research document; he should be a little more cautious.

I will use the figures given by the President of the Board of Trade—as he is here, he will not disavow them. He made it clear that our stock of inward investment is now more than £150 billion, up from £44.3 billion in 1985. We welcome that. Since 1986, therefore, there has been a massive increase and accumulation of inward investment, which is the point that I was making. The President referred to a statement by my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South on inward and outward investment. In a recent parliamentary question to the President of the Board of Trade, my right hon. Friend asked:

"what percentage of inward investment in 1995 was due to the acquisition, takeover or merger of a United Kingdom company by overseas investors?"

The President replied:

"In 1995, acquisitions, takeovers and mergers accounted for around 25 per cent. of foreign direct and portfolio investment into the UK, based on UK balance of payments data."—[Official Report, 12 June 1996; Vol. 279, c. 182.]

I am seeking to get a balance into this debate. The point is that 25 per cent. of that inward investment is simply money turning around and changing hands, not productive investment.

Naturally, we are not saying that we do not want that investment. We recognise that certain banks in the City of London, such as SG Warburg, Kleinwort Benson and even Barings, have been taken over by way of inward investment. Some believe that outward investment is a good philosophy. Barings invested £800 million of its money in the Singapore trading markets, with disastrous consequences for the company. Companies such as South Western Electricity and Northumbrian Water have been acquired by overseas investors, which have a firm role to play in our domestic economy.

Although the President of the Board of Trade mentioned some of the companies that have invested here, the list was clearly not extensive: Siemens, Fujitsu, Toyota, NEC, Samsung, Honda, Chunghwa and Nissan are but a few. My right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South was the first to recognise Toyota's input into the local domestic economy, with the creation of 1,970 jobs and £700 million of investment.

We welcome that inward investment but—to return to the point made by the hon. Member for Ludlow—we want to encourage domestic investment as well. The Chancellor said that business investment has been growing at 6 per cent. a year, that he expected it to grow strongly and that he thought that it would grow to 10 per cent. a year. Those are optimistic figures. We hope that they will be borne out by the results, but as my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover remarked, manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom is still lower today than it was in 1979. It is also lower than it was in 1989.

More can be done in our regions. The White Paper referred to regional development agencies. We want to strengthen the roles of development agencies in Scotland and Wales, and to establish a series of regional development agencies which could co-ordinate economic development and encourage new technology by providing a conduit for new investors.

We congratulate the Invest in Britain Bureau on the work that it has done. Victory has a thousand fathers, as we know. The father of the Invest in Britain Bureau was a Labour Government, who set it up way back in 1977. The President of the Board of Trade likes to paint a bleak picture of what life was like in 1979—like a Flemish landscape in the middle of winter.

Mr. Skinner: We had a surplus then.

Mr. Bell: Indeed.

Mr. Tim Smith: If things were going so well in 1979, can the hon. Gentleman name one significant inward investor, apart from De Lorean, in the period of the Labour Government?

Mr. Bell: De Lorean was an inward investment in Northern Ireland, which was part of our policy of investment in our regions. Samsung was in our country at that time, as were Merck Sharpe and Dohme, the American pharmaceutical company, and Sony. Ford expanded. The litany goes on and on. The hon. Gentleman should be careful: we could spend the rest of the debate listing companies which invested in our country at that time. I am sure that the President of the Board of Trade would accept that the United States invests more money in the UK than anywhere else in the world, and it has been doing so since the 1930s at least. We are, have been and will be—under a Labour Government or even under a Conservative Government—a country with high skills in the work force which are always attractive to companies seeking to invest.

We congratulate the Invest in Britain Bureau within the Department of Trade and Industry which works closely with the Locate in Scotland office, the Welsh Development Agency and the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland. The intervention of the hon. Member for Beaconsfield helps me to refer to Northern Ireland. In debates such as this, we rarely mention it. We are the United Kingdom and I am often surprised that Government documents refer to Britain, which so far as I am aware means England and Wales. The United Kingdom covers Northern Ireland—[Interruption.] Scotland is part of Great Britain.

We welcome inward investment for Northern Ireland. We welcome the trading capabilities of Northern Ireland and want them to be further developed. We want to expand regional development organisations and the link with the Foreign Office. We are grateful to the President of the Board of Trade for telling us that the Government are implementing Labour party policy, in anticipation. In our documents to our party conference last autumn we stated clearly that we wish to strengthen the link between the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The right hon. Gentleman mentioned our embassies abroad as focal points for our exports and outward investment. I remind him that a month ago President Chirac brought every French ambassador to the Elysée palace and told them that they were ambassadors for their country not only in diplomatic affairs, but for trade. The French still export more than we do: they are the world's fourth largest exporter while we are the fifth.

Mr. MacShane: They have a trade surplus.

Mr. Bell: Indeed. France has a trade surplus of $18 billion, while the UK Chancellor of the Exchequer congratulated himself in his Budget because he thinks that we might be in balance on current account.

Mr. Lang: We are exporting at a faster rate than France. Does the hon. Gentleman concede that since 1981 we have closed the gap?

Mr. Skinner: We have not caught up with France.

Mr. Bell: I shall come to the figures in a moment, and I will refer to the intervention of the Chief Secretary in the debate on Monday and to his own statements.

We welcome the work being done by the agencies and want to build on it. It is important to mention local authorities, whose role we often denigrate. In attracting inward investment, they have played a significant part.

Two weeks ago I had the opportunity of visiting Nissan, where I saw the vast strides that have been made in technology and in the ethic of the work force. In the 1960s I visited Longbridge as a young lawyer, hopefully coming up. When I asked to walk round the assembly plant, management suggested that I should walk quickly and purposefully. When I asked why, I was told that the work force might think that I was a time and motion man and the company might have a strike on its hands. I should point out that under a Labour Government—under Michael Edwards—we came to terms with the problems at Longbridge. Today it is one of the finest companies in the land and turns out a fine product.

At Nissan I saw skills, co-ordination—men and machines coming together, and robots too. The robots play a significant part and, I am happy to say, all have their union card. A new car is being produced. The plant employs 5,500 people and creates more jobs through dealerships and plant suppliers. It designs, manufactures, markets and sells its cars in the United Kingdom. It is a worldwide company with a strong European base.

Nissan Sunderland works closely with other Nissan installations in Europe—a test track and a plant in Barcelona, a new Nissan Design Europe styling centre in Munich and testing facilities in Belgium. Those are all within the European Union and the single market, showing that a global company operating within a global economy can use Europe as a home-from-home base.

Mr. MacShane: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the great worries for inward investors is the growing tide of voices in the Conservative party calling for a withdrawal from Europe or a semi-detached status? It is deeply alarming that the Cabinet is giving no lead in making it clear that Britain's future lies in playing a full part in Europe.

Mr. Bell: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's intervention. One of the worrying aspects of the debate on a single currency is the way in which it is being converted into a debate about whether we should be in the European Union. In the White Paper the Government make it clear that being part of a single market is entirely different from being part of a free trade area. The single market, with its powers of enforcement, is a much more significant concept for our trade than being part of a free market. I fear that the question whether we stay in Europe will become a major issue as the debate progresses.

Mr. Butterfill: I remind the hon. Gentleman that a Conservative Government initiative created the single market. We recognise absolutely the vital role that it plays in our national interest.

Mr. Bell: On television this morning I saw at least one Conservative Member recommending our departure from the European Union. As she is not in the Chamber, I shall not mention her name—but perhaps I have assisted the House by referring to her gender. A Conservative Government signed the Single European Act 1986, but we are now witnessing a change in attitude.

[Mr. Bell]

There were some interesting omissions from the speech by the President of the Board of Trade. He did not refer once to the social chapter—that was quite remarkable—and the White Paper mentioned it only fleetingly.

Mr. Gill: Before the hon. Gentleman turns to the social chapter, does he recognise that the most important consideration for industry in this country is whether we can continue to import the necessary raw materials and convert them into products that we can sell at home or in export markets at a profit? So long as we continue to do that—we have managed it in the past few years with floating exchange rates, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State pointed out—why on earth should we adopt fixed exchange rates? It might not be possible to import the necessary raw materials at competitive rates and convert them into products within the straitjacket of fixed exchange rates.

Mr. Bell: The hon. Gentleman raises two issues. First, he mentions a pertinent fact in relation to trade: most trade is in component parts—they are flying all around the world—which are converted into finished products. Secondly, he points out correctly that we do not require a single currency in order to be part of a trading area, as the north American free trade agreement proves. A single currency is not a prerequisite of a free market, but great benefits may be derived from price stability and currency credibility. It is an advantage for businesses to be able to plan ahead in an essentially inflation-free economy. Those issues are connected with the single currency. I shall examine that subject more carefully in a moment—Friday morning provides a good opportunity to debate such matters, as we can take our time.

The President of the Board of Trade did not mention the social chapter in his speech. Why? Nobody mentioned the social chapter when I visited Nissan. No one said, "We are very worried about a future Labour Government implementing the social chapter". They were glad to hear that our macro-economic policy would be strong, that we planned to meet our target for low inflation rather than relying on forecasts as the Government do, that we would have sustainable growth and that we are committed to the so-called "golden rule" of public finance—that the level of borrowing should cover only investment over the economic cycle. They were more concerned about the macro-economic framework and stability so that they could get on with business. No one mentioned the social chapter.

Samsung's operations are based in Teesside in my part of the world. I am reminded of the comments of the former President of the Board of Trade who, speaking in Seoul, tried to give the impression that Samsung had located here because we do not have a social chapter. Samsung did not say anything of the kind: it had been here for 10 years—before the social chapter was dreamed of—and it had a strong record of sales success, it was pleased with labour productivity and infrastructure, familiar with the English language and happy with the success of its operations. Samsung is so looking forward to a Labour Government that it has invited my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition to visit its plant to open a training centre.

Mr. Skinner: Before the election at Christmas?

Mr. Bell: My hon. Friend anticipates a Christmas election, but I do not know whether Santa Claus will come down the Prime Minister's chimney on Christmas day. The fact is that Samsung is happy about the prospect of a Labour Government.

I think that all hon. Members agree—it is in the White Paper—that we must improve our education and training skills.

The President of the Board of Trade asked me about trade. Britain is a trading nation—Aneurin Bevan described Britain as an island surrounded by fish and filled with coal. The coal may remain in its anthracite veins, but there are not many coal mines left. When the Government boast of their proud record, they never talk about how they cut a swathe through not only our mining industry but our mining villages. Although my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover and I now represent Her Majesty's Opposition, he began his career in the pit and I began mine in the colliery office. We have a long history in that industry and we understand the way in which the Government's policies have ravaged our mining communities. The President of the Board of Trade did not mention that today.

We accept that we are a trading nation and we embrace our role in that regard. During the debate on Monday, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury intervened on my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South to say that the 1980s was the first of many decades when the United Kingdom maintained its share of world trade. However, my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover pointed out earlier by way of intervention that in the 1980s we also had a trade imbalance in manufactured goods—our manufactured imports exceeded our manufactured exports.

If we look beyond the golden horizon and the Hollywood sunsets that the President of the Board of Trade described, we can see that our share of world trade has steadied. However, the United Kingdom's share of world exports fell from 5.2 per cent. in 1979 to 4.9 per cent. in 1995 and it is projected to fall again to 4.8 per cent. in 1996-97. They are not the Opposition's figures: they are the projections of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

I wish to be fair to both the President of the Board of Trade and the Chief Secretary: they are visible exports and we have a strong account for invisibles. The right hon. Gentleman said that about £25,000 million returns to this country from abroad. As I said earlier, we are fifth among the world's trading nations—we rank behind the United States, Japan, Germany and France. We often look to the French economy and base our arguments upon the inflexibility of its labour market. However, we must not forget France's trading surplus or the fact that, together with Germany, it has the lowest interest rates in Europe and the third lowest long-term interest rates in the world. In his Budget Statement, the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast a rise in export values of more than 7 per cent. this year and 6 per cent. next year. That anticipates an increase in world exports of about 7 per cent. As John Fitzgerald Kennedy said:

"All boats lift on a rising tide."

We may be holding our own but we are not doing anything more than that.

The White Paper makes it clear that free trade and foreign policy combine to make a global vision. It was Sir Ronnie Hampel, the chairman of ICI, who said recently that men and women who think global are men and women of vision. A book was written recently by Eniche Oaftiah—I have the right spelling, so Hansard need not worry about that—called "The End of the Nation State", meaning that we live in a global village and a global economy. The concept of global trading within a global economy has meant, for example, that the United States, and we as part of the same business cycle, have enjoyed a prolonged period of sustained growth.

The President of the Board of Trade talked of how we have been catching up on the French since 1981. It is not necessarily the case that that is happening but it is a case of business cycles. We are linked into the American cycle and the French are locked into the European cycle. There are cycles and movements in these areas. We are behind the French in world trade, and the French are pushing hard, as they often do. I agree entirely with the President that we should continue to push as well.

If we link global vision with our foreign policy, it is clear that there has always been a political dimension to our trade with Europe. The European Union is now the largest marketplace in the world. Its share of world trade is greater than that of the United States and even of Japan. The more that we trade with one another—the more that we take in one another's washing—the more successful we are likely to be, and the more we are likely to work together throughout Europe rather than to find ourselves in the conflicts of the past on the so-called vieux continent.

We are saying that trade is a successful instrument of policy, serving the national interest and adding to the well-being of people throughout Europe so that we can reach the end of the century and face the next millennium looking outwards towards Europe and a trading bloc in which we play a major role. The single market consists of 370 million people with 16 million enterprises.

The President of the Board of Trade uses his own soundbite in referring to the enterprise centre of Europe. I think that it was the former President, who is now the Deputy Prime Minister, the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), who invented that phrase. It did not come from Saatchi and Saatchi. But we must be not merely an enterprise centre, we must be at the heart of Europe. That is something that the Prime Minister says sometimes when he feels in a pro-European mood, but ignores on other occasions.

We are saying that we must be genuinely at the heart of Europe. It is a major trading post for us that should be enhanced to increase economic growth and employment prospects, and higher levels of prosperity for our citizens. It is significant that the United Kingdom will have the presidency of the Union in the first half of 1998. I am glad that the hon. Member for Ludlow is with us, because I shall take up the point that he made on the single currency. The hon. Member for Beaconsfield made the same point.

Britain's presidency of the Union from 1 January 1998 to 30 June will be an historic one. There is no doubt that the EU will decide at that time how it proposes to go forward to its single currency, who has met the convergence criteria and who will be on the first Euro train. The significant fact for us all to remember is that the date of 1 January 1999 for a single currency is written into the Maastricht treaty. The treaty does not state that a single currency can come about on 2 January; it makes it clear that it must come about on 1 January. That does not necessarily mean that the United Kingdom must be a part of it. If a single currency does not come about on that date, the entire treaty will have to be amended and all member states will have to ratify the amendments.

It is rather significant that we have not heard a great deal from the President of the Board of Trade about the completion of the single market, which is one of the major issues for us. The single market should be properly completed, and we should make that an aim for us in the presidency from 1 January 1998. We want to say, "Yes, the single market exists, and yes, it should be completed." I welcome the White Paper and the "action single market" and "trade barriers" initiatives, whereby we shall try in our own way to complete the single market by overcoming trade barriers and other difficulties.

There are many areas where the single market is not complete—for example, gas, telecommunications, information technology, biotechnology, public procurement, insurance and financial services. Many directives have been adopted within the single market programme which are not being properly enforced. Some have not been transposed into national law within member states. That is not to say that progress has not been made, if I may use a double negative.

By the end of 1995, 93.2 per cent. of the required national measures had been adopted by member states. We do not underestimate the task of completing the single market and we perceive the identification of problems as one way forward. We have described the problems and we can define them as follows: the persistence of technical barriers to trade; serious gaps in the transposition of directives; over-bureaucratic application within member states of approved directives; failure of the European Council to agree on enabling directives; the need to strengthen competition policy. These are all major matters and no doubt the Government will seek to do something about them through the intergovernmental conference, and I hope will support the Commission's call that the Dublin summit of the heads of state should renew their commitment to the single market and their commitment to complete it as early as possible.

The White Paper is entitled "Free Trade and Foreign Policy: a Global Vision". I read the call for a world of free and open markets by 2002, with international stability based on economic prosperity. I should have said 2020. I accept that 2020 vision is probably a better way of describing the next millennium and the Government's aims, which include international stability based on economic prosperity, improved living standards for all through increased trade and investment and a leading role for the United Kingdom as the champion of free trade.

I was reminded of a Labour party pamphlet that we turned out in the early 1980s in which we called for jobs, peace and freedom. At the time, The Guardian commented that that was a great deal better than unemployment, war and slavery. There is something in that. The Government's list of objectives sounds very good and reads well, but there is not much substance behind it. When we read 2020 together, one Tory cynic said, "That may be the first year of a future Conservative Government since 1997, and it may be the year of the first Budget of a Conservative Chancellor." We all say amen to that.

The President has referred to the closer co-ordination of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of Trade and Industry, which is to be welcomed. I have mentioned our support for the Invest in Britain bureau. An entire programme of work is required, however, and the President touched upon it slightly today, but kept returning to his 2020 vision.

We must ensure that there is a free flow of trade and investment through the World Trade Organisation, the single market and the enlargement of the single market, about which we have not heard much this morning, to the east of Europe, with all the problems that that will bring in terms of agriculture policy, for example. It will also bring problems for our pharmaceutical industry—I mentioned Merck Sharpe and Dohme earlier, which will face serious problems with parallel imports from countries that do not have patent protection.

There is also the impact of the single currency. The Government have not set out in the White Paper—nor has the President today—what studies have been made on the impact of the single currency on inward investment. What is its impact likely to be on our trade? The White Paper tells us that 58 per cent. of our manufactured goods trade is within the single market and that 37 per cent. of our financial services are traded with that market. What will be the impact on that trade as a consequence of the single market turning to a single currency? What will be the impact if we do not join the single currency? That point was made by the hon. Member for Ludlow.

Those studies have not been made. If they have, we have not heard about them. It would be nice to know that the Department of Trade and Industry was examining these issues, forming a view and assessing where our trade would be whether we were in the European single currency or out of it. I look forward in the months ahead to debating and clarifying how it would or would not impact on our trade, and the course that we should take in relation to the economy. No doubt the political decisions will be based on other criteria.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane), who follows these debates, was a little ungracious in suggesting that the President of the Board of Trade was going off with officials to a warmer climate in his visit to Singapore. My recollection of the far east is that it is dangerous to stay out in the sun, so I am sure that the President will not spend much time in it while there. In his White Paper, he calls for a new round of comprehensive, multilateral negotiations to produce results for implementation by 2010. The likelihood of yet another Uruguay round, before the last one is properly concluded in all its finery, is ambitious. The unfinished business of the Uruguay round covers various service negotiations, the report of the Committee on trade and the environment, and information technology.

A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step, in the words of Mao Tse Tung; the journey towards free trade began in Uruguay in 1986, but it did not end in Marrakesh in 1994. I am sure that the Minister who will reply will be patient and listen to our views on the WTO. In their White Paper, the Government acknowledged that work is required, but it is always a risky business to make one major venture dependent on the completion of another. Thus to complete the Uruguay round in itself may be sufficient by way of ambition rather than launching of a new Uruguay round to be completed by 2010.

" . . . a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
Or What's a heaven for?"

Mr. MacShane indicated assent.

Mr. Bell: My hon. Friend nods his head, for which I am grateful. Usually when I quote Karl Marx, Mao Tse Tung or, in this case, Browning, he corrects me, so on this occasion I must be right.

Signing up to a new comprehensive round of multilateral negotiations with so much unfinished business in the world of trade and commerce is more likely to ensure that the unfinished business stays as it is—unfinished.

The Government always like to look for clear blue water between us, but on the single currency they are very worried that, having agreed to a referendum, there is no clear blue water. Conservative Back Benchers are desperately trying to persuade the Government that a decision should be taken to rule out a single currency in the lifetime of a new Parliament under a possible but fictitious Conservative Government. But there is clear blue water between us on social rights and a proper social clause in the international community in the WTO. The President said, when asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham, that the WTO was a trading organisation, not a social body. But that is not the view taken by the United States Government, the French Government, or many of our members.

The President said today, as did the Minister for Trade the other day, that there was some harmony and unity in the European Union on this issue. That is not the case as I see it. Perhaps the President will correct me. I understand that there will be a Council of Ministers meeting in Singapore to discuss these issues, and the position will then be taken on 10 December at a special meeting of the Council of Ministers, which will consider the European Union's negotiating position.

It is our view—we state it very clearly here—that world trade cannot be built on the back of human rights. It cannot be built on the back of forced labour. It cannot be built on the back of exploitative child labour. There has to be a right to organise in countries that wish to trade and export, and a right to bargain collectively. We believe that those elementary human rights and trade liberalisation are not—to use a lawyer's phrase—mutually exclusive.

I repeat that the majority of our European partners agree that the Singapore ministerial conference should examine how the WTO may be used to promote core labour standards. On this issue in Europe, as on other issues, we are becoming increasingly isolated within the Union by opposing any attempt to link trade policy with labour standards and by resisting any meaningful discussion of this issue in Singapore. Therefore we urge, even at this stage, the Government to accept the principle of a working party within the WTO to examine these issues.

I end as I began, with a reference to the chaos theory of politics and how it runs up and down the Conservative Benches like mice scampering up and down the Benches opposite. The same mice must awaken Ministers of the Crown in the night. It will be a relief, no doubt, for the President of the Board of Trade to fly off to Singapore for the beginning of the WTO conference.

Mr. MacShane: He can have lunch with journalists first.

Mr. Bell: My hon. Friend, from a sedentary position, talks about a lunch with journalists. The essence of parliamentary democracy is to stay thin, stay on a diet and stay away from lunches with journalists.

No doubt the President will enjoy his flight. I wish him well on behalf of our country as he goes to negotiate the first ministerial conference of the WTO, which will be an historic event. He will represent our interests as best he can in the twilight zone that exists between the Government in situ and the Government in waiting.

11.6 am

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): I shall have to rather disappoint the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell). Although I am aware that nothing emanates from the Opposition without being approved by the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) and the Labour spin doctors, I shall not quote from a central office brief today. In fact, I have not even read that brief. My speech relates entirely to my own research and statistics provided to me by the House of Commons Library.

It is right that we should dwell on inward investment, not because it is the only worthwhile form of investment, but because the extent to which foreign investors are prepared to invest in our economy is very much a reflection of their confidence in the way in which it is being run. It is very telling to remember what the position was when we took over government in 1979. At that time, inward investment was a mere £2.9 billion a year. Under the Conservative Government, it peaked in 1989-90 at £17 billion, although, of course, it fell off during the world recession. Despite that recession it continued at around £10 billion a year throughout 1991-94. Last year, it had grown back to £14 billion a year. That is an amazing reflection of the confidence that overseas investors have in the economy as run by my right hon. Friend and his colleagues.

I pay tribute to the invest in Britain initiative, but in particular to the ways in which that initiative has been developed under the Government and the much closer links that now exist between our initiatives and the activities of not just the DTI but the Foreign and Commonwealth office. They are essential if we are to maintain our export progress and our success in encouraging inward investment.

Inward investment has been helped by regional assistance. The fact that grants are available for those who want to invest in this country undoubtedly plays a part. It is interesting to note that the level of regional assistance that we are able to give under EC rules is much lower than many other EC countries are able to give. Despite that, we continue to attract a disproportionate amount of overseas investment.

In 1995-96—which is the last year for which figures are available—regional assistance was only £159 million, but that attracted projects worth £2.69 billion. The reward that we receive for the limited amount of assistance that we can give is out of all proportion to the performance of our European competitor countries.

Last year, our share of total world inward investment was 9.5 per cent. Between 1984 and 1993, the United Kingdom gained 43 per cent. of all world direct investment in the European Union. By contrast, Germany received 3 per cent., France received 15 per cent., the Netherlands 9 per cent. and Spain 9 per cent. Our share of inward investment into the European Union is so much greater than that of other countries that it gives us enormous hope for the future of our economy, provided that we maintain the policies that have managed to attract that level of investment.

This country is attractive for various reasons. It is attractive for people to live in, and the English language is an important factor. Financial assistance and the financial expertise that is available in the City of London are important factors. Our labour skills are particularly important: we are developing a better trained and better educated work force than hitherto. A third of our young people now go on to higher education compared with one in eight when the Labour party was last in office. The single market is an important factor. Our unit labour costs give us a great advantage. That does not mean low wages. It means that we do not impose on employers the burdens that exist elsewhere, as a result of which—according to the Library—our unit labour costs are less than half those in Germany, and less than two thirds those in Japan.

Our net earnings from inward investment—not the capital—have risen under the Government from £3.99 billion a year in 1979 to nearly £12 billion in 1995. The United Kingdom economy has benefited enormously. A great deal of that would be thrown away if the Labour party's policies were adopted. If we took up the social chapter—as Labour would like to do—we would have the same constraints as they have in other European Union countries. Instead of 43 per cent. of inward investment, we could go down to Germany's figure of 3 per cent. That is why it is essential to maintain our policy of remaining outside the social chapter, and that a Conservative Government are re-elected at the next general election.

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I welcome the debate on this extremely important subject. It is an important time to be looking at the problems facing all western economies because of increasing globalisation. I welcome the fact that the President of the Board of Trade and the Government have seen fit to introduce the debate, especially as he is going to Singapore. The Singapore meeting is extremely important, and much valuable work will be done there. The hon. Members for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) and for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) were obviously angling for postcards from the Secretary of State while he is there. I would settle for a statement in the House after he comes back telling us what progress has been made.

The hon. Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) made a statistically based speech. I cannot find fault with the statistics that he used. I, too, have taken advantage of the work that has been undertaken by the Library. I think that some of his conclusions are a bit iffy, but the statistics that he used are beyond reproach.

As the hon. Gentleman said, inward investment in the past 10 years peaked in 1989-90, and it has fluctuated since. It must be recognised that it has increased recently.

[Mr. Archy Kirkwood]

We will receive more accurate figures for 1995 on 17 December, but the provisional figures make it clear to my satisfaction that direct inward investment will increase to about £14 billion, and outward investment is also likely to increase sharply in 1995 to £27 billion. I welcome that. It is partially the result of work done by the Department of Trade and Industry, Locate in Scotland and the Invest in Britain Bureau. I have no hesitation or compunction in recognising that openly—long may it continue.

I want to ask about the circumstances that we may face in the future, and to be reassured that the DTI, working with Locate in Scotland and the Invest in Britain Bureau, is carefully monitoring the effect of inward and outward flows of investment on our manufacturing base. I have anecdotal evidence that much of this incoming investment is going in directions that do not assist manufacturing industry.

There were previously some concerns that companies were merely building assembly units in this country. An article in The Economist said that there was now evidence that research and development was beginning to flow more systematically than in the past, so some of the fears may be out of date. I would be reassured if the Department were carefully monitoring the effect of the investment. It is not only the value of the money coming in that is important, but the productive use to which it is put. I am concerned that we should develop our manufacturing base to make good some of the shortfalls that, I would argue, we have had in our manufacturing sector in the recent past.

I hope that the Minister will tell us—if not now, perhaps in correspondence later—what work, if any, is being done to assess the impact of inward and outward flows of investment on the important manufacturing sector. I refer to outward flows and the manufacturing sector, because I have evidence from world-class companies, such as the knitwear manufacturers Pringle of Scotland in my constituency, which are at the highest end of the market. There is an enormous temptation for companies such as Dawson International, Pringle of Scotland, Ballantyne and other well-known international names in knitwear to outsource their manufacturing. I hope that the DTI will not be complacent, will watch what is happening and will do everything in its power to keep the manufacturing base, as much as is possible, within the shores of the United Kingdom.

Inevitably, commercial and competitive pressures may require some companies to look to low-cost countries to outsource manufacturing. That has a debilitating effect and in the long run, between now and 2020, it could be worrying. The least that the DTI could do is to monitor that, look at what can be done and offer assistance within the competitive rules of the European Union.

The Library briefing mentions a useful 1991 survey by the Invest in Britain Bureau. It surveyed 200 manufacturing and research and development companies that had invested in the United Kingdom and asked them to state their main reasons for doing that. The situation may have changed since 1991 because, like everything else in this modern world, the processes of trade and industry change exponentially. The pace of change is frightening.

I should like to have the answers obtained in the 1991 survey refreshed. At that time, 45 per cent., nearly half the companies surveyed, mentioned the need for a UK presence. Some 29 per cent. mentioned the need for a European base; and 25 per cent. maintained that their market in the UK warranted local manufacture. It is important to me to know whether that 25 per cent. in particular has been sustained or whether it is dropping. Other reasons quoted in the survey included the English language, which was mentioned by 16 per cent. of the companies. The hon. Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) mentioned that. Some 14 per cent. mentioned financial assistance; labour skills were quoted by 10 per cent. and 10 per cent. mentioned the European single market. Finally and perhaps significantly, 6 per cent. mentioned labour costs.

The thesis by the President of the Board of Trade, supported by the hon. Member for Bournemouth, West, is that labour costs and whether we are in or out of the social chapter are crucial to inward investment. But that is not supported by the 1991 survey. It will be useful to the House in terms of studying the global market and its development and inward investment and how it is affecting manufacturing, to have such a survey regularly. It would be sensible to consider revisiting these questions once every five or six years. I do not know whether it is in the Minister's powers to direct that.

I have some thoughts for the President of the Board of Trade and his entourage as they wing eastward on Singapore Airlines, or on whatever airline they are using this afternoon. The Uruguay round was difficult. It took an inordinate time to put together an agreement, but we must not forget that there is still some unfinished business in the agreements that were struck there. Perhaps the Minister will address one or two—just one or two—of the agreements and commitments.

First, does the evidence show that there have been further significant tariff reductions since the Uruguay round? We are about halfway through the round and it would be useful to see the evidence of success in achieving tariff reductions because that is important to our exporters. Secondly, has there been significant progress on getting dispute settlement mechanisms properly organised? Have they protected our domestic industry from dumping, anti-competitive practices and the other actions that occurred all too often before the agreement? Thirdly, has there been a further tightening of disciplines on unilateral protection? That is important, as is the commitment to set up a wide-ranging framework for reviewing the agreements and further negotiations in the Uruguay round.

It is necessary to know the Government's view. I know that they have to negotiate through the EU in the ministerial meeting, but what information or evidence will the UK delegation at Singapore present in these important areas? That is crucial to the knitwear industry which struggled to achieve the multi-fibre arrangement. My constituents are interested in that because China is the monopoly supplier of cashmere yarn—the essential raw material from which the knitwear industry in my constituency makes high value-added exports for world markets.

Former state trading nations such as China give all sorts of support, hidden and explicit, to the producers of cashmere and to their manufacturing industries, and in that context it is essential that the multi-fibre arrangement is adhered to, monitored and reinforced. At the time of the negotiations the knitwear industry asked for review periods to be built into the Uruguay round as it progressed to make sure that monitoring was being successfully undertaken so that dumping and other such anti-competitive practices could be stamped out.

The Singapore meeting is important in terms of issues other than merely checking how far the Uruguay round commitments have progressed. I was slightly concerned by the emphasis in the White Paper, which was reinforced by the President of the Board of Trade, on the Government's rather unfettered free market, laissez faire approach. That approach is no secret: it is one of the Government's unique selling points. However, I take a slightly different view.

I am concerned that in the globalisation of the world economy—it is a horrible term but I cannot think of a better one—there are few checks and balances and no proper regulation. I do not mean regulation that imposes burdens because I am in favour of competitiveness and free trade, but some matters have to be carefully watched.

The President of the Board of Trade mentioned environmental factors. Global economic sustainable development is essential and I hope that the considerations in Singapore will include that and will try to make sure that the increase in competition and trade will not be at the expense of the environment. Sustainability should be built into the plans that are formulated in Singapore. I am worried that the third world will be frozen out of a fair share of what trade is going. There is evidence that some African economies have been badly served in the past few years. I hope that Ministers in Singapore will examine that.

Mr. Tim Smith: The hon. Gentleman mentioned the third world and especially African countries. Has he seen the three-dimensional chart on page 18 of the White Paper showing the clear relationship between the trade orientation of different countries and growth in living standards? Is it not important that those countries should be outward looking and not protectionist because that would enable them to benefit from growth in world trade?

Mr. Kirkwood: Of course I accept that, and I hope that I did not give the impression of suggesting anything different. Some of the International Monetary Fund and World bank constraints aimed at making such economies more efficient have had a harsh impact on their economies and their primary producing industries. Some evidence suggests that, financially, they are suffering severely. The Government have been taking the lead on some of those issues and I welcome that. Debt reduction for some African countries would help their economies through the transitional process of becoming more efficient and I am in favour of that.

There is real concern about the extent to which counterfeit labels are being put on such items as textile jerseys, although the problem is not limited to the textile industry. If they do their work properly, that problem can be dealt with in Singapore.

I should like to mention briefly the domestic trade situation and the need to assist local UK manufacturers to compete in the world marketplace. I get a bit nervous about the situation, because I wonder to what extent some of our small and medium-sized businesses are being squeezed out of that marketplace by the volume of inward investment. That is why I said that the DTI should examine carefully the effect of inward investment flows on our manufacturing sector. I hope that the DTI will give proper consideration to small and medium-sized businesses.

Coming from my part of south-east Scotland, I am particularly interested in the knitwear, textile and electronics industries, which are potentially not only European-level but world-class export players—but only if they receive increased support in marketing, training and modernising. The textile industry also requires more assistance in diversifying. I hope that the DTI will not spend all its time on big projects—which I have already acknowledged that I welcome—at the expense of smaller and medium-sized businesses.

The textile industry will have to slim down its labour force if it is to survive. Communities such as Hawick, which is in my constituency, are almost entirely dependent on the textile industry. In the travel-to-work area around Hawick, for example, it accounts for 80 per cent. of manufacturing employment. The industry requires help in modernising, additional capital input, more flexible work patterns and help with marketing initiatives. It needs some assistance to help it bridge the gap into the next century, so that it can compete effectively.

I shall understand if the Minister, in the time available to him, cannot deal with all the points that have been raised, but he might arrange to reply by correspondence. The Industrial Development Act 1992 allows for occasional reviews of regional assistance areas, and the decision on which areas are eligible for assistance and when reviews are undertaken is within ministerial gift. I know that the Department is considering the boundaries of individual travel-to-work areas, and that a new regional assistance map cannot be produced until the boundaries have been determined. Will the Minister tell us when that work will be completed, and when the Government—irrespective of who is in government—will be able to reconsider eligibility?

In south-east Scotland, travel-to-work areas are excluded from any regional assistance, basically because the headline unemployment levels are not sufficiently high. The current method of collecting unemployment statistics in sparsely populated areas is unsatisfactory, because of dodgy statistical methods in assessing employment levels. Other criteria should be examined when a review of regional selective assistance is conducted. I should like to persuade the Government that low GDP per head—in addition to population sparsity, size of the cohort over retirement age and lack of job opportunities—should be a significant factor in determining eligibility for assistance. Rural areas generally, and not only my own area, are concerned that regional development assistance is failing them and not providing any type of support.

Locate in Scotland has been very successful in bringing Chunghwa to north Lanarkshire. I certainly concede that that community faced substantial problems after the closure of Ravenscraig and other events, and that those problems had to be dealt with. However, they should not have been dealt with exclusively and at the expense of rural areas.

There is a suspicion—I put it no higher—that the provision of assistance through the big investment decisions that are necessary to bring in companies such as

Chunghwa will mean that the limited resources available to local authorities and local enterprise companies north of the border, although it is not a problem only there, will be siphoned off and diverted, and that other areas must pay the price. However much the assistance is needed in north Lanarkshire, it is needed elsewhere, too. The Government should be very careful to ensure that others are not losing out from some of their big headline successes.

There should be better co-ordination of the help provided by the European Union in social and development fund programmes. My region has access to objective 5b funding, which is of some help. However, there is concern that there will be no more funds after the programme ends, in 1999. That is a real worry, because we have been able to make use of the European regional assistance. It will be difficult for areas such as mine to prosper if we lose that assistance and continue to have difficulty in obtaining access to regional development assistance.

Mr. Gill: Is not there something slightly inconsistent or contradictory about the hon. Gentleman's remarks? Initially in his speech, he said that he was an advocate of free trade, but he has spent five or 10 minutes with the begging bowl out, saying to Government, "Please, can we have more assistance on this, that and the other?" Does not he realise that it is much more effective in any economy to keep taxes low and to leave people with more of their own money to invest? He is advocating more public expenditure—meaning higher taxes, and successful companies having to pay higher corporation tax—which prejudices their investment plans. Does he realise that the Government want to go in the other direction, reducing taxes and leaving money in investor's pockets—so that they can do the investing, rather than allowing him and other politicians to make those decisions?

Mr. Kirkwood: I am merely arguing for—although I hate the phrase—a level playing field. The Government believe in a free, laissez-faire, devil-take-the-hindmost market. I do not support that. I am in favour of competition and free trade, but there must be some market regulation. In my area, the local authority and local enterprise companies are working hard to try to attract inward investment, but we find ourselves with one arm tied behind our back. Other areas have access to assistance. The assistance may be a small amount of overall public expenditure, but it is a vast amount of money compared with the size of the economy in south-east Scotland.

I do not mind which way it goes. It would be fine if we abolish, or if we keep, regional assistance—but it should be more evenly distributed. I am arguing, as best I can—and I hope coherently—that it should be distributed more fairly.

So far as I can see, there are three main needs. I am speaking of them in relation to my constituency because it is the area that I know best, but they have to be borne in mind in rural areas the length and breadth of the United Kingdom. First, we need regional selective assistance to enable small and medium-sized companies in rural parts of Great Britain and the United Kingdom to invest, acquire funding and benefit from technology transfer so that they can properly stimulate productivity and process development. Secondly, we need to invest more in people.

Thirdly, we need investment in integrated rural initiatives. If I could see evidence that the DTI or the Industry Department in Scotland were pursing that aim with as much fervour as they are pursuing bigger, headline projects such as gaining investment from Chunghwa and Taiwan and China, I would be much happier. If such evidence exists and I am missing it, I would be delighted to hear about it either this morning or later, in writing, when the DTI has had a chance to reflect on these issues.

I hope that the Invest in Britain Bureau and Locate in Scotland will consider carefully what can be done to support the electronics industry throughout the United Kingdom. I should like the DTI and their colleagues with responsibility for industry at the Scottish Office to examine the possibility of ensuring the spread of high bandwidth communications in rural areas. Of course, it is now possible to use radio and satellite links and land line cables, but we need some basic infrastructure investment. The Government should be stimulating and promoting such investment to develop an information society in industry in rural areas so that our businesses can compete properly on the global stage.

We need modest extra public expenditure to be made available through regional development assistance. We need to provide local authorities and local enterprise companies with better resources and more flexibility so that they can help their own local economies. We also need to integrate the grants that are available from the EU, which are, if anything, likely to become scarcer in the immediate future. That is a cause of some concern.

The textile and electronics industries in my constituency are potentially world-beating industries in the export market. They are often small and medium-sized businesses located in rural settings and are, as a result, currently being overlooked for the investment that they need to prosper. The Government need to consider such issues as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): I am delighted to have the opportunity to participate in this timely debate—as we heard earlier, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is leaving this very day for Singapore and the World Trade Organisation summit.

Like other hon. Members, I was amused by the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) brandishing the Conservative research department's brief on trade and inward investment. Such briefs from both main parties have an alarming habit of getting into the public domain. I hope that, instead of simply brandishing the document at the Dispatch Box, the hon. Gentleman will have the opportunity to read it, as he clearly has not done so. Had he read the document, his speech would have reflected some of the pearls of wisdom embedded in it. Perhaps on his way back to Middlesbrough he will manage to read it.

I have been glancing through the document and have to say that it is excellent. No Conservative Member should feel at all abashed about reiterating some of the points, statistics and quotations to be found in it. It sets out the Government's success in the sphere of trade and inward investment. Before I move on, I should like to spare a thought and some sympathy for the poor Labour researcher who might have sat down earlier this week, looking at an empty computer screen with the unenviable task of drafting the Labour party's brief for this debate. Sadly, that document has not found its way into my hands—perhaps it never appeared at all. In any event, I have great sympathy for the Labour researcher faced with that Herculean task.

We are debating a great British success story—trade and inward investment. Britain is nothing if not a trading nation. That has been true throughout our history. We are the fifth largest importer and exporter of goods and services in the entire world. Especially under the Conservative Government, Britain has been firmly committed to free trade. The aim is global free trade by 2020. The WTO summit in Singapore will be an opportunity to give the process a welcome boost. We wish my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State all the very best and every success in his endeavours in Singapore.

British industry and British business have proved time and again that, given a clear run and less interference from Government, they can compete with anyone anywhere in the world. Much of today's debate has rightly turned on the fact that a Labour Government would fetter and obstruct the ability of our business men and women to compete in world markets.

On inward investment, I want to read out one quotation that sums up our position. It is from Kumar Bhattacharyya—I hope that I am pronouncing his name correctly and do it justice—who is professor of manufacturing systems at Warwick university. [Interruption.] I hope that hon. Members will listen because it is a quotation from a dispassionate academic commentator on Britain's economic success. In what is colourful language for an academic, he says:

"Britain is becoming Europe's Pacific Rim. The industrial-relations framework, the cultural and linguistic environment, economic deregulation, and political stability have changed the face of British manufacturing".

Mr. MacShane: Would the hon. Gentleman cite the present Conservative party as an example of political stability?

Mr. Waterson: I assure the hon. Gentleman that I expect this party to be in power not only after the next election, but in 2020, so that we can usher in the millennium of global free trade, which, I am sure, we all heartily desire. I may not be here to see it with him—although Sir Charles Taylor, one of my esteemed predecessors, represented Eastbourne for 39 years, I do not expect to serve quite so long. By 2020 a successor will possibly have taken my place but will, I hope, be making a similar speech from the Government Benches.

I shall reiterate one or two of the statistics mentioned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Britain attracts one third of all inward investment in the European Union and more than 50 per cent. of Korean and Taiwanese investment. Those statistics deserve repetition—

Mrs. Barbara Roche (Hornsey and Wood Green): They certainly do.

Mr. Waterson: Let us consider some recent inward investment successes. We have already heard some of them and far more of them than I would be permitted to recite now are set out in the brief. We have heard about the LG Newport project, which will create 6,100 jobs as a result of £1.7 billion investment. That is amazing investment in the production of semiconductors. The Jaguar project at Castle Bromwich will create up to 1,300 new jobs. We have already heard about Honda in Swindon, where £330 million has been invested in a car plant—[Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. Members making sedentary comments, which, as I have already made known, I deplore, may find it rather difficult to catch my eye when they want to make a speech.

Mr. Tim Smith: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. As reference has been made to the excellent document on trade and inward investment, published by the Conservative research department, would it be possible, for the benefit of hon. Members who are not present, to have the entire text printed in Hansard as an appendix to the debate?

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman well knows that that is not a point of order. Nor can it be carried out.

Mr. Waterson: I endorse the sentiments of my hon. Friend's remarks. It would certainly be of enormous assistance if in future such briefs were made available not only to my hon. Friends but to Opposition Members. If the Opposition have a brief at all, it is clearly a pretty inadequate document.

I was referring to Honda, and I should like to cite one final example. IBM in Winchester is expecting to create 1,200 new jobs. Such developments are exciting. I notice that when those announcements are made, Opposition Members are very quick to go on the media to take their share of the glory for such successes. That seems particularly hypocritical when one considers what effects their policies would have on such trade and inward investment were they ever to have any control over the running of it.

The effect that a national minimum wage would have on hotels and the tourism industry is a particular concern in my constituency. We have already heard a great deal about the reasons why business men from the far east, France and elsewhere are deciding to move manufacturing and other operations to the United Kingdom. The Opposition are rightly defensive on the subject. They are certainly very unwilling to give us a firm commitment on a figure for a national minimum wage.

The crucial point about the social chapter, which is often misrepresented by Opposition Members, is that decisions can be made to extend its effect by qualified majority voting. That is extremely important, especially to business men who might be considering inward investment in this country.

One of the issues that the right hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) has raised in recent speeches is what he calls the European social model. It appears to mean intervention, but we might hear a little more about what it means in the winding-up speech of the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche). It seems to mean interference in the freedom of companies to operate in this country and elsewhere and the introduction of that social dimension into the WTO, for example, as the hon. Member for Middlesbrough clearly spelled out earlier—all credit to him for doing so.

Opposition Members do not seem to realise that precisely such burdens add non-wage costs to the costs of employing people in places such as Germany and elsewhere, and are forcing companies to relocate across national borders. At the moment, we are a major beneficiary of that process, precisely because we reject the social chapter and such interference. That is rightly why the Government take such a strong line on the working time directive.

The conclusion of the White Paper, "Free Trade and Foreign Policy: a Global Vision", under the heading "Raising the United Kingdom's Game", describes how competitiveness depends on many factors. To pick just one, the document's penultimate paragraph says:

"education, learning and the right skills are a key part of the process."

I think that hon. Members on both sides of the House will agree with that. The White Paper continues:

"Government and business share a responsibility with individuals to ensure that education and training equal the best anywhere."

Anyone who has been to places such as Singapore will know of the extremely impressive level of training and education that applies in the far east.

Only the other day, I was privileged to be present in my constituency at the launching of the Bell project. It is a partnership for lifelong learning between Bishop Bell school, Langney county primary school and Eastbourne college of arts and technology. Working with local business, they will provide a seamless educational experience almost from cradle to grave for people in my constituency. Such a process is extremely important and I shall be writing to my colleagues in the Department for Education and Employment about it. It encourages the skills and education that will make this country at least as competitive in the future as it is now.

I refer now to how inward investment affects my constituency. Contrary to popular belief, Eastbourne has a thriving light industrial and service industry sector. We are constantly looking to attract new companies, whether from abroad or otherwise. There are some major world-beating companies in my constituency—Anglo-Dutch Meats, Nobo, Goldwell and Edwards High Vacuum, to name but a few. The latter in particular is very successful at exporting to Japan. I know that those companies are all looking for a lead from the Government and the sort of encouragement that we heard from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and will hear from my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy later.

I should like to make a particular plea on transport infrastructure. It is no good at all having everything else in place—the lack of a social chapter, no minimum wage, and so on—without being able to say to companies that they can easily get raw materials into their plants and get finished products out again. We have a major problem in Sussex with a lack of decent roads. I have raised the matter with my hon. Friends in the Department of Transport and hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will take the point away from this debate.

This debate really concerns whether one is to continue with success, which is encouraged and supported by the Government, who are firmly and genuinely committed to free trade and do not just pay lip service to it like Opposition Members, or whether one looks to the Labour party, which is obviously committed to introducing new social burdens on employers, which would increase unemployment and undermine competitiveness. At the end of the day, it is a matter of new Labour, new burdens on business.

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): I enjoyed listening to the speech of the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson), especially his animadversions on the minimum wage. It struck me that the United States, which enjoys the highest level of inward investment of any major economy, has just raised its statutory minimum wage significantly, to no detriment to its economy. If the hon. Gentleman had been present in the debate on tourism last week, he would have heard hon. Members point out that we have a balance of trade deficit in our tourism industry because British people prefer—it seems—to visit European countries, where the minimum wage ensures that hotel and tourism industry workers are adequately remunerated and other regulation ensures that the level of training and skills is such that employees provide the kind of warm welcome that attracts our people.

This debate is taking place on a cold December morning. I do not know whether the Secretary of State will be able to return to the House or whether he has to jump on a plane to leave for his week in sunny Singapore. My hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) quoted Browning, and there is no doubt that, for the Conservative party and the Government, it will never be "glad confident morning again!" It is all over: I think that this week shows that the game is up. Whether or not we have a general election before Christmas—that would certainly be a Christmas present that the British people would like—it is clear that the Government are now sinking fast.

Mr. Stephen: If the hon. Gentleman's remarks were based on reports of proceedings in the 1922 Committee, I can tell him that I was at that meeting and I do not recognise the newspaper reports as being anything like the truth.

Mr. MacShane: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman, but my analysis was based on being present in the Chamber yesterday afternoon and on Tuesday afternoon. I doubt whether many hon. Members, even those with long experience in the House, can remember a Prime Minister being so utterly weakened, humiliated and destroyed by the anger of the House at his incompetent policies.

We are here to discuss not the death agonies of the Conservative party, but trade. I am glad that the debate has been called, because it allows us to nail some of the myths that we heard in the Secretary of State's opening speech. The right hon. Gentleman referred to our inflation record. We are not first in the inflation league table in Europe, but 11th. The right hon. Gentleman referred to the record of investment in our country. The French, Germans and Japanese invest, on average, £7,000 per worker, whereas United Kingdom companies invest only £4,000 per worker. Private investment—the key to economic growth—has grown by just 6 per cent. since the recession. That is slower than in the mid-1980s and slower than under Labour in the mid-1970s; it is slower, even, than during the recovery of the 1930s.

Reference has been made to productivity, but if we look at the official figures, we see that productivity growth in the United Kingdom is collapsing. The figures for the increase of output per head show that there was 1.3 per cent. growth last year. The monthly data to September 1996 show a negative increase in productivity for nearly every month. Those figures are based on House of Commons Library figures.

The interesting question is: if the economy is doing as well as the President of the Board of Trade said it is, why have investors in this country so little faith in it? Why are they not putting their money where the President of the Board of Trade's mouth is—as it were? This debate will, to quote the Chancellor of the Exchequer, turn into a boomerang that will fall back on the Government.

Much reference has been made to the Conservative central office document—you, Madam Deputy Speaker, correctly but gently rebuked me for quoting from it from a sedentary position. But if we look at page 12 of that document, we see that it is poorly written. It states:

"Labour reject free trade in four of protectionism".

The grammar is wrong and the text is written for illiterates. I can understand why Dr. Julian Lewis, deputy director of research for Conservative central office, has just resigned. I thought it was because he wanted to join the campaign to lead Britain out of Europe, but he is more likely to have resigned because, as a man with a PhD, he is horrified at the shoddy, illiterate standards of writing at Conservative central office. I have found, after long experience, that bad writing often reflects bad thought and bad thought reflects bad ideas. The absence of a coherent set of ideas to guide our country into a happier and richer future has led to the paucity of the Conservative party's policy contributions.

The main reason for the lack of investment in our country is the collapse of manufacturing under this Government. In 1979, manufacturing accounted for 30 per cent. of national output and employed more than 7 million people; by 1995, it had fallen to just 20 per cent. and employed only 4 million people. Industrial production has grown at a slower rate than in 11 other European countries. According to the Budget figures, our trade deficit—particularly in manufacturing goods—will worsen. While other countries are concentrating on achieving a balance of trade surplus, our trade deficit is, according to the Red Book, to rise to £4 billion next year.

It was not 12 years ago that the United Kingdom's balance of trade in manufactured goods went into deficit for the first time since the industrial revolution. The party of Pitt, Peel, Chamberlain, Baldwin, Churchill, Macmillan and Heath, which once ensured that we exported more finished goods than we imported, has turned Britain into a country that has to import finished manufactured goods—not raw materials, as the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) said. Our share of world trade has slumped to its lowest level this century and is now less than the shares of Italy, France, Germany, Japan and the United States.

That might help to answer the question that I ask myself constantly: if we have such a successful economy, why do our own investors have so little confidence in it? I am, of course, delighted at any investment that comes into the UK, but Britain has always been a home to inward investment. In the 1920s, Ford and General Motors came here. Those of us who know west London will be familiar with the great Hoover factory which was opened in the 1930s—perhaps the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) passes it when he drives out along the A40. This nation has for centuries been open to inward investment and long may it continue to be so.

If we look at the figures since 1979, we find that in only one year was there more inward investment than outward investment. I have no problems with British firms and financial institutions investing overseas—it is their duty to search for the best return possible on the money they are charged with investing—but, again, I have to ask why they will not invest in their own country. Since the current Prime Minister entered office, for every pound that has been invested in the UK, between £2 and £3 has been invested outside the UK, producing jobs and creating wealth in other countries. Some of that money—£25 billion—has been repatriated as rents, but that shows that we are becoming a rentier economy, not a productionist one.

Until we create stable conditions and end the roller-coaster ride in inflation, in the value of sterling and in interest rates, we will continue to face that imbalance between inward and outward flow. To do that, we need a new Government—a Government who will reform corporate taxation and ensure that real investment and real money are put into skills training; a Government who are not committed to promoting only the interests of an SW1, EC2, EC3 and EC4 elite; and a Government who will rebalance the economy, so that the regions of Britain, which are wholly unrepresented on the Conservative Front Bench, can play their part in a dynamic and balanced economy.

Let us turn to some of the reasons adduced for inward investment. As I said, I strongly welcome such investment in the UK. I have been to Taiwan to try to encourage Taiwanese companies to invest in Rotherham and, earlier this year, I was pleased to be at the opening festival—a wonderful morning of Chinese firecrackers—for the new Rexon factory in my constituency. Indeed, under the Chinese calendar, this is my year—the year of the rat—and I pointed that out as a good sign for inward investment in Rotherham by all the Chinese economic communities of Asia. This morning, as a rat—in the sense of being born in that year, according to the Chinese calendar—I invite them all to come and join the skilled work force of Rotherham and locate their factories in my constituency.

The question of the minimum wage and the social chapter has nothing to do with the levels of inward investment. In fact, inward investment, in terms of pounds sterling invested in the UK, peaked in 1989, well before the opt-out, social chapter, minimum wage debate started.

The Invest in Britain Bureau conducted a survey of 200 manufacturing, assembly and research and development companies that had invested in the UK. They were asked their reasons for having done so. Twenty-nine per cent. of the organisations attributed their choice to the need for a European base; the other reasons quoted were the English language, financial assistance, the European single market and—lastly—labour costs.

[Mr. MacShane]

The scientific evidence shows that by far the most important reason for inward investment into the UK is the English language. I am convinced that, under a Labour Government, the ability to speak English, which has deteriorated markedly under the Conservatives, will be reinstated as a major educational skill.

The second most important reason for coming to the UK adduced by those companies is that of being in Europe. The tidal wave of demands from the Conservative party—"Withdraw from Europe", "Cut off from Europe", "Detach from Europe", "Have nothing do with the next stage of European construction"—sends a message throughout the world that Britain under the Conservatives, far from being the Pacific rim of Europe, seeks to become the Albania of Europe, detached from the next stage of European construction.

I believe that the Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy is committed to Europe. I am not sure of the position of his boss, the President of the Board of Trade, but until members of the Cabinet who are interested in British prosperity have the guts to stand up for themselves and say clearly, "Britain will be a strong and continuing member of the European Union, playing its full part in the next stages of construction," the British economy will be on hold.

The other pro-European members of the Cabinet cannot leave it up to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I pay tribute to him. He is a political opponent of mine, but at least he has the courage to stand up and be counted on the European question, and he is a rock of Gibraltar in the Cabinet, being harried by political opportunists who want to take Britain out of Europe. As the President of the Board of Trade could not find it in his heart to spell out in his speech a pro-European future for Britain, I hope that the Minister will do so.

I turn briefly to the important point that the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) made about regional assistance. A fair amount of that inward investment is determined on a large cheque being signed by the Government to investing companies—reportedly, £200 million for Samsung and £40 million for Jaguar—and such subsidies can distort markets.

As I represent a South Yorkshire constituency, I am worried about the decision by the Northern Ireland Office to offer a £2.4 million grant to the YG group, a Korean cutting tool manufacturing company. The company has already opened part of a factory in west Belfast to export cutting tools—part-made in Korea and shipped for finishing in Northern Ireland—to the UK and elsewhere in Europe. In the opinion of cutting tool manufacturing firms in my constituency, as well as in Sheffield and South Yorkshire, that will have a devastating impact on their market share. At least 250 to 300 jobs will be lost in exchange for the gain of fewer jobs in Belfast. I understand why the Northern Ireland Office seeks any possible inward investment, but £2.4 million might be better spent if it were used to upgrade and promote existing indigenous British factories in the cutting tools industry.

There is some irony in the fact that British Steel, a company which has a strong presence in my constituency, fights strongly in Europe and asks the Government to fight strongly in Europe against subsidies that European Governments give to their steel companies in some instances. British Steel is right and I support its stand. However, a Government Department is unfairly subsidising a Korean company to come into the United Kingdom and, in effect, destroy British jobs. That issue needs to be looked at, and I hope that the Under-Secretary will assure the House that that unfair subsidy to YG, the Korean firm, will not be allowed to continue.

The President of the Board of Trade flies to Singapore later today. We wish him well. May the sun shine on his works. He will be visiting a country which is in social terms one of the most regulated in the world. It has a massive programme of social investment in housing. Compulsory savings are levied on all workers to provide for their future, which also provides a huge source of capital for investment and development in Singapore. All that was undertaken by Lee Kuan Yu, a distinguished statesman who, some hon. Members will remember, was secretary of the Fabian Society at Cambridge.

In many ways, Singapore represents the Fabian Society re-created on earth—a world of the Webbs with slightly better food and drink. Whether one wants and whether the British people would be prepared to put up with Singapore's level of regulation on smoking, drinking and crossing the road, I wonder. I hope that the President of the Board of Trade will enjoy his week in that wonderful Fabian city state of Singapore and learn what lessons he can from it.

The President of the Board of Trade will go out to Singapore with one of the most shameful missions that a British Cabinet Minister has ever undertaken in our name. He intends to use his authority to block the efforts of our great ally, the United States, to place child labour on the agenda of the World Trade Organisation.

In the past 15 years, we have seen a great liberalisation of world trade, which I welcome. It is not accompanied in all parts of the world by a fair share of the wealth created and value added for those who create that wealth and add that value. As we look around the world, we see ever greater income equalities, no more clearly than in our own country. We only have to walk a few hundred yards before we start stumbling across beggars in the street—a quintessential hallmark of the Conservative economy. The Government have reintroduced begging as a mass economic activity into Britain. That is also true in too many other countries.

What is most surprising of all is the extraordinary increase in child labour. The theory of pure free trade is that everyone gets richer. Someone mentioned earlier the concept of the rising tide that lifts all boats, but we are seeing a massive increase in child labour. In a debate a few weeks ago, I quoted figures of about 110 million children identified as working around the world. The International Labour Organisation has just produced an authoritative report which shows that 250 million children are in waged work. This is real work. I am not talking about newspaper rounds or helping out on farms. It is waged work, often as bonded or slave labour.

More than 1 million children are commercially exploited for sexual purposes in the sex trade. Children working in agriculture are more likely to die from pesticides or organic chemical poisoning than from childhood diseases. It is the new scandal of the modern world economy. We are increasing, year on year, the number of children forced to work under those conditions.

That is why the United States and France, and Sir Leon Brittan, among others, have argued that the World Trade Organisation must build the discussion of child labour into its deliberations.

It is shameful to this country that the Secretary of State will seek, next week in Singapore, to veto the discussion of child labour in the WTO. If for no other reason, let us welcome as soon as possible a Labour Government, who will join the United States and other mature democracies to place the child labour issue on the WTO agenda. The Secretary of State said that he was an evangelist for free trade; I am a great supporter of free trade, but free trade that does not allow all who participate in it to get a fair share will increase protectionism. We are seeing that backlash throughout the world from the excluded, the poor and the out-of-work. If we do not construct our trade relationships and economies so that all who participate in them gain from them, and so that children are at school rather than sent out to work for their parents, we shall see a rising tide of protectionism.

Even at this late hour, I urge the Secretary of State to think again as he flies to Singapore, and to join President Clinton in recalling the good name of Wilberforce and those in British history who eradicated evil working conditions. He should tell his ministerial colleagues at the World Trade Organisation next week that he wants child labour on the WTO agenda. In that way, the WTO and all the other forums can be used to eradicate child labour by 2020.

Mr. Michael Stephen (Shoreham): I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this debate as I am an officer of the all-party export group and an adviser to the Ricardo Engineering group, whose scientists and engineers do excellent work to keep Britain at the forefront of the technological revolution and whose skills and expertise are exported every day to earn foreign currency for Britain.

We need to export for two reasons: first, to earn the foreign currency to pay for the goods and services that we have to import; secondly, to provide a buffer for businesses and employees in this country against the inevitable economic cycles to which all economies are subject.

The world has changed. Only a few years ago, we were the world's workshop and just about everybody else was either our low-cost supplier or our customer. More and more of those countries are now our competitors—and very effective competitors they are, too. They are competitive not just in low-tech industries but in the highest technology imaginable.

There has been a computer revolution in the past 10 years, and more and more of our national effort, brains and expertise are being devoted to computer-related industries rather than to tangible metal-bashing manufacturing industries. As I said in an intervention, that tends to distort the trade figures. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the development and creation of software is a manufacturing or a service activity. That industry is becoming increasingly important in all the developed economies.

The construction industry is a major export earner for Britain and we should salute the efforts that it makes throughout the world. Bidding for a large construction contract in a foreign country is an expensive and risky business, and Britain's construction industry is grateful for the overseas project fund that the Government offer. The OPF contributes 50 per cent. of eligible costs of British companies tendering for major overseas contracts. Those grants are repaid, plus a supplement of at least 20 per cent., if the company succeeds in winning the contract.

That assistance is available only for high-risk marginal projects, for which the companies concerned would not otherwise have bid. A company making an application must show that the contract will generate substantial UK content, usually at least £50 million. The figures for 1992-93 show that for an outlay of £3 million by the OPF, British companies won contracts with a total UK content of no less than £550 million. That is a good investment by any standards.

Unfortunately, the amount of money that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor has been able to devote to the OPF is now not enough to support the potential opportunities that British construction and other major companies have identified in world markets. Even at a time when budgetary constraints are tight, as clearly they are at present, the fund represents not a drain on our resources, but an investment opportunity. I urge my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to take account of that and to convey the point to the Chancellor.

Asia is a major area of export opportunity for British companies. The aid and trade provision has been enormously helpful to British companies seeking to profit from those markets. Unfortunately, there is a moratorium on Asia because the budget for that part of the world is overspent. I urge the Government to restore the budget as soon as possible, as that is the part of the world where the greatest opportunities exist for profitable business for British companies.

I also urge the Government to shift more of the money available for overseas aid out of multilateral programmes into bilateral programmes, which can be focused much more carefully on those areas where British companies are likely to benefit than is the case with multilateral programmes.

During the debate several hon. Members referred to Britain's relations with Europe. Britain's future in Europe is central to a debate on how Britain earns its living in the world. Conservative Members agree that Britain must be at the heart of Europe. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) observed, we were the architects of the single market. My right hon. Friend Lady Thatcher was in the forefront of European leaders arguing for a single market within which all European companies could compete on a level playing field. She did more than any other European leader to create the single market, and her successor, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, has continued that crusade.

But we in the Conservative party have some problems with the single market, and we reflect the divisions that exist within our country on that great issue. The press have made us appear to be a divided party, but we are articulating the differing views that exist out there in the country. Our constituents have sent us here to express their views and to debate those great issues.

We have some difficulty with the social chapter, not only because, as has been pointed out, it would be damaging to Britain's competitiveness in the world—as it is already damaging continental Europe's competitiveness in the world—but because we see it as running flatly contrary to the doctrine of subsidiarity. Matters with which the social chapter deals, such as how many hours may be worked in a week, are essentially not matters for supra-national regulation. They are issues for each member state to decide, having regard to its culture and economic conditions. This House must take those decisions on behalf of the people whom we represent.

We also have some difficulty with the European Court of Justice—I speak now as a lawyer. We and the Irish are the only member states whose legal systems are based on common law: all other member states' legal systems are based on the civil law. When a common law lawyer examines the words of a statute or a treaty, he construes them strictly. A civil lawyer does not do that: he looks at the preamble to the Act or the treaty and says, "I know what the small print says, but my job is to interpret the spirit of the treaty which I derive from the preamble."

Therefore, a judge can interpret a treaty to mean just about anything he likes. That is the difficulty that we face: we sign international obligations on the basis of our common law understanding of their meaning, but through a process of creative interpretation the European Court of Justice then imposes on our people obligations to which we have never agreed. That causes serious concerns for all our constituents.

Mr. MacShane: Has not Britain won more cases in the European Court of Justice as a result of that interpretive, purposeful method of lawyering, which benefits Britain more than those European countries which have sought to halt our exports, for example?

Mr. Stephen: It is not a quantitative analysis: we cannot say that because we have won 50 and lost 30 we are necessarily better off. I would rather lose cases that are not firmly based on the wording of the obligation to which we agreed. I want to see certainty in our relationship with the European Union: I do not want to be exposed to a system which is totally unpredictable and will tell me tomorrow that the agreement that I signed yesterday does not mean what I thought it meant. That grave difficulty must be addressed at the intergovernmental conference—although I have no confidence that we shall make any meaningful progress there.

The House and the nation must send a clear message to the European Court of Justice that if it does not take account of the fears that I have expressed it risks losing the confidence of the British people. The same can be said for the European Court of Human Rights. I am glad that my right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor visited the court recently and, in the tactful manner for which he is renowned, told the judges of our concerns about the way they perform their duties.

There is also a problem with the single European currency. In view of the fudging that is going on in France, Italy and other countries which are trying to squeeze a quart into a pint pot and to conform to economic criteria that they clearly do not satisfy, I do not see how a properly based, workable single currency can be created within the next five years. It is most unlikely that this country will consider it appropriate to join, even on economic grounds. If business men in the City of London or in our constituencies were to say, "You must get into the single currency; it is absolutely vital and we must have it," and if it were clear that we would derive economic benefit from it, I might be prepared to tell my constituents, "Here is a huge economic prize for us: let's forget about historical concepts, cultural differences and constitutional theories of sovereignty and go for it." But I am not in a position to say that. Instead, everyone I speak to—economists, business men and political colleagues—says, "It is not proven whether it would be a benefit to us to join the single currency." Is it worth giving up the sovereignty that would be involved in joining a single currency to reap some intangible and rather peripheral benefits? At present, I am not so persuaded.

No one says that we should not give up some sovereignty. Whenever we enter into an international treaty we cede some sovereignty: we give up our legal right to act in a way that is inconsistent with the treaty. There comes a time, however, when the process of giving away our rights begins to invade the very core of sovereignty. I fear that if we were to join a single currency we would go beyond that point. From what I know about my constituents' views and the country generally, I do not feel that our country is ready to do that. What our children and grandchildren may decide to do is a matter for them, having regard to world economic conditions at the time, but that is not for us to decide.

It appears that of 3.6 million companies in this country, only 100,000 export regularly. Sixty per cent. of medium-sized companies do not export at all. In a recent survey conducted by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, 45 per cent. of companies stated that they do not export because of fear of the unknown.

That is where the Government, chambers of commerce and organisations such as the Confederation of British Industry and the Institute of Export can help. It is essential that small and medium-sized enterprises are given information about market opportunities. It must be a proactive process. We cannot sit and wait for them to ask for information. Information must be made available to them on the Internet.

Our posts abroad are doing an excellent job to promote Britain throughout the world. I had the great pleasure of meeting the staff of some of them this year in Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand, Syria, Lebanon and Sweden. They all impressed me as people who saw it as their role to promote Britain. They were doing an excellent job and I congratulate them. We must remind them from time to time, however, that they must be proactive. They must get on the phone to British companies or British trade associations and say, "Do you know about this opportunity that is just about to come up?" I can assure the House that that is what the French are doing, and the Americans. To a large extent, the British are doing that as well, but our posts abroad must be reminded of the need to take that approach.

Exporting is an exciting business, but it can be a risky one. A role that the Government can play is to help potential exporters to benefit from the mistakes of those who have already exported. Export clubs are an excellent idea and something that the Government should encourage.

Much training could also be undertaken with the use of modern technology. I should like to see CD training packages provided for small and medium-sized enterprises so that they can educate themselves in their own time using their own computers.

The ECGD does an excellent job, but as an officer of the all-party export group I have heard complaints that it sometimes bases its assessment of a certain country on out-dated information. I hope that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will ask the ECGD to examine its database and satisfy itself that it is acting on the latest information.

British banks are much criticised. The criticism is largely unjustified, but there is one area in which they could be more helpful to business. If one compares the terms on which banks are prepared to lend for residential purchase with the terms on which they are prepared to lend for a commercial operation, one finds that even if the loan is for exactly the same amount, on exactly the same security, loans for business purposes will be on much less advantageous terms than those for residential purchases. To my mind, the financing of British business is much more important than the financing of British bricks and mortar, because if our businesses do not succeed and we do not succeed in paying our way in the world we shall not be able to afford bricks and mortar. Banks really do need to get their priorities right.

The best form of investment comes from businesses' own money. That is why I support my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's intention, put into practice in each of his Budgets, to lower taxes on business. I do not approve of gimmicks such as investment allowances, which tend to distort the market: it is much better to give businesses an overall lower rate of taxation. That should apply not just to national taxation, but to local taxation as well.

I am sure that every hon. Member will agree that one of the biggest burdens on small business is the uniform business rate and national insurance contributions, neither of which takes any account of the ability of the business to pay: both have to be paid whether or not the business is making a profit. I welcome my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's recent Budget announcement of further relief to small businesses from business rates, but we must try to shift the burden of taxation from uniform business rate and national insurance contributions, which do not take account of ability to pay, to taxes like corporation tax and income tax which do.

I conclude by congratulating the Government on the general thrust of their economic strategy, which is giving British business more and more opportunity to do what it is best at—doing business free from the restraints of regulation and free from the crushing burden of taxation to which it has been subjected in recent years.

Mr. Ken Livingstone (Brent, East): Much claptrap is talked in the west about the need for free trade. I am not aware of any current, modern, capitalist economies that ever allowed the principles of free trade, or market principles domestically, to determine their policy when national interests could be best preserved by intervention or tariffs.

Britain built its own tremendous economic advantage at the beginning of the industrial revolution by barring most of our foreign competitors from trading in the British empire. A third of the world was exclusively reserved for trade on our terms. I do not know how Britain can now argue for free trade given its own record. America built its industrial supremacy behind massively high tariff walls so that it could create its own sound domestic industry.

In the middle of the last century, the forerunners of what has since become Germany created high tariff walls because their economists warned them that if there was genuine free trade, German industry could never establish itself against the much stronger American and British competition. In the post-war period, we have seen Japan, informally and formally, operate the most rigorous rigging of the market to exclude western, European and American imports to protect its own domestic base, and it is still doing it on a grand scale.

We heap great praise on South Korea, Taiwan, Singapore and so on, but they have all built their own domestic strength behind tariff barriers. If they simply allowed anyone to import and export they would not be able to establish a sound domestic base.

Still today, nations that praise the concept of the World Trade Organisation—the powerful nations of Britain, America and Japan—insist that that organisation should, effectively, force the rest of the world to buy their high-quality finished products on their terms, but should restrict them in selling their agricultural products to us on equal terms. If we were really interested in free trade, we would allow agricultural imports on a massive scale, but we do not allow that, because Europe, Japan and America know that it would wipe out what remains of our farming industries and employment.

Behind the rhetoric, the reality is that nations intervene whenever possible to protect their domestic markets. It is hypocritical for the west to lecture African and Asian nations that are not economically successful, and insist that they must trade on our terms and cannot intervene to protect their domestic markets, given that every successful capitalist society has built its success on exactly those policies.

I am delighted that the Secretary of State will take part in the World Trade Organisation rally in Singapore, but let us recognise the hypocrisy of it. If we were really serious about free trade, we would shift the balance of protectionist measures in Europe, Japan and America, which prevent third-world countries from achieving their full potential. We would lift the burden of debt that has been saddled on third-world countries by the high interest rate policies of President Reagan, when he took over in the White House in the early 1980s.

Mr. MacShane: Is my hon. Friend aware of the row about the import of bananas into Europe? The German Government insist that bananas produced in Latin American countries, such as Colombia, should be imported at low cost, whereas France and Britain believe that bananas should come from countries where wages are slightly higher. According to my hon. Friend's theory—if I understand him rightly—we should all eat low-cost bananas, whereas bananas from countries where wages are protected should not be allowed into Europe.

Mr. Livingstone: I am merely pointing out the reality. I believe in managing trade. It is nonsense to talk about free trade, because I believe that the world needs to manage trade, otherwise one industry after another in one nation after another would be completely wiped out by low-cost foreign competition. I realise that the quid pro quo is that rich nations should transfer wealth and investment to poorer nations. I see no point in one industry after another being wiped out all over the west, with the social upheaval that that would create. We need to manage trade, and that requires a consensus to emerge. At the moment, the poor nations of the world have no impact on that debate whatsoever.

I shall deal with the Government's Budget, and what it will do to improve our trading performance. Our exports have grown tremendously since we were evicted from the exchange rate mechanism—it is irrelevant whether we call it black Wednesday or white Wednesday. The simple fact is that that dramatic reduction in the exchange rate opened the way to a huge export boom, which fuelled most of the growth in the British economy until 18 months ago. Unfortunately, in the past year we have seen the real value of the pound go up by 10 per cent., which makes it more difficult for British firms to export.

I would like to get back to a system of fixed exchange rates. The important thing is to fix them at a realistic level, and not to repeat the nonsensical mistake of the Conservative party when it took us into the ERM at a grossly overvalued rate. Perhaps that was not a mistake. The Economist and the financial pages of the press in the run-up to the decision of the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, now the Prime Minister, to take us into the ERM at DM2.95, told us that we should join at a rate so high that it would make British industry squeal. It was not a mistake; it was a deliberate policy to use an overvalued pound to force a shake-up of competitiveness in British industry. The result was that 10 per cent. of British industry closed during that period. We lost jobs, and we lost exports. We should state clearly that we want a real rebirth of British industry and a recapturing of trade. I have not seen the Conservative central office briefing to Conservative Members but I look forward to seeing it later. I have not been given a briefing by my own Whips so I am completely unbiased.

People talk about the Government's great trade triumph, but we continue to lose our proportion of world trade year by year. We are not capturing markets or expanding. Conservative Europhobes drone on about the need to move away from European entanglement towards trade with the far east. But the trade statistics show that we are improving our trade with Europe and losing it in the far east. Those who think that Britain has a future outside Europe trading with the far east should look at the figures because they show that we are losing ground in those markets. We benefit substantially from the trade inside the EC, which has had massive growth.

What choice did the Government face in the Budget in terms of continuing to increase exports and strengthen our industrial base? It was that the British economy could be managed either to benefit our industry or the City of London. Consistently over the past 18 years the interests of the City have taken precedence over those of our industrial base. In the Budget the Chancellor committed himself to further increases in interest rates rather than going for increased taxes. That is the balance. He has chosen to manage the economy by constantly using interest rates although that has the most damaging effect on our industrial base.

We are told that in view of the great triumph of the past 18 years a Government borrowing requirement of £19 billion is no problem on top of all the others that we have had. Over the past five years, Government debt has virtually doubled and we are pushing against the 60 per cent. Maastricht ceiling because I do not believe for a minute the Government's figure of £19 billion for next year. The amount will be £22 billion, £23 billion or perhaps even £24 billion, which will take the Government over the 3 per cent. borrowing limit.

As the figures continue to come through, the international money markets will see as the year rolls by that the Government's Budget projections were optimistic and there will be increased pressure for interest rises. Eddie George will trundle backwards and forwards, almost wearing out the carpet in the Chancellor's office, demanding a further increase in interest rates to restore confidence. The alternative way to restore confidence is to recognise that Britain is wildly undertaxed. In tax terms we are 14th of the 15 nations in the EU. My voters will find that breathtaking because individuals in Britain are painfully highly taxed. The rates are punitive, higher than at any time apart from during the war.

There has been a shift in the balance of taxation from the corporate sector to individuals, most of whom—through income tax, VAT and council tax—are paying more tax than they have ever paid. They cannot believe that this is an undertaxed society. However, corporation tax is almost voluntary and, effectively, that is why Britain is undertaxed. We tax much less than any of our major competitors and the rate is lower than in any European nation except Portugal. Has that strategy succeeded? Throughout the debate Conservative Members have said, "Industry will survive and invest if we keep taxes low." Corporation tax is lower than it has ever been in real terms and company profitability is higher than ever in real terms, but have companies invested? They have not: investment is limping along.

The statistics are disturbing. Since the Government came to power in 1979 personal investment as a proportion of GDP has increased by 0.1 per cent. Government investment has decreased by 1 per cent. During this Conservative Administration, company investment—one must say "company investment" because so many companies have moved from the public to the private sector during the period—has declined by 2.2 per cent.

So, having given companies all that they demanded on low taxation, in dramatic reductions of trade union rights and increased working hours, the Government have not produced the result that they set out to achieve. They have presided over a decline, as a proportion of GDP, in investment in the British economy. As Labour party propaganda makes absolutely clear, that is why Britain has slipped from 13th place—when the Government took over—to 18th place.

Britain is about to be overtaken by Ireland. Is it possible to imagine Mrs. Thatcher, in 1979, standing on the steps of Downing street and saying, "Vote for us, and within 20 years Ireland will have overtaken the British economy in terms of per capita GDP"? On current projections of British and Irish economic growth, Ireland will overtake us within the next three to four years. Out of the 15 members of the European Union, we are still ahead, in GDP per capita, of only Portugal, Greece, Spain and Ireland. Ireland will overtake us in the next two or three years—unless my hon. Friends on the Opposition Front Bench can turn round the situation very damn quickly after next May.

Furthermore, some of the most advanced regions in Spain have equalled British levels of GDP per head. On those trends, soon only Portugal, Greece and Britain will be at the lower level of GDP per head in the European Community. It has been an appalling record of failure, because, on every occasion, the Government have benefited the City and neglected industry. One overlooks the need for industry at one's peril.

I am all in favour of a successful financial sector, and I accept that we should be selling insurance and all those other things. I am delighted that there is a successful service sector and that people work in catering, hairdressing and all of that. But those industries rest on a sound industrial base, and they become vulnerable without a sound, high-tech manufacturing base.

I should like the Government to make a dramatic shift. If they were serious about trade and industry, they would not have passed their most recent Budget. But I am opposed to people who slag off the Government and do not say what they would do in their place. Therefore, I shall spell out exactly how the situation should be turned round and which taxes should be increased. I know that I shall say it at my peril, because, under the Labour party's new code of conduct, a Labour Member will be found guilty of having brought the Labour party into disrepute if he or she is found in possession of a tax policy. Nevertheless, I shall spell one out.

I have not the slightest doubt that it is right that Labour should proceed with its windfall profits tax on the utilities. We are batting that proposal around. I know that my right hon. Friend the shadow Chancellor has not been too specific on its details, but it seems to have slipped into the public domain that we are thinking about a £5 billion tax. However, we have overlooked all those independent city studies that tell us that a windfall tax could produce £10 billion without any discomfort to the companies concerned. Therefore, if we are facing a Government borrowing requirement—which is claimed to be £19 billion next year, but most probably will be closer to £23 billion or £24 billion—a £10 billion windfall profits tax would provide a good start to restoring sound finances in Britain.

What about income tax? I said earlier that the average, ordinary voter in Britain—middle-class and skilled working-class people—are being highly taxed. They are. I am opposed to a tax increase for them, which is why I was quite happy not to oppose the 1 per cent. reduction in the basic rate. I hope that Labour goes further and starts to reduce the tax on some middle-class and skilled working-class families. But higher income earners—people earning over £50,000 a year—are woefully undertaxed. We could easily say that those earning over £50,000 will have to come up with another £3 billion or £4 billion, to make a contribution to restoring the competitiveness of the British economy, because they are the people who have done best in the past 18 years.

A combination of three other taxes would help restore Britain's financial position, and immediately reduce the pressure for interest rate increases. I am not saying that we should increase taxes because it is fun to do so—I am still waiting to hear from my right hon. Friend the shadow Chancellor who in the past taxed and spent just for the fun of it. I am in favour of structuring our tax system to increase investment and industrial competitiveness.

First, I should like there to be a two-tier capital gains tax. Capital gains realised over a short period should be taxed at a higher rate than those left in a company for longer, which would be an incentive for long-term investment. It could turn out to be completely neutral in terms of any tax change if we reduced the tax burden on capital gains in order to encourage long-term investment.

Secondly, we should examine dividends. When Mrs. Thatcher became Prime Minister, dividends were 1.5 per cent. of gross domestic product; they are now running at 6 per cent. A tax on dividends, or dividend controls, could produce literally billions of pounds. If there were a dividend tax structured in such a way as to encourage investment, and if there were a reduction of dividends, we would massively increase our export base potential and increase long-term investment.

Finally, corporation tax has become almost voluntary, which is why Britain is undertaxed. The Government have given the corporate sector exactly what it asked for—weak trade unions, a large pool of unemployed people in order to bring down wage rates, massive profitability and low taxation. There has thus been no investment. There should be a substantial increase in corporation tax, to bring in something of the order of £10 billion, and generous incentives to encourage investment so that companies which increased their current levels of investment—I emphasise the word "increased"—would get most, if not all, of it back.

Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): I hope that you enjoyed that speech, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It was clear that the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) not only had not got hold of a copy of the Conservative research department's briefing, but had not obtained any briefing from the Labour party's Front-Bench team either. Had he received any briefing at all, it might well have been from the Referendum party. It struck me that the hon. Gentleman's views on world trade were pretty well 100 per cent. consistent with those of Sir James Goldsmith. Perhaps more people should be aware that the hon. Gentleman and Sir James have views in common on free trade. I certainly disagree with the hon. Gentleman.

I noted in an intervention that the White Paper on trade and investment points at paragraph 12 on page 18 to the relationship between the trade orientation of developing countries and the growth in their living standards. It states:

> "The evidence has persuaded more and more countries that cutting themselves off from the world economy is a recipe for stagnation. Increasingly, developing countries are seeking greater integration by switching from inward-orientated to outward-orientated economic strategies and opening their markets."

In the globalised world economy in which we live today, no country—rich or poor, large or small—has any real choice. We all have an interest in free trade and we shall all benefit from it in the form of rising living standards.

[Mr. Tim Smith]

The White Paper also deals with agriculture, which the hon. Member for Brent, East mentioned. Of course, he is right about agriculture—world markets in agriculture need to be freed up and opened up. The White Paper recognises that and states on page 28:

"Efforts to achieve free and open agricultural markets are particularly important to long-term world prosperity and development; resources are significantly mis-allocated in both the developed and developing world."

I agree with that. I do not believe that we shall have genuinely free world trade until we have free trade in all goods and services, including agricultural products.

I wish my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade every success as he leaves today for the World Trade Organisation ministerial conference in Singapore. Although the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) was rather inclined to talk about my right hon. Friend scarpering off to the sun, everybody knows that Ministers, like everyone else who travels overseas on business, work extremely hard. I personally know many people who spend a great deal of their working life travelling overseas to sell British goods, to invest there or to encourage investment here. It is not an easy life; international travel is not some kind of holiday. Such people work extremely hard in Britain's interests—as do Ministers who travel overseas—and we should pay tribute to them for the work that they do.

The most significant fact that underlies Britain's improved economic performance since 1979 is the quite dramatic improvement in manufacturing productivity. By whatever measure, we have closed the gap between us and other countries in manufacturing productivity. Of course we have more to do, and we should and must catch up with Germany, but we have bridged more than half the gap already. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State might be able to give me the exact figures, but I believe that we have closed as much as two thirds of the gap. That is the Government's single most significant economic achievement, because it underlies so many of the successes to which my hon. Friends have pointed in the debate.

One factor that has contributed directly to improved manufacturing productivity is inward investment. Inward investors simply would not tolerate the level of manufacturing productivity that prevailed in this country in 1979. They brought with them new techniques and technologies and better-quality management, and insisted that they were introduced not just at the plants that they established in the United Kingdom, but among their suppliers. They were not prepared to source in the United Kingdom unless UK component suppliers also raised their productivity and the quality of their goods to the standards to which the investors were accustomed in the countries from which they came.

Short Brothers plc exemplifies how inward investment has improved manufacturing productivity. It was owned by the Government until about 1988. The Treasury refused to invest in the business and the business ran up huge debts. The shop floor was like something out of the 1930s. The company was bought by Bombardier of Canada, which has since then invested hugely on the shop floor. Today, Shorts has some of the most advanced manufacturing technology in the world.

The most important point for the Northern Ireland economy is that Shorts worked hard to ensure that it was able to subcontract engineering work and buy many of the components that it needed from local manufacturers. It did so to ensure that it was able to meet its requirements, and it has led to an increase in manufacturing productivity in Northern Ireland. Although that activity concerns a small part of the United Kingdom economy, it has been replicated throughout England, Scotland, Wales and, indeed, Northern Ireland, as inward investors have insisted on higher productivity and higher-quality goods.

The hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) mentioned Northern Ireland, and as I have spent the past couple of days over there, I am glad to be able to say that inward investment into Northern Ireland is still going pretty well—notwithstanding the termination of the ceasefire. Existing investors are increasing their investments. Seagate is investing at Limavady, with the creation of another 760 jobs, and Daewoo, which already invests heavily in the Province, is also increasing its investment, with the creation of a further 330 jobs. I asked Daewoo, a Korean company that invests in the United Kingdom, why it chose to come to the United Kingdom. It told me that it was, first, because this country was part of the single market—it sees it as a platform for exporting to other member states. But it also chose this country because of our labour market.

There are many aspects to the labour market. We have a reliable and skilled work force, and outstandingly good industrial relations compared with those of 18 years ago. We have relatively low non-wage labour costs. The Department for Education and Employment produced an excellent booklet entitled "Jobs", which set out the precise the non-wage labour costs in France, Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom. They are much lower here than in any of those other member states, which is an important consideration for companies that invest here.

It therefore follows that any attempt to impose extra burdens on employers—whether through the social chapter, a minimum wage or any other idea that the Labour party may have for imposing extra costs—must act as a disincentive to inward investors into this country and must make other member states more attractive. That is why any such attempts should be resisted. Companies are also impressed by this country's standard of education and training, the training that can be provided to inward investors and the advantage that we have through our use of the English language.

It may be true that when inward investors first arrive in this country, they are largely assembly operations, importing a large proportion of the components that make up the finished product—a point mentioned by, I think, the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood). But once they gain confidence in this country, they start to reduce the level of imports and undertake research and development work. Long-established American companies, such as Ford and General Motors, eventually started to produce products designed exclusively for the European market. That is already starting to happen with our more recent inward investors; it will continue to happen because they have confidence in the market in which they have invested.

In an earlier intervention, I mentioned the remarkable turnaround in our balance of trade with Japan. In his speech, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade said that we now have a balance of trade surplus with Japan of, I think, £1 billion. If that is the figure, it shows a remarkable transformation from the position only a few years ago, when we seemed to import almost every high-tech electronic product from Japan and it seemed almost impossible—whether for protectionist reasons or whatever—to export anything to Japan. That position, which is apparent in the far east markets, has been replicated in many other countries.

We are producing an outstandingly good trade performance. Many forecasters would have predicted that, during a period of economic recovery, our trade performance would deteriorate. That has happened previously—as the economy has started to grow, we have sucked in more and more imports and the balance has started to deteriorate. We have now had three or four years of economic growth, yet the balance of trade has not deteriorated—in fact, the balance of payments is roughly in surplus, as would normally be expected. That is an outstanding record.

My sole concern relates to the European single market, which was established nearly five years ago. We are still not making the progress that we ought to be making in some internal markets—I am thinking particularly of insurance, telecommunications and public procurement, but there might be other markets in which more progress ought to be made. Deutsche Telekom has recently been privatised, but I do not believe that that privatisation has been accompanied by the same deregulation of Germany's telecommunications market that in this country accompanied the privatisation of British Telecom.

British companies must be able to compete in continental markets, and German, French and other companies must be able to compete in ours. We have already complied with our half of that deal and we have an extremely open market in telecommunications, but the Government must work hard in Brussels to open up the markets that are still effectively protected and ensure that British companies—many of which are now world leaders because of the opportunities that liberalisation gave them—are able to expand accordingly.

The record on international trade is outstanding, and that is vital because this country is, always has been and always will be hugely involved in international trade. We are the fifth largest exporter, and exports account for a quarter of our gross domestic product. Although it may be true that we have had some difficulty in holding our share of world trade, we have done better than previous Governments in preserving our position. As other economies grow at higher rates of growth from a much lower base, they tend to take a larger proportion of world trade, so it becomes increasingly difficult for a developed country such as ours to maintain the same market share. We nevertheless have a good record, which is why I conclude by wishing my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State every success in his discussions in Singapore.

1.16 pm

Mrs. Barbara Roche (Hornsey and Wood Green): All hon. Members will agree that this has been a good, high quality debate and that many important points have been made by hon. Members on both sides of the House. I hope that the debate will have given the President of the Board of Trade food for thought on his way to Singapore today.

The President of the Board of Trade referred in his opening speech to the whole question of regulation and how deregulation was especially important in relation to small firms, by reducing compliance costs and the burdens on business. I absolutely agree with him. What makes that all the more surprising is that at Question Time on Wednesday the Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy, who will be winding up today's debate, had to admit that he had introduced three times as many regulations relating to the Department of Trade and Industry as had been revoked.

If we look at the Government's overall record, we find that since 1994 approximately 13 times as many regulations have been introduced as have been replaced. I remind the Minister that 19 Conservative Back Benchers, including a former Minister for Trade, have criticised the Government's laconic record—their words, not mine—on removing the burdens on business.

The Institute of Directors, in its recent report on small business and also as a result of the "Your Business Matters" conference, noted that in the past few years

> "The government has talked a lot about deregulation but has not achieved enough. Around 3,000 regulations have been removed over the past few years but over 10,000 new ones have been introduced."

The Minister may like to dwell on that this afternoon, especially as it was mentioned by the President of the Board of Trade in his opening remarks.

The President mentioned the fact that Britain is a trading nation and the importance of exports, especially to small and medium-sized enterprises. That theme was also echoed in a thoughtful speech by the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen).

The President mentioned the work done by business links. Although we welcome their work, it is at an extremely early stage. In Britain we still have no database of exporters, unlike our competitor countries in the European Union. It will be interesting to hear what the Minister has to say about that.

The hon. Member for Shoreham made the extremely pertinent point that we needed to ensure that our high commissions and embassies abroad were using all the latest technology, were using the Internet and were acting as a selling point for British goods and services. This morning there has been much talk about the Conservative briefing paper that was made available to Conservative Members and also, by a happy coincidence, to Labour Members. In that context, I wondered whether the hon. Member for Shoreham had been privy to several things that we had said in the public arena about exports. It seemed to my hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) that the hon. Member for Shoreham was parroting Labour party policy on the subject. We speak about an enterprise zone for exporters—

Mr. Stephen: I assure the hon. Lady that when a good idea appears it does not matter to me where in the House it comes from. All good ideas for the benefit of the nation should be adopted. I do not concede, however, that this idea was originated by the hon. Lady or her colleagues.

Mrs. Roche: I will respond to that intervention in the spirit in which it was made, by saying that I agree with the hon. Gentleman. We are talking about what is in the interests of our country, and good ideas that are in the interest of the whole nation should be warmly welcomed from both sides of the House. However, we are delighted with the hon. Gentleman's endorsement of our policy on exports.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) asked important questions about investment and about the Invest in Britain Bureau survey. He raised a potentially extremely important point about counterfeit trade, which I am sure will be mentioned in Singapore and which is of great interest to businesses in Britain.

The Tory briefing document was mentioned. The hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) claimed only to have glanced at it, but proceeded to quote from it in detail. It is an interesting document. Later I shall talk about the skills gap. From the language in which the document is couched and its grammatical format, one might conclude that the writer would benefit from a Labour Government and what we intend to do to improve skills and rebuild our economy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) made pertinent points about the condition of the economy and investment from Britain abroad. The 1995 United Nations report showed that $30 million was invested in Britain by foreign firms while $38 million was invested by Britain abroad. When the Minister talks about the amount of outward investment going out from Britain, he may wish to refer to that. My hon. Friend also made some pertinent points about the scandal of child labour and the importance that the United States Government attach to that.

This has been a good debate. It has put firmly on the agenda the importance of inward investment to Britain. We pay tribute to local authorities, regional development organisations, the staff of the Invest in Britain Bureau and others who have helped to achieve the success that we have so far seen. Inward investment is important not only for the jobs that it brings to Britain but for the effect that it has on local economies, including the knock-on effect of workers investing their pay locally, improved opportunities for new and existing supply companies, many of which are small and growing companies, and the possibility of small company spin-offs. The helpful effect that investment can have on small and medium-sized enterprises—truly the backbone of the economy—can be of assistance.

There are certainly questions to be asked about Ministers' actions and record on investment. Listening to the President of the Board of Trade and his Back-Bench colleagues today, one would have no idea of the sharp divisions within the Cabinet on the policies on inward investment. Critics have described the current situation as a Dutch auction, with potential investors being offered financial incentives of as much as £37,000 per employee to move to a particular area.

In the last debate on inward investment two years ago, the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe)—he is certainly an honourable Member of the House because before he moved to the dizzy heights of the Whips office he was my pair—described the experience of a potential inward investor in his constituency. He said:

"halfway through negotiations with the Department of Trade and Industry in Bristol, he finds himself the subject of an approach from a Welsh council to relocate there, supported by the Welsh Office and underpinned by the local training and enterprise council, two jobcentres and the local councils. He is now in a Dutch auction, with offer and counter-offer being made with public money."—[Official Report, 28 October 1994; Vol. 248, c. 1145.]

If we needed further proof, The Economist recently described this inter-agency rivalry as:

"A collection of bell boys tripping over each other to grasp a guest's baggage, and then tipping the customer for the pleasure of carting it to his room."

To put it kindly, Ministers have not been singing from the same hymn sheet.

It is well known—again, I look forward to the Minister's response on this—that the Department of Trade and Industry and the Treasury recently backed down in a row with the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office over control of campaigns to attract foreign investment. I understand that the DTI lost its argument that rival bids from the Welsh Secretary and the Scottish Secretary to attract the South Korean electronics company LG group, which eventually agreed to relocate in Newport, gave a rather bad impression to foreign Governments and could lead to the United Kingdom being forced into greater subsidies. Again, I look forward to the Minister's reply.

I gather that the DTI has retired from the lists and given up its attempt to have such bids handled by an interdepartmental agency, even though it is commonly agreed that inward investment appears to be going to those parts of Britain with the best equipped development agencies rather than where it is most needed. When the Defence Secretary was Chief Secretary to the Treasury he said:

"I believe we need to distinguish carefully between enhancing business competitiveness and getting embroiled ourselves in competition with foreign governments to pay market distorting subsidies. Much of our regional spending runs this risk."

The Opposition support inward investment, but an interesting debate is clearly going on within the Government about how they see inward investment. In the present turmoil—the daily dilemma, the "Coronation Street" and "Brookside" that we see enacted in the 1922 Committee and in Cabinet, on the "Today" programme, on "Newsnight" and in the daily pages of our national newspapers—perhaps the Minister can tell us how the Government are faring on inward investment.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) ably pointed out—my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) also said this—not all inward investment creates new plant and employment. A United States utility buying a British utility counts as inward investment. While it is clearly investment in Britain, it is a bit rich for the Government to count it in the way that they do. The Government should be clear about what they mean by inward investment when they boast about what they are doing.

As was rightly said by a number of hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) in a short but interesting speech, one reason why foreign companies come to Britain is because of the English language. I hope that when the Government try to take credit for other people's work th[illegible] not also seeking to take credit for our language. M[illegible] Cassell, writing in the Financial Times during the summer, said:

"The use of English as the international language of business has always been a critical factor"— in inward investment in Britain—

"for which even the most brazen politician has been unable to claim responsibility."

I would never think of accusing my opposite number, the Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy, of being a brazen politician and I am sure that he would not describe himself as such.

We should also look at Britain's own record on investment. As Dr. Lyons, chief executive of DKB International, said recently in Sunday Business:

"while such investment is welcome, it begs the question, why can't we do it ourselves?"

The figures on investment in British industry tell a sorry tale. Despite the Chancellor's upbeat forecast last year that investment would rise by 10 per cent., he was forced to admit in the Red Book that manufacturing investment "fell from the fourth quarter of 1995 to the second quarter of 1996".

It also fell by 14 per cent. in the last quarter compared with the same quarter a year ago and is still 6 per cent. in real terms below the level that it reached in 1979.

Since 1979, the UK has invested less as an average proportion of GDP than any of the other 24 countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. Is it any wonder that when the Government talk about how much our manufacturing sector has caught up in the past few years they do not reveal the incredibly low base to which they let it run down in the 1980s and the fact that they are now attempting to redress that record. I hope that the Minister will deal with that when he replies.

The whole House wants to attract inward investment for Britain, but we must try to envisage our future as we seek to do that. The Confederation of British Industry has identified three weaknesses which hold back Britain's inward investment performance. The first is our "image as poor Europeans"—those are not my words but the CBI's. [Interruption.] I hear the President of the Board of Trade and the Minister muttering among themselves. They should take those matters up with the CBI when they next meet it.

The Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy (Mr. Richard Page): The hon. Lady says that the Government are holding back inward investment into this country. As we literally have the world record, how can she say such a thing?

Mrs. Roche: The Minister must not go on living in the past. The CBI is looking to the future and how we will progress. I have mentioned the interdepartmental rivalry and the scepticism of some of his governmental colleagues about inward investment, which is often acquisition based, rather than entailing the attraction of new plant and machinery and job creation, as the Government like to portray it.

The second factor highlighted by the CBI was Britain's lack of infrastructure, and especially its transport problems. The third factor, and possibly the most important for our competitive edge, was our skills base and the qualifications of the work force. Those are clearly key issues.

As the CBI stated that "the UK's continued participation in the Single Market is of major importance to manufacturing investors, guaranteeing access to large markets. For companies making decisions about the location of a European Head Office, the country's ability to be at the centre of economic and political development of Europe is of critical importance. This may detract companies from choosing the UK".

This week's shenanigans do nothing for our image as good Europeans, but they will continue this weekend and every day of the short time that the present wretched Government remain in office.

Our congested and crumbling transport infrastructure is a huge problem for business. As I travel around Britain meeting business people, they tell me that that is one of their main difficulties.

The CBI is not alone in identifying Britain's low-skill economy as a problem for inward investors. Last month the Financial Times described Britain's "worrying skills gap which inward investors have been quick to experience."

As I go around the country employers tell me about bright young boys and girls whom they would like to take on but who do not have basic literacy and numeracy skills. The Labour party is determined that Britain will have an educated and skilled work force. It is no wonder that employers are concerned, when one third of teenagers cannot reach even the basic NVQ level 2 for literacy and numeracy, and Britain ranks with Turkey near the bottom of the European league for the numbers of 17 and 18-year-olds staying on in full-time higher education. When the President of the Board of Trade visits Singapore, he will have an opportunity to see how skills training is undertaken there and to bring back some valuable lessons.

If hon. Members want evidence from inward investors, perhaps they should heed the words of the chief executive of Siemens' UK company. Mr. Jurgen Gehrels made some important comments on the skills base. He said that any belief that the way forward for Britain was as a was totally unfounded.

"low skill and therefore low wage economy"

Mr. Tim Smith: Can the hon. Lady name one hon. Member or one serious political commentator who has ever suggested that the way forward was for Britain to be a low-skill, low-wage economy?

Mrs. Roche: I would name every hon. Member on the Conservative Benches. The entire purport of the Government's economic policy is to imply that Britain can compete as a low-wage, low-skill economy. Mr. Gehrels, whom I quoted, speaking on behalf of one of our major inward investors, said that that was the wrong road for Britain to go down.

Britain deserves a Government who can put matters right. We deserve a Government who will encourage inward investment and create a structure that supports business operations. We pay tribute to the Invest in Britain Bureau—an initiative established in 1977 by a Labour Government. Labour local authorities have played a decisive role in attracting inward investment. For example, Labour-controlled local authorities in the north-east have encouraged inward investment to replace industry that has been devastated by years of Conservative economic mismanagement. Siemens' investment in north Tyneside and Nissan's move to Tyne and Wear are good examples of such investment. That is why our programme of skills training for young people is so important. Our university for industry, "learn as you earn" accounts and high quality apprenticeships and traineeships will transform the skills of the British people.

Labour will create the right economic environment for attracting inward investment and encouraging long-term domestic investment. Our economy will not be modernised properly until Britain's investment record improves. As businesses up and down the country are discovering, Labour is serious about business. Under Labour, Britain will truly be open for business.

1.40 pm

The Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy (Mr. Richard Page): The President of the Board of Trade began his speech by comparing the world attitude to the United Kingdom in the 1970s with its attitude today. I came to the House in 1976 and I remember travelling abroad and meeting foreign Members of Parliament and industrialists who regarded us almost with pity, coupled with puzzlement that a great nation could behave in such an incredible fashion—I refer to the strikes, 26 per cent. inflation and the fact that we were viewed as the sick man of Europe.

As a Minister, virtually every week I see some overseas delegation—this week it was a delegation from India, last week from the Kansai region of Japan and the week before that a Swedish delegation. Every delegate asks, "Please tell us how you are doing it? What can we learn to take back to our countries?" That is the judgment that counts—not that of the Opposition or the media, but the world's judgment. It is why overseas companies are flocking to the United Kingdom to take advantage of the Government's open and free approach to trade and commerce. Those companies are producing quality British goods at a competitive price and selling them extensively throughout the world. It has reversed the down-trend that has plagued us for decades.

Trade and inward investment are two sides of the same coin. For Britain to have the right formula to spawn good business, we must have the right policy. When our trade and investment policy is right, business has the right attitude and assistance to enable it to succeed. My right hon. Friend referred to his aims for the Singapore ministerial meeting, and I am sure that all hon. Members wish him success. Success in opening up free trade will bring success for British industry which will be translated into jobs throughout the length and breadth of this country.

My right hon. Friend referred also to some of our inward investment successes. I shall mention only a small fraction of those as I do not have time to recite the whole list. BMW is not the only company to recognise the advantages of investing in the west midlands. Unipart, for example, recently announced another investment in Coventry that will create 150 new jobs in that area. In July this year, Unipart, Honda and its Japanese affiliates announced a joint venture programme worth £63 million. Another 150 jobs will be created at the new technology site at Coventry business park which will manufacture precision-engineered body components and sunroof assemblies for Honda. Those parts will be used on all new models of Honda vehicles manufactured at the Swindon plant and sold progressively across Europe from 1998.

The list continues. Indeed, it is a roll call of success. As sponsor Minister for Yorkshire and Humberside, I go to the region regularly. Whenever I go there I open more factories and more extensions. There is more growth and I announce more jobs coming into the region.

In October, K and L Microwave, an American company, announced plans to invest £4.6 million in a factory at Bridlington, east Yorkshire. This investment will create more than 170 new jobs over the next five years. Companies from Korea and Germany have also decided to invest in the region over the past 12 months.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, in his few words, said that he felt that there were two other announcements coming today. Literally hot off the press—this will be good news for the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths)—is the news that Sony will be announcing an expansion of its operations at Bridgend. It will be a £50 million investment, and promises the creation of almost 1,000 new jobs.

The 11 Members who represent Glasgow will be delighted to know that Polaroid will set up an international shared service centre in Glasgow which will create another 150 new jobs over the next three years. It is success, success and success.

Our success in attracting such investment is a tribute to the dedicated work of the Invest in Britain Bureau, regional development officers and the efforts of staff in overseas posts. I am glad that the hon. Members for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) and for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) both paid tribute to the work that is done by our overseas posts. We, the Government, see at close hand what they do. They have achieved magnificent results over past years and I am confident that they will do even better in the future.

That is only part of it. We must also have the ability to take advantage of inward investment. That means that we must have a good supply system from our smaller and medium-sized companies. That is why we have set up 10 regional supply offices in England. The organisation was set up in April 1995, and it is starting to produce more and more work for small and medium-sized businesses when they become involved in a supply chain that comes from inward investment.

The RSOs have an in-depth knowledge of their local supply base. They work closely with purchasers to identify precise purchasing needs and to match those needs with validated suppliers. The RSOs, therefore, can give independent and expert help on sourcing. They will help companies that are looking to set themselves up in operations in England. They will continue to help after their involvement is up and running.

I shall give an example. Samsung was looking to set up operations in the north-east. The local RSO helped to compile profiles on potential suppliers and organised some extremely well-attended seminars to brief local firms on how to do business with Samsung. As a result local firms won supply contracts worth £2.4 million.

There is another example of a United States company that was looking to set up a plant in the UK. It was helped by the east midlands RSO. That led to suppliers in the region securing business worth £2.7 million. There is a similar story involving the west midlands RSO, which has projects that have amounted to supply opportunities worth £3 million.

As a result of a great deal of activity inward investment has undoubtedly been able to source from the United Kingdom components that otherwise would have been imported. That has benefited inward investment companies and the UK economy. That is vital because we have a company profile that I wish to see changed.

We have a few large, well-run companies, but thereafter we come down to a broad base of about 3.6 million small companies. We must create larger small businesses. We must create a middle ground so that we have a company profile that is more of a triangle rather than an upturned golf tee. That is what I, as the Minister with responsibility for small businesses, want to happen. I have a keen interest in the work that we must do to encourage small businesses to export.

In business development in general, not just in terms of promoting export success, the role of the business link is crucial and is becoming ever more so. Business links act as local one-stop shops where businesses can go to access all the support programmes offered by the Government. To quote the Trade and Industry Select Committee:

"the establishment of Business Links is likely to be seen as one of the most important reforms of the 1990's. The creation of the network within a short space of time is a considerable achievement, and the potential for improving competitiveness is enormous".

Out of 87 partnerships nationwide, 48 now have their own export specialists. Export development counsellors enable business links to give tailored support to companies that have the motivation and ability to succeed in export markets. At present, 53 export development counsellors are in post and we have received bids for a further 20. We will grant those bids. Those counsellors will be recruited from the private sector, and they will have practical first-hand experience of exporting. EDCs see business people locally. They are familiar with local commerce and industry and speak business people's language.

Export development counsellors not only add value in their own right, through the specialised advice that they provide to companies, but help companies to plug into the whole range of overseas trade services, whether from DTI market desks or commercial posts overseas.

One of the best ways to make a case is to quote firm examples. Last December, Aston Fittings, a small company in Birmingham, contacted its EDC at its local business link. At the time, it was exporting very little but wanted to expand. After discussions with the company's director, Mr. Brown, the EDC suggested a three-pronged attack, making best use of all the resources available: to commission a market information inquiry from the relevant post to look into Malaysia and Indonesia; attend a DTI trade mission to Iran; and attend any FCO commercial duty officer visits that were relevant.

Following on from the market information inquiry, Mr. Brown contacted the companies listed and now exports regularly to Malaysia and Indonesia. The amounts involved are not vast, as it is only a small company—only £75,000 between them—but business is building. Aston Fittings hopes that exports to these two locations will exceed £120,000 in the next 12 months.

Having been on the DTI mission to Iran, Mr. Brown made several useful contacts, and Aston Fittings now has several regular export contracts with orders valued at more than £20,000 each and growing.

Two months ago, Mr. Brown was asked to meet a visiting officer from Kuwait. The officer gave him contacts in Qatar and Kuwait, as a direct result of which Mr. Brown has subsequently appointed distributors in both areas.

Since contacting its local business link, that one company, has had some £20,000-worth of help towards new CNC equipment, a £10,000 regional selective assistance grant and a £10,000 regional enterprise grant.

The business link was also able to direct the company to a local scheme run by Aston university—the teaching company scheme—whereby the company can employ a graduate for three years at approximately £10,000 per annum, the balance being paid for by the scheme. That is just one example of the way in which business links operate throughout the country.

Thousands of Mr. Browns are helped every year, and their increased export success is instrumental in ensuring the continued growth of our economy. Jobs will be created by small businesses growing into bigger businesses, thanks to our export policy. We want small companies to develop, to export, to train, to spread best practice, all on their own, and help to set standards and take their rightful place in the supply chain. My hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) quite rightly stressed the importance of home-grown investment. I want United Kingdom companies to take advantage of the supply chain opportunities created by inward investment. It is no good hundreds of companies creating work and making a particular product, if small businesses do not take advantage of that supply chain, and do not supply those companies with goods and products that can, in turn, be sold abroad.

I shall deal with some of the points raised during the debate. I look the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) straight in the eye when I say that he made his usual, delightful, friendly but rambling speech. At one point he referred to Chairman Mao, gave a little touch of Browning at another, and ended up with scampering mice. He tried to muddy the waters when he dealt with our success on inward investment. I shudder to think what message he was trying to send to any would-be investor in this country. In a moment of desperation he tried to pray in aid De Lorean as a Labour success with inward investment. Looking him straight in the eye, I have to say that that was a bridge too far.

Mr. Bell: We rewrite history quickly, even within hours. I certainly did not say that.

Mr. Page: The hon. Gentleman led us to believe that De Lorean was a gleaming jewel in the crown of Labour policy on inward investment.

I can help the hon. Gentleman on inward acquisitions and their effect on the volume shown by the figures. Inward investment acquisitions represented 13 per cent. of last year's total. That will add 1,178 new jobs—I am suspicious of the exactitude of that calculation—to the 16,797 jobs that will be safeguarded by those acquisitions.

The hon. Gentleman's enthusiasm for the social chapter was evident. Businesses up and down the country will take note of what he said. Continental employers know just what burdens that puts on business, and how those burdens destroy competitiveness. They are pleading with their Government to get rid of them. Hans-Olaf Henkel, president of the BDI, the German employers federation, said:

"we have too rigid labour laws. We have too high social costs and taxes. We work the shortest week in Europe. The German government spends 50 per cent. of GDP as opposed to 42 per cent. in Britain. No wonder we have a problem."

He is absolutely right.

A week ago, I was in the north of England. A British company had bought a German company, had taken all the equipment from that company, and had established it in the north. The 100 jobs that will be created there will be lost to Germany, because of the high costs of operating in Germany. By his enthusiasm for the social chapter, the hon. Gentleman promises, with unerring accuracy, what will cause the most damage. The Labour party is in favour of imposing those burdens.

The Labour party would sign up to the social chapter immediately. It would enthusiastically accept the working time directive. It would roll over, and say yes to the burdens on business that the social chapter and the working time directive would impose. Coming down the bulging pipeline is the directive to shift the burden of proof in sex discrimination cases. An employer will have to prove that he or she has not discriminated against any individual. Apart from being a huge burden on business, that is a breathtaking breach of natural justice as practised in this country.

EU Commissioner Flynn is up front about his social action agenda. As a first step, he wants to remove the derogations that we have succeeded in including in the working time directive. As a result, offshore workers would be unable to work in the way that they are used to, and, dare I say it, in the way that they want to work.

Labour claims that it can pick and choose from the social chapter, that it can take what it wants and reject what it does not like. It is either misinformed or is being misleading because that cannot be done. The proposals that I have mentioned are covered by qualified majority voting and Britain, under a Labour Government, would be powerless to stop them. The social chapter is not an a la carte menu: the tariff must be paid in its entirety or not at all. If it is accepted the bill would be high and it would send our inward investors running for cover, as would the minimum wage. That is another dish on Labour's menu without prices. Labour menaces British employers with it but it is too ashamed to say at what level the minimum wage would be set. However Labour knows that it would cost jobs.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) said that he had a fixed constituency engagement and would have to leave before the end of the debate. He came to the House clutching his Library brief rather than a Conservative central office brief—both of which are good, solid documents. My hon. Friend hammered out the realities, which bear repeating time and again. Some 43 per cent. of investment into the European Union is to the United Kingdom while Germany gets 3 per cent. Which country has the social chapter and which has a free and open approach? As my hon. Friend said, 9.5 per cent. of total world investment comes to this sceptred isle. We should be proud of that and blazon forth the accolade at every opportunity.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will be far too busy to send the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) a postcard from Singapore. If I endeavoured to answer the hon. Gentleman's host of questions, time would soon run out. He was right to ask about the effect of inward investment on our manufacturing base. In addition to my comments about regional supply and how it will help small and medium-sized businesses to grow, I can tell the hon. Gentleman that one fifth of manufacturing output and two fifths of our exports are produced by overseas-owned manufacturers. Some 40 per cent. of our manufactured exports are by companies that have come to this country. That is an astounding figure and it reinforces the importance of the Government's inward investment policy and justifies it.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West rightly spoke about the powerful message in the much-quoted research brief. I looked at my hon. Friend as he was speaking and saw no reason at all why he should not still be here in 2020 giving the House an update on present programmes. He mentioned another matter that is not often quoted. In this country we have a hang-up about taking pride in our successes. Inward investment is a huge success and we should be prepared to say so time and again. Let us shout it from the rooftops.

The hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) is a civilised man. He was able to complete the quotation that his hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough could not remember. In his few comments, he allowed his journalistic training to take over.

Mr. Tim Smith: He is a rat.

Mr. Page: The hon. Member for Rotherham is a Chinese rat; he is not a British rat. However, his journalistic training took him a little too far. Calling us the "Albania of Europe" was slightly extreme.

The hon. Member for Rotherham said that we are on a "rollercoaster of inflation". For a few moments, my breath was taken away. I was elected to the House in 1976, in a by-election in Workington. The only reason why that rock-solid Labour seat was returned to a Conservative Member is that the then Labour Government had established a 26 per cent. inflation rate. For the past four or five years, we have had the lowest and most stable inflation rate for decades, yet the hon. Gentleman refers to it as a "rollercoaster". As I said, it is journalistic exaggeration.

The hon. Member for Rotherham took refuge in figures of a selective if not—dare I say it—a dodgy nature. He was critical of the Government's performance on inflation. He then raised, and skated round, the issue of a minimum wage. He prayed in aid what was happening in the United States, and the "massive rise" in the minimum wage level there.

Mrs. Roche: No, he did not.

Mr. Page: He did, although I am sure that he did so accidentally. I have it in my notes. He accidentally omitted to mention that the "massive rise" in the United States took its minimum wage to £2.84. Wow—what a large increase! I should have liked for him to come clean and to tell us exactly what the Labour party's minimum wage would be. I am waiting to hear that answer. I see that he is counting up his figures, but I can tell him that the figure for the United States is $4.75, which would translate to £2.84.

Mr. MacShane: I did not want to speak again in this debate, but I must correct that error. The figure is $5.15. When it was set, the exchange rate would have made the value in sterling about £3.10—if the Minister wants the exact figure. Since then, however, sterling has been shooting upwards, making it even more difficult for our exporters.

Mr. Page: As I understand it—I should again like to help the hon. Gentleman—that is the figure that will apply from September 1997; it is not the current figure. However, regardless of whether the pound has appreciated, the rate is set at a very low figure in the United States. I leave it to the hon. Gentleman to remember, when next he wishes to pray in aid the United States minimum wage, just how low that rate is—it is low enough to be irrelevant—and to have the courage to quote the Labour party's policy on a minimum wage.

My hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen)—unfortunately, I had to pop out of the Chamber while he made his speech—mentioned the importance and value of the aid and trade provision. He rightly said that we should concentrate ATP on bilateral trade. About half of our £2 billion aid budget is bilateral. The other half, obviously, is multilateral, which enables us to fulfil many of our international obligations.

The hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) is not a political soulmate of mine—or of most Conservative Members. But his call for higher taxation was—in civil service language—"courageous, brave and breathtaking." He was absolutely right to mention our level of trade with the rest of the European Union and how important that trade is for our industries. Many hon. Members could firmly take on board that message.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) made the case for free trade. In doing so, he touched on a vital point that had not been mentioned before in the debate: the issue of productivity, and of how inward investment is made in the United Kingdom, improving quality and productivity. That is absolutely vital if we are to take our place in the world markets on a competitive basis. I am glad to be able to tell him that, whereas we were something like 100 per cent. or half as unproductive as the Germans, the latest figures show that the gap has closed. We have improved by some 80 per cent. or 40 per cent., depending on where one puts the baseline. My hon. Friend's figures are therefore already out of date—we have already started to move up the tables.

I deal now with the remarks of the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), my alter ego in terms of the small business world. She spoke about deregulation, and I concur with much of what she said. Small businesses do suffer from over-regulation, but the Government are doing what they can to remove any burdens. The deregulation unit is doing sterling work in trying to ensure that any regulations are the least burdensome possible.

We live in an increasingly complex world, however. While something in the region of 1,000 regulations will be gone by the end of this year, we have to have some regulations. In response to a question on Wednesday, I mentioned the regulation to stop carcinogenic materials going into babies' dummies and the regulation to make sure that gas and electrical appliances are safe. However, in order to show the spirit of co-operation that I bring to all things, if the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green would like to tell me of any regulations that she would like removed, I would be only too willing to give them my active consideration. In view of her comments about extra regulations, she must have a huge list of them which will no doubt be on my desk at 9 am on Monday.

Mr. Stephen: You'll be lucky.

Mr. Page: I always travel in hope.

The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green was slightly confused about our policy on inward investment and the fact that we give parts of the country a choice. We do not believe in the corporate state or in telling companies that they have to go to a certain area and cannot go anywhere else. If the hon. Lady looks back in time to a period under a Government who did get involved in directing companies to which areas they should go, she will find a list of failures.

Most of the problems in the steel industry were caused by the steel companies being directed to go to certain parts of the country. The failure of the Bathgate plant shows how the motor industry was interfered with. The same is true of the Fort William pulp mill and the Invergordon smelter. I remind the House of the huge success of the policy of giving direction when the Government of the day got involved in the National Enterprise Board—what a disaster. I do not believe that a single project made any money.

This has been a valuable debate. I hope that hon. Members will take away one key message—the recipe for success is to let enterprise flourish at home and abroad. That is how we will keep our economy dynamic and competitive and help British companies become world beaters in overseas markets, and it is why we shall keep the world's investors knocking at our door. Our agenda for trade liberalisation is a vital component of that. When my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade goes to Singapore today, I, the House and the country will be looking to him to press that agenda and advance our goal of global free trade. I am confident that British business, now set free, will be able to do the rest.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Lord Commissioner to the Treasury): I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Emergency Medical Arrangements (Edgware)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wells.]

2.14 pm

Sir John Gorst (Hendon, North): The Government's plans for dealing with emergency arrangements in the Edgware district came on to the agenda shortly after the 1992 general election, and they have been there ever since. The issue has broadened from one relating to the facilities provided by a hospital to the local population, and now encompasses the whole question of how individual Members of Parliament can represent the unanimous wishes of their constituents to Ministers. Above all, it raises the question: what can a Member of Parliament do if, having received assurances from Ministers, and made them public, he discovers that such assurances will not be honoured or have been seriously distorted?

The matter goes to the heart of the relationship between a Member of Parliament and the Government of the day. Over broad swathes of public policy, Members of Parliament are expected to defer to the power of the Executive because of the Executive's greater knowledge, superior resources and wider strategic grasp. On the other hand, it has always been acknowledged that, in understanding and interpreting local sentiment, a Member of Parliament has a unique authority—one that no Department can ever match. When, in addition to that, Members of Parliament have negotiated a settlement with a Minister that safeguards their constituents, it is no light matter to discover that the Executive proposes to misconstrue—let alone ignore—the terms of that settlement.

No Member of Parliament can retain a shred of legitimacy with his constituents if he is prepared to accept such a one-sided relationship. To do so would render the constituency Member of Parliament a redundant species. One might as well have a bureaucrat, nominated by the Government—a cipher who would see it as his duty to sacrifice the interests of his constituents to the convenience of the Executive.

The facts of the matter that I am raising are plain. From 1992 to 1994, I argued privately with local health authority officials against their plans for Edgware general hospital. The plans enjoyed no local support whatever—and that is universally conceded. I also took delegations to see Ministers, and I had a comprehensive Adjournment debate on the subject on 18 March 1994. I left no stone unturned to explain the special features that justified the pleas being made to Ministers.

At that stage, Ministers took refuge in the doctrine of the unripe time. Repeatedly, over many months, Ministers claimed that the matter had not reached their level for a decision and they would not intervene. Then, in the spring of 1995, after less than a week's reflection, brushing aside all protests and arguments put to her, the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Surrey (Mrs. Bottomley), sanctioned the closure of the accident and emergency department. The time had become ripe to ignore my constituents' wishes and needs completely. Naturally, I then voted against the Government.

When a new Secretary of State was appointed, my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and I, who have never accepted the foolish decision, headed another delegation to Richmond house. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was reassuring and emollient; he promised to look again. The necessary adjustments, although significant and vital for my constituents, required only a modest change by the Government.

Six months elapsed. Nothing seemed to be happening; so my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East and I, conscious of the rapid approach of the safe waters of the summer recess—safe waters, that is, for the Government—had another meeting with the Secretary of State. This time, we received specific assurances and promises: there would be a casualty department capable of saving lives. In June this year, we had at last obtained promises that a potentially life-saving casualty unit would replace the existing A and E department when it closes early next year. Alas, that is not, unfortunately, the end of the story. Less than another six months later, we are now told something entirely different. We are informed that we are back to a MATS—a minor accident treatment service—unit. We are back to a service that will do little more than bandage cuts and bruises.

I cannot see how, in honour, the Government can deny any of this. Indeed, I assume that they will be reduced to claiming that my hon. Friend and I have deluded ourselves; that we have got into a semantic muddle; that, although promised merely a MATS unit, we mistakenly supposed that the Secretary of State was promising us a casualty unit; or, least plausible of all, that if a MATS unit is sufficiently embellished with frills, such as GPs, longer hours and extra funds, it somehow upgrades itself—in short, that it becomes something that it is not. I am afraid that none of that will wash. The range of our discussions would make such an elementary confusion illogical and implausible.

I do not rest my argument purely on an appeal to logic. I made careful and detailed notes of what the Secretary of State promised us in our talks with him during that evening of 11 June. I propose to quote from the notes that I made immediately after the meeting, only pausing to say that the Secretary of State will, no doubt, have his own record of the meeting. One of his officials was present and taking notes. I have little doubt that, if the two versions were published, they would prove to be virtually identical.

From my notes, the crucial point of the discussion is clear. What I noted is as follows:

"Having referred throughout to 'emergency service', 'emergency unit' and so on the Secretary of State concluded by saying that 'casualty department' was his preferred phrase to describe what we had been discussing. It was best understood by everyone. He also favoured the phrase because it distinguished between an A and E Trauma Centre and a MATS Unit".

I shall repeat the last passage:

"the Secretary of State concluded by saying that 'casualty department' was his preferred phrase to describe what we had been discussing . . . because it distinguished between . . . Trauma Centre and a MATS Unit".

Not only did the Secretary of State promise us a casualty unit; he was also thoughtful enough to caution us against any possible confusion between a casualty unit and a MATS unit. Indeed, that distinction appears again and again in subsequent letters that I have sent to him.

On 3 August, I wrote:

"May I emphasise once again: a MATS unit dealing with minor injuries would be completely unacceptable and contrary to what was understood between us in June. MATS units are not for saving lives: emergency casualty units are."

Two months later, on 4 October, I wrote:

"All along Hugh Dykes"—

my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East—

"and I have made it clear that we are arguing for a casualty service which is capable of handling emergencies".

On 25 November, I reiterated that point:

"Throughout our discussions on 11th June we talked about an emergency unit: about an 'enhanced emergency unit'—but never about 'enhancing a minor accident unit'. Both Hugh Dykes and I agree that enhancing a MATS unit with doctors and more hours cannot possibly be construed as turning it into an emergency unit in the sense we discussed with you."

Only in the past few days has the Secretary of State taken the trouble to dispute that. A cynical observer might say that, if one is leading someone up the garden path, one does not tell that person what lies at the end of it—but I acquit my right hon. Friend of such deviousness. Nevertheless, I am still at a loss to find a convincing explanation for the yawning gap between his perception and ours.

The position is, therefore, blindingly clear. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East and I asked for a casualty unit and we were promised a casualty unit by the Secretary of State. We were told that the Secretary of State drew the clearest possible distinction between a casualty unit and a MATS unit; yet we now have a MATS unit, and not the casualty unit that we were promised.

There can no confusion about the fact that that is a straightforward example of breaking a pledge. It is not something to be brushed aside as a matter only of my injured feelings. Naturally, my constituents are indignant too—and so they should be. They have been misled and it would not be surprising if many of them thought that their Conservative Member of Parliament had deliberately deceived them.

How do the Government wish me to defend myself? Do they wish me to say that I told my constituents what I believed to be the truth, but that the Conservative Government deliberately took my hon. Friend and me for a ride? Do they want me to tell my constituents that, despite the fact that they understand as clearly as does the Secretary of State the difference between a MATS unit, which they do not want, and a casualty unit, which they do, they should put up with the former because they cannot expect the Secretary of State to keep his promises in the face of administrative pressure on him not to do so?

This matter is one of the gravest concern to our whole system of constituency representation, because, unless the Government can tell me that they are prepared to honour the pledges they made to my constituents through me, I must take the view that the mutual obligations that exist between us are at an end. The Government will have abrogated them unilaterally. They will have done so to the discredit of every Back Bencher in the House—and to their own shame.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in this debate. To follow my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North (Sir J. Gorst) is an honour and it gives me great pleasure to be able to do so—pleasure in the sense of being able to pay tribute to him for having taken the lead in this campaign and for having responded to the finest duties that a local Member of Parliament can carry out for his constituents. That is the extent of the pleasure—the rest of it and the Government's response throughout have been nothing but pain.

I shall probably be regarded as thick-skinned—one has to be in order to be a politician in these febrile and turbulent times—in respect both of national policies and of many local and constituency issues, but I agree with every word that my hon. Friend said in this important Adjournment debate. We have had a good number of such debates in this painful period. I pay tribute to his leadership; I have taken a lesser role. We have doggedly stuck to our objectives in this matter, with full justification.

I feel profound disillusionment, and bitterness and resentment, at the crass and incompetent reactions of my right hon. and hon. Friends the Health Ministers, whatever the reason for them—it remains a mystery. My bitterness, disillusionment and resentment at such prolonged incompetence, despite the force of our arguments, of the local campaign and of justified objective medical opinion in respect of the insistence that there should be a casualty department—

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wells.]

Mr. Dykes: The resentment that I feel is reinforced by the latest letter that we have received—yesterday evening, I believe—from the Secretary of State. I shall not weary the House by going through it in detail. There is no need to do so, because, although it has two pages, it says nothing; I shall place it in the Library as a record of a wonderful "Yes, Minister" response. I remember the validity of some of those underlying arguments about the behaviour of civil servants and Ministers, despite the humour of the programme.

Sir John Gorst: May I draw my hon. Friend's attention to the fact that, in the last sentence of the letter, there is a little bit of hope? The Secretary of State writes:

"I trust that following your adjournment debate tomorrow we shall be able to make some progress on these issues."

Mr. Dykes: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. That would be so, but for the preceding paragraphs, because they are the most wonderful officialese attempt to resist any of our reasonable requests. I quote from the third paragraph on the second page:

"Against that background"—

the long-running argument on the subject—

"I have sought to respond to the concerns expressed to me on behalf of local people by all the MPs of the area".

We had several of our colleagues with us at the start of the campaign, but the pressures made them melt away, for one reason or another. I hope that they will rejoin us. The letter continues:

"as well as by other representative voices from the community. The demonstrator project which I have detailed represents a significant commitment of central resources to the Edgware area, and a serious attempt by the NHS to respond to the concerns which have been expressed."

That and other parts of the letter are outrageous, unacceptable and untrue and they do not meet the wishes of the local population and of their two parliamentary representatives, and, I believe, of all the local councillors and almost all the members of the community health council in my hon. Friend's constituency—but it is not my constituency, so I must be careful not to misquote.

I fully share my hon. Friend's indignation. In his letter to me of 20 November, he kindly asked to take the lead in this campaign, as he has done ably in the past. I respect that and I respect his need to be in the vanguard of the campaign, in response to legitimate local public opinion. The idea that we should be deaf to local opinion and contemptuously dismiss it on the national and local scene is an absurd notion of our collective and individual role in politics.

As my hon. Friend did in his letter to the Secretary of State of 25 November, I draw attention to the crucial reference in the notes that he took, thoroughly and with great skill. I testify to the absolute exactitude of those notes and thank my hon. Friend for taking them and for allowing me to have the original copies. He wrote in section 4 of the additional notes:

"Throughout our discussion," the hon. Member for Harrow, East

"and I"—

my hon. Friend—

"made it clear we were asking for something more than a 'minor accident treatment service', even if it was less than a full-scale 'accident and emergency Department'."

The Secretary of State

"accepted this, and we talked about 'acute needs', 'motorway accidents', 'heart attacks', 'severe allergies', and so on.

The phrase 'enhanced emergency unit' was used repeatedly, so I think he got the message as to what we were after. Indeed, he was emphatic that he would be able to agree to this. The only reservation he expressed was that a serious motorway accident would be most likely"— logically, of course—

"to go straight to the nearest A & E unit in an ambulance, and we accepted that."

I earnestly repeat, although I will not spell out, what my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North has just said in his detailed speech. Indeed, his speech was a detailed submission in the high court of Parliament, because all that he said was evidential and it is on the record as what was agreed.

We have shown some good will, despite the resentment and disappointment since the summer and the feeling that the Government were going back, cynically or perhaps for some other reason which has still not been explained, into old territory and promising only a very limited facility, not that in the original undertaking. Those prolonged discussions between me, my hon. Friend, the Secretary of State and other Ministers in the Department ended in deadlock on Tuesday night. That was the end of the road as far as we were concerned, unless the Government were prepared to make a proper, thorough, comprehensive, written response to our reasonable requests.

There are pressures on the local community from other elements in politics—legitimately or not, as other people may judge. This is an opportunity for the Government and the Department of Health, because the Opposition have merely said that they will review the closure of the existing accident and emergency unit. They do not go significantly beyond that. The issue shows the value of the Government thinking again about the cynical departure from their pledge of 11 June.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North and I tabled almost identical parliamentary questions for priority written answer on 3 December. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied that the health authority had proposed that

"The casualty service at Edgware, originally planned as a nurse-led service open 13 hours a day, should instead open 24 hours a day and be staffed by doctors;"—[Official Report, 3 December 1994; Vol. 286, c. 29.]

That is not a casualty unit in the genuine sense of the word, only a minor accident treatment service unit. I believe that I am right in saying that a new MATS unit has recently been opened nearby at Wembley. The last thing we need is two MATS units and fully qualified doctors on duty 24 hours a day to treat people coming in for cuts and bruises—the walking wounded with mild wounds indeed. This makes me extremely angry and I expect a proper, honest and thorough response from my hon. Friend the Minister today.

I am sorry that the Secretary of State or perhaps even the Minister of State is not here to answer the debate; but I admit that this is a Friday Adjournment debate, so we accept the Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Horam)—provided that he comes up with the goods and gives us a proper answer.

I have sent my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State a letter today. I hope that he will receive it today, but he may do so later because of the Friday delays in the internal delivery service between Departments and the House. The letter insists and asks with justification—those two verbs go together—that the Government respond to the request of my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North. It is not necessary to read it out, but I say two crucial things about it. The letter belongs to him, as it had a private and confidential notation. It is therefore his property. To allay any residual doubts about what was undertaken in the summer, why does my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State not publish the letter to my hon. Friend and me of 11 June, which promised a casualty emergency services facility? I wait for my hon. Friend the Minister to respond on that specific point. I hope that he will do so today or as soon as possible.

I wish to give my hon. Friend the Minister time to respond to the weighty points that we have made on behalf of our local public. We are waiting for a clear answer today, not further procrastination, bureaucratic postponement or further studies agreeing with the district health authority, which has behaved so badly. We are waiting for action and a decision now.

In that context, the Minister may be tempted to repeat the implausible and dubious assertion that the Secretary of State cannot do much once the local entities and agencies—the district health authorities and the others—have come to their decision, after the legal process of consultation. That is not so and I remind my hon. Friend the Minister that the Secretary of State has the necessary reserve powers in the legislation, if circumstances justify invoking them. I believe that these circumstances justify doing so.

The proposal for a MATS unit is totally unacceptable. The congestion in that area makes the distance of the new Barnet facilities, the Northwick Park hospital and the Royal Free hospital too far for people with life-threatening emergencies to be conveyed there in time. It is an extremely congested zone with many elderly residents, so we need the emergency facilities to remain at Edgware, albeit in their new form if the existing A and E unit closes—may I say, in parenthesis, that I recommend that the Government consider postponing the closure of that A and E unit anyway?

Section 17 of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended by the Health Authorities Act 1995, provides the Secretary of State with reserve powers to take the action necessary. Sections 1 and 3 of the 1977 Act emphasise that the Secretary of State has the legal duty to provide a comprehensive service to meet local needs. I emphasise that section 13 empowers the Secretary of State to devolve functions to health authorities, but the specific provisions of section 17 empower him or her to make directions specifying how those functions are to be carried out—in other words, how the services are to be provided, with detailed specifications. Section 17(2) highlights the duty of any health authority to comply with the Secretary of State's directions, which can be as detailed as the circumstances require.

Time is now getting short. There are already disturbing signs of a collapse—or at least a severe fall—in morale among members of staff at that hospital, an erosion of the quality of services for which Edgware general was famous, and a deepening psychological crisis within the accident and emergency unit. It is therefore the duty of any Government, particularly if they assert repeatedly that the national health service is safe in their hands, to do something about that. We await the Government's response.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. John Horam): As my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) said, we have had a number of Adjournment debates on this matter. As he will recall, I have already replied to one of those, which he initiated. Until today, however, I had not had the pleasure of replying to an Adjournment debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North (Sir J. Gorst), but I know of his continuing concern about the issue.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North dealt, centrally, with the issue of emergency medical care. I should like to consider for a moment the original consultation carried out by Barnet and Brent and Harrow health authorities in 1994. My hon. Friend started the debate by mentioning the history of the project. We have been considering that consultation exercise, on which the changes in service at Edgware were based.

[Mr. John Horam]

The consultation document made some important points. It said that there is a growing acknowledgement that fewer centres, with a larger population base and a higher number of emergency cases attending them, provide an improved service. That is not just what Barnet and Brent and Harrow health authorities thought; it is what the evidence shows.

That evidence is substantial. A report by the Royal College of Surgeons in 1988, called "The Management of Patients with Major Injuries", said:

"there are far too many small units treating serious injuries and we consider that smaller departments should be closed or have their ability to treat major injuries restricted."

In March 1995, the Department of Health published a review of the literature on accident and emergency departments and clinical outcomes. I am sure that both my hon. Friends are equally concerned about clinical outcomes. The review stated that "existing research . . . has been enough to mould a consensus, shared by many professional staff and by health authority managers, that larger accident and emergency departments offer better care to seriously ill or injured patients."

That was the context for proposing that there should be a new accident and emergency department at Barnet general hospital, and that the accident and emergency department at Edgware general hospital should close when the new unit opened. The then Secretary of State for Health approved that proposal in April 1995. Since then, matters have moved forward.

Sir John Gorst: All that my hon. Friend says is fair, but one important thing that he leaves out is the social factor. The facilities were to be removed from an area that was deprived in many ways—in terms of income, old age and an immigrant population—but the most important factor was the transport that would take people in an emergency to a nearby A and E department. That problem is not solved by anything that my hon. Friend has said.

Mr. Horam: I shall deal with transport in a moment. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East also raised the matter in the debate that he initiated.

I have described the situation with regard to Barnet general hospital. Edgware will have a new type of local hospital—one that provides a wide range of services for local people. Its services will include a casualty service. The unit at Edgware will be open 24 hours a day. It will have doctors in attendance.

Those are not the features of the original proposals put forward by Barnet health authority, which were for a nurse-led service open only 13 hours a day. Thus, the original proposals have been revised and improved, which represents a real commitment to listening and responding to local wishes. The proposals are in line with my right hon. Friend's assurances to both my hon. Friends. The words were explicitly mentioned in the letter of June this year, which my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North mentioned.

I should say to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East that, although I cannot speak for my right hon. Friend in this debate on this particular matter, I do not believe that he would have any objection to publishing the June letter.

Mr. Dykes: The letter refers—I can give the paragraph reference, if my hon. Friend wishes—to the provision of a casualty service and specifically not to a minor accident treatment service.

Mr. Horam: Indeed, the letter uses the word "casualty". My hon. Friend refers to the distinction that I have just made—the uprating of the existing proposals along the lines that I described.

Sir John Gorst: My hon. Friend the Minister has made an important change in the position because of what he has just said to my hon. Friend. As recently as the night before last, the Secretary of State declined absolutely to permit the letter to be published. Is my hon. Friend now saying that my right hon. Friend has had second thoughts? That is an important factor in demonstrating to a wider public exactly what we were promised.

Mr. Horam: As I said, I cannot speak for my right hon. Friend in this debate, and I have not been privy to any conversations that might have taken place between my two hon. Friends and my right hon. Friend. I do not know what was said on those occasions, but I am saying off the cuff that I do not believe that my right hon. Friend would object to the publication of the letter on his own account. I am merely stating that opinion.

Obviously, transport is a matter of concern—in a sense, access to services is as important as the services themselves. Under the new arrangements, no Barnet resident will need to travel more than six miles to an A and E department. The Wellhouse trust provides a bus service for patients, visitors and staff between the Barnet and Edgware sites. The service, which supplements existing public transport links, will be maintained and improved.

In addition, the Department of Health has commissioned a survey to provide reliable information about journey times and optimum travel routes for people travelling by car from the Edgware hospital catchment area to each of the hospitals that they may need to travel to—that is, Barnet, Northwick Park and the Royal Free. The survey will also provide comparative information about public transport travel times. The survey data will be used to assist the health authorities in providing information to the public about travel times and optimum modes and routes of travel for Edgware residents to the other hospitals.

There has also been work by a project group comprising the health authorities, trusts and local authorities along with London Regional Transport, community health councils and disability groups. The group has identified areas for action in both public transport and special needs transport. A particular aim is to ensure that there are reasonable public transport routes for people who may have difficulty changing buses. As a result of the group's work, discussions are taking place with London Regional Transport with a view to implementing improved bus services between Edgware and Barnet. Work in that area is progressing. I stress that the public transport services will be in addition to the existing Wellhouse trust free bus service from Edgware to Barnet.

The group will undertake a further review and evaluation of the adequacy of transport services in the six months after implementation of the planned changes—including a survey of the transport needs of hospital users and visitors and their level of satisfaction—which will provide an opportunity to initiate more action if that is required. I also draw to my hon. Friends' attention the fact that health authorities are spending no less than £320,000 on improving the London Ambulance Service in their area. I understand that they will provide two extra ambulances and crews to help meet demand in the immediate area.

I have already mentioned that Edgware will have a new type of hospital, and I shall now enlarge on that statement.

Mr. Dykes: My hon. Friend has accepted that there should be a full casualty service, and we are grateful to him for making that promise on the record. In order to avoid any future doubts and procrastination, will he list specifically the conditions that will be treated by the new casualty emergency service at Edgware general when the old unit is closed?

Mr. Horam: I am about to do precisely that.

The hospital will include general out-patient services and a diagnostic and therapy service—for example, radiology. It will also provide day surgery; a breast-screening service; elderly and rehabilitation services; and a range of mental health services, including in-patient units, outreach and assessment services, a base for community mental health teams and a brain injury rehabilitation unit. There will also be children's services, including specialist out-patient clinics and an education and information centre.

That is not all. As my hon Friends know, Barnet health authority is submitting an application for central funding for a demonstrator project at Edgware general hospital, with a number of key elements. First, the casualty service will be open 24 hours a day—I have mentioned that already—and, secondly, a low-risk maternity unit will be provided to allow mothers to give birth close to home. Thirdly, there will be a GP-type admissions unit to provide in-patient beds, to meet the immediate needs of elderly people living locally.

Mr. Dykes: What injuries will be treated by the casualty unit? What services will it provide?

Mr. Horam: It will provide a normal casualty service. My hon. Friend should understand that it is not an A and E department: it will treat the injuries normally dealt with by a casualty service.

Mr. Dykes: What does that mean?

Mr. Horam: As I am not a doctor, it is difficult for me to distinguish between which injuries will be treated by a casualty service and which will be treated at an A and E department. I think that my hon. Friends will be aware, however, that an A and E department would be dealing with trauma, life-threatening accidents and emergencies of that sort while a casualty service would be dealing with something less. That is the distinction that we are making.

Mr. Dykes: We are going backwards.

Mr. Horam: We are not going backwards.

I refer again to the assurances that were given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friends. My right hon. Friend said clearly in June that a casualty service would be supplied with doctor cover. That was the essence of the promise, and that is exactly what we are talking about. My hon. Friends will be aware that that was set out in a statement made by Barnet health authority on 25 September. The statement was welcomed by my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North. He will recall the press statement that he issued at that time, in which he specifically welcomed the casualty service that Barnet health authority then stated clearly would be provided. That is the health authority service that I am talking about.

Sir John Gorst: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Horam: I do not want to mislead my hon. Friends in any way.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East asked specifically what the service would include. It will include precisely what was indicated in the statement of 25 September.

Sir John Gorst: The statement in which I welcomed the casualty department to which my hon. Friend is referring was before it was made perfectly clear by the local health authority that it would not be dealing with anything other than MATS placements. That made all the difference in the world. I was still operating on the assumption that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State had defined things as we understood them on 11 June.

Mr. Horam: My understanding and my clear view, as someone looking at the matter from outside, as it were—obviously there have been conversations and discussions between my hon. Friends and my right hon. Friend for some time—is that what is being said here is exactly in line with the assurances given by my right hon. Friend. It would be wrong—

Mr. Dykes: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Horam: I have little time left. I have two more points to make before I shall give way to my hon. Friend.

First, the assurances that were given in June are exactly what is being delivered and what was intended by the health authority statement of 25 September. My right hon. Friend sticks by that. Secondly, my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North referred to the letter that both my hon. Friends received from my right hon. Friend only yesterday or today, as the case may be. I shall quote two specific sentences. My hon. Friend quoted one paragraph,

[Mr. Horam]

I think somewhat unfairly, and I shall quote, as I said, two other sentences.

At the bottom of the first page, the letter reads:

"I anticipate receiving the formal application from the health authority"— that is, Barnet health authority. That was in the few weeks before the proposals that we have been discussing. The letter continues:

"When it arrives I would of course be happy to discuss the proposals further with you in order to ensure that the demonstrator project reflects as accurately as possible the wishes of local people."

Secondly, my right hon. Friend adds:

"In addition, therefore, to discussing the details of the demonstrator project with you, I would also like to discuss how these arrangements for the enhancement of healthcare in the Edgware area should be implemented . . . I trust that following your adjournment debate tomorrow we shall be able to make some progress on these issues."

Mr. Dykes: In the spirit of co-operation—I thank my hon. Friend for his remarks—will he guarantee and undertake now that what we decide in any further discussions will be done immediately and will not be restricted to the district health authority's list of the items that it would cover in a minor accident treatment service, but will be a full emergency facilities casualty unit?

Mr. Horam: I cannot commit my right hon. Friend to that now in the final two minutes of an Adjournment debate. My hon. Friend is an old enough hand to know that that is beyond my power. Clearly, that is something that we shall want to raise with my right hon. Friend. I was pleased at least that my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North said that in using the word "hope", and attaching it to the final sentence of the letter, there is an opportunity for further discussion on this extremely important matter.

Both my hon. Friends made the point strongly that there is a unique role for a local Member in these circumstances. I hope that they will understand that, even though I am currently a member of the Government, I, too, well understand the role of a local Member of Parliament in a situation such as this, and understand the position that they have adopted. I hope therefore that they will see that what my right hon. Friend is saying will enable them to discuss the matter further. I hope that they can accept that in the spirit in which it is offered.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

PRIME MINISTER

Records (Royal Palaces)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what steps would be required to reclassify those records held at Windsor castle and other royal palaces that relate to constitutional events as public records; and if he will recommend such a change. [5660]

The Prime Minister: Such changes would require an amendment to the Public Records Act 1958, which defines pubic records. The Government have no plans to seek such an amendment.

Arms Export

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will transfer responsibility for enforcing monitoring controls on arms exports to countries violating human rights to a Department with no responsibility for promoting exports. [5880]

The Prime Minister: While the Department of Trade and Industry is the export licensing authority, responsibility for enforcement of export licensing controls lies with Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. The issue of where in Government responsibility for export licensing should lie is one of the matters on which views were sought in the consultative document. "Strategic Export Controls" (Command Paper 3349), presented to Parliament in July by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. The consultation closed on 31 October. When the results of the consultation have been fully considered, the Government will inform Parliament of our conclusions, including those on the issue of the location of the export licensing authority.

Public Interest Exemptions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will appoint an officer directly answerable to Parliament to investigate the use by Ministers of the public interest exemption. [6002]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's response to the Public Service Committee's report on ministerial accountability and responsibility, published on 7 November 1996. This makes it clear that if Ministers decline to provide a full answer in response to a parliamentary question, they should give reasons in line with the code of practice on access to government information. I do not believe that it would be appropriate for an officer directly answerable to Parliament to investigate ministerial judgments on the use of the public interest test as this would cut across the direct line of accountability of Ministers to this House.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will institute a procedure whereby his office is informed on every occasion that a Minister declines to give information to Parliament on grounds of public interest. [6001]

The Prime Minister: No. Individual Ministers are responsible for the answers that they give to the House on matters which fall within their area of official responsibility.

Open Government

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make it his policy that the code of practice on Government information is legally enforceable; [6004]

(2) if he will introduce a freedom of information Act. [6005]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's response to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration Select Committee's second report on open government, published on 7 November 1996. This makes it clear that the non-statutory approach taken by the code of practice on access to government information has proved an effective mechanism for ensuring greater openness.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Population

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison population for each year from 1990; and what estimate he has made of the prison population for the next three years. [128]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Clive Soley, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the prison population in each year from 1990; and what estimate he has made of the prison population for the next three years.

Projections of the long-term trends in the prison population to the year 2004 were published in Home Office statistical bulletin 4/96, a copy of which is available from the Library. Estimates updated in September for 2 years ahead, based on recent trends in the prison population, indicate that the average population in 1996/97 could be 56,800, rising to an average of 61,200 in 1997/98. Information for 1990/91 to 1995/96 is given in the attached table. Information on the average population by calendar years is published in "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (table 1.5 of the 1995 edition), a copy of which is available from the Library.

Average prison population[1] in England and Wales by financial years

Financial year	Average for the year	Lowest month end figure	Highest month end figure
1990–91	45,185	43,314	45,649
1991–92	46,472	45,204	47,746
1992–93	44,628	40,606	47,738

Average prison population[1] in England and Wales by financial years

1993–94	45,895	43,391	48,778
1995–96	51,644	49,949	53,740

Prison Service (Redundancies)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 641, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on Prison Service redundancies, what is the expected full cost in redundancy payments and pension commitments for around 1,300 staff who will be asked to leave under the voluntary early retirement and severance scheme. [4053]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. John Spellar, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the expected costs in redundancy payments and pension commitments for staff leaving the Prison Service under the VERSE scheme.

The total cost of the offers and potential offers to 1348 applicants for 1996–97 is £27,619,734. The total future costs for 1997–98 to 2006–7 is £18,589,859.

These costs are split between the Office of Public Service (OPS) and the Prison Service. The OPS share for 1996–97 amounts to £19,494,730 with the Prison Service contributing £8,125,004. The costs in future years are £3,584,494 to OPS and £15,005,365 to the Prison Service.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escapes by convicted prisoners took place in transit (i) between prisons and (ii) between courts and prisons, in the last year for which figures are available and for the year before contractorisation of the prisoner transport system (a) in total prison numbers and (b) as a proportion of the prison population moved in each year. [3391]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 November 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. David Porter, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many escapes by convicted prisoners took place in transit between prisons and between courts and prisons, in the last year for which figures are available and for the year before contractorisation of the prisoner transport system in total prison numbers and as a proportion of the prison population moved in each year.

The information you requested is not available in the form that you require. Information on the total numbers of prisoners moved annually is not collected centrally and can only be provided at disproportionate cost. We do keep central records of escapes, but before this year did not always record whether the escort was between prisons or between courts and prisons. The attached table shows escapes by convicted prisoners which took place in transit between prisons and between courts and prisons. But in 1992–93 there were two escapes from escorts where central records do not show the destination.

Contracting out of escorts has been phased in over a number of years. There are eight contract areas, the first was contracted out on 5 April 1993 and the final and only remaining area will start on 1 April 1997. These contractors, however, deal mainly with unconvicted prisoners.

Category A escorts, inter–prison escorts, funeral escorts, hospital escorts and home visits are currently still carried out by the public sector.

KPI escapes by convicted prisoners

Year	Between prisons	Between prison court
1992–93[1]	12	3
1995–96[2]	2	2

[1] The last full financial year prior to the privatisation of escorts in Area 7 (East Midlands and Humberside) in 1993–94, the start of a rolling programme of contracting out.
[2] The last complete financial year.

Firearms

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many handgun licences are currently registered in England and Wales; [4348]

(2) how many handgun licences have been registered in each year in England and Wales since 1966. [4350]

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the number of handgun licences, as distinct from all firearms certificates, is not routinely collected in England and Wales.

However, a special exercise recently conducted showed that at the beginning of 1996 approximately 54,280 firearm certificates current in England and Wales allowed the holder to possess a handgun.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many offences involving the discharge of a firearm took place in each year since 1966 in England and Wales; [4355]

(2) how many offences involving the carrying of a firearm took place in each year since 1966 in England and Wales. [4349]

Miss Widdecombe: Detailed statistics on offences involving firearms have been published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". However, the level of detail and the coverage have varied over the years. The following table gives the available information:

Offences involving firearms, England and Wales, 1967–1995

	Number of offences in which firearms were used	Number of offences in which firearms were carried but not presented or used	Number of offences in which firearms were fined

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many legally held firearms are known to have been used in the commission or furtherance of criminal acts in each of the last 10 years to March 1996. [4380]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Information as to whether firearms used in offences are legally held has not, in the past, been routinely collected centrally in England and Wales.

A special exercise has recently been conducted to find out whether the guns used in homicide were licensed or not.

This covered the years 1992 to 1994, and out of a total of 196 homicides, information was available in 152 cases to show that 22 cases or 14 per cent. involved the use of a firearm legally held by the suspect.

Al Fayed Brothers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Government have spent on (a) legal assistance and (b) other costs arising from the applications by Mohamed and Ali Al Fayed for British citizenship. [4824]

Mr. Kirkhope: Up to 28 October 1996, the Home Office's legal costs were £53,915.41. Details of internal Home Office administrative and other costs are not available as they have not been recorded separately.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations led him to indicate his intention of lodging an appeal in the House of Lords against the decision in the Appeal Court on the citizenship applications of Mohammed and Ali Al Fayed. [4823]

Mr. Kirkhope: I decided to appeal to the House of Lords because the case raises an important point of law concerning the operation of the British Nationality Act 1981 which needs to be settled.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give an estimate of the costs of both parties payable by the Home Office following the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in R. v. the Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte Al Fayed. [5270]

Mr. Kirkhope: Up to 28 October 1996, the Home Office's legal costs were £53,915.41. I have no means of estimating what the costs of the appellants might be.

Thorn Cross

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the prison officer to inmate ratio and the cost per inmate place at Thorn Cross. [4299]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the officer to inmate ratio and cost per inmate place at Thorn Cross young offender institution.

Thorn Cross has three inmate populations: juveniles, young adults and the high intensity training programme.

The personal officer to inmate ratio is 1:5.5 for the juveniles, 1:6.5 for the young adults, and 1:3.5 for the high intensity training programme.

The current available information on cost per inmate place is £17,163 for the establishment as a whole and £27,600 for the high intensity training programme.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reoffenders have been discharged from HMP Doncaster since it was opened in 1994; what percentage this is of all reoffenders; and what is the breakdown of the figures by category of crime. [5180]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of reoffenders who have been discharged from Doncaster prison since it was opened in 1994; what percentage this is of all reoffenders; and what is the breakdown of the figures by category of crime.

The requested information is not yet available centrally. The most recent information on reconviction rates for discharged prisoners was published in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1994", column 3087, a copy of which is held in the Library. This shows reconviction rates within a two year follow-up period for sentenced prisoners discharged in 1992.

As Doncaster prison was opened in June 1994, information on reconviction rates for Doncaster will become available when follow-up studies of prisoners discharged during 1994 and 1995 are undertaken.

Asylum Seekers (Zaire)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given in recent weeks to declaring Zaire a country in which there has been a fundamental change in circumstances under the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. [5289]

Mr. Kirkhope: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to declare that Zaire has undergone a major upheaval such that we would not seek to return people there for the time being. Most of Zaire is unaffected by the conflict in the east of the country.

Fire Safety

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of Her Majesty's inspectorate of the fire service in respect of the development of fire-related European standards and methods for building products; how many offices are at present involved in this test work; and at what level. [5579]

Mr. Sackville: The role of Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate in respect of the development of fire-related European standards and test methods for building products is to provide technical advice to the fire safety unit of the fire and emergency planning directorate of the Home office. In addition, some inspectors make technical representation on behalf of the Department at relevant European standards meetings.

Currently, there are three grade 2 inspectors and one assistant inspector, grade 1, who attend appropriate European standards committees on behalf of the Department.

The fire service inspectorate also liaises with other Government Department representatives in relation to European technical committees dealing with fire matters which fall outside the policy responsibility of the FEPD.

Prisons (Costs)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the annual cost of keeping a prisoner in each type of English and Welsh prison. [5154]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the annual cost of keeping a prisoner in each type of English and Welsh prison.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission research into the docking of dog tails for non-veterinary reasons. [5592]

Mr. Sackville: There are no plans to do so.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6028]

Mr. Howard: My officials take administrative decisions every day which affect many members of the public, whether United Kingdom citizens of not. There are also many systems for appeal or challenge, but no list of them has ever been compiled or could be compiled, except at disproportionate cost.

Bradford Commission

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates (a) he and (b) officials in his Department received a copy or copies of the Bradford commission report. [5984]

Mr. Kirkhope: Officials received copies of the report on 21 November.

Prison Service (Quantum Project)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what terms of reference were given to the Prison Service agency quantum project; [4071]

(2) if he will list each of the contractors and consultants engaged since the start of the Prison Service agency quantum project; [4072]

(3) what is his latest estimate of the Prison Service agency quantum project; [4073]

(4) if he will list the contractors and consultants engaged by the Prison Service information technology group since the setting up of the Prison Service agency in 1993; [4074]

(5) what assessment has been made of the likely impact on employment levels in each prison establishment of project quantum. [4075]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 19 November 1996]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the Quantum Project: what terms of reference were given; what contractors/consultants have been employed by the Prison Service Information Technology Group and a list of those employed since the start of the Quantum project; the latest estimate of the cost of the project; and what assessment has been made of the likely impact on employment levels in each prison.

The terms of reference for the project are: to investigate the feasibility of utilising the UK Government's Private Finance Initiative (PFI) to provide improved information systems within the Prison Service. This will be done by inviting private sector companies to consider the clerical and information processing functions relating to personnel, finance and inmates as well as the core IT infrastructure and applications.

A list of contractor and consultancy firms engaged by the Prison Service IT Group since the setting up of the Prison Service Agency in 1993 is shown in the attached list A.

A list of contractor and consultancy firms engaged to work on the Quantum Project since it started is shown in the attached list B.

It is not possible to provide an accurate estimate of the cost of the Prison Service Agency Quantum Project until the final scope has been decided.

In the same way, I am not in a position to make an assessment of the effect on Prison Service jobs of the implementation of Quantum because the final scope of the project has yet to be decided. I am anticipating making that decision after a study has been undertaken by suppliers during the second quarter of 1997.

Prisons (Smuggling)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many finds of (a) drugs or (b) other contraband there have been in which (a) lawyers, (b) probation officers, (c) chaplains and (d) relatives of inmates have been implicated during the last 12 months in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement; [4776]

(2) how many finds of contraband have there been in the wiring of the bras of (a) prisoners' partners and (b) professional visitors to gaols in England and Wales during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [4673]

(3) how many lawyers sand probation officers have been apprehended attempting to take drugs or other contraband into gaols in England and Wales, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [4674]

(4) what changes there have been in search procedures in gaols in England and Wales during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [4676]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 20 November 1996]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about searching, and particularly the searching of visitors to prisons.

The statistical information you have requested is not available. However, I can provide figures for the number of visitors arrested for smuggling drugs in to prisons in the last five years. These do not differentiate between domestic and professional visitors.

Year (1 November to 31 October)	Number of visitors arrested
1991–2	229
1992–3	341
1993–4	521

The Woodcock and Learmont reports drew attention to some very serious weaknesses in prison security, particularly in high security prisons. These included weaknesses in the degree to which we searched visitors.

It was recommended that all visitors to prisons holding category A prisoners should receive a rub-down search in accordance with the procedures set out in the Security Manual, copies of which are available in the Library. Official visitors (such as members of the Board of Visitors and governors) and professional visitors (such as lawyers and probation officers) are included in this requirement.

Changes in search procedures in the last twelve months include:

Visitors to prisoners held in SSUs who are taking part in a closed visit are no longer rub-down searched on leaving the SSU.

All staff responsible for searching staff and visitors in the highest security prisons have been trained in X-ray procedures and given refresher training in rub-down searching techniques.

In prisons holding category A prisoners where new facilities have been installed, all staff are searched on entry.

Passive drug detection dogs have been introduced in six prisons.

Full Sutton Prison

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent at Her Majesty's prison, Full Sutton on replacing locks following the discovery in the week beginning 11 November of an impression of a master key in a prisoner's cell. [5254]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Scott to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 25 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General, to reply to your recent Question about the cost of replacing locks at Full Sutton following the discovery of an impression of a key in a prisoner's cell.

The cost of materials needed to replace all the Class 1 locks at Full Sutton was £17,173.68.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Lecturers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many part-time lecturers were employed in the higher education sector (a) nationally and (b) in the west midlands in each year since 1992; and what was the percentage change on the previous year. [4966]

Mr. Forth: The available information is as follows:

Part-time academic staff[1] numbers in the higher education sector

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
England
Part-time staff	5,864	6,622	10,239

West Midlands
Part-time staff	476	503	718
Per cent. increase over previous year	11.7	5.7	[2]n/a

[2] Not available. Because of differences in the coverage of the survey used to collect the 1994–95 figures, they cannot be directly compared with the figures for earlier years.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time lecturers were employed in the higher education sector (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands in 1979. [4968]

Mr. Forth: The available information is as follows:

Academic staff[1] in former UFC-funded universities only[2] academic year 1979–80

	Full-time	Part-time
England	33,239	1,166
West Midlands	3,094	n/a

[1] Includes those engaged on research only.

[2] Information on academic staff in rest of the HE sector for 1979–80 is not held centrally.

n/a = not available.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time lecturers were employed in the further education sector (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands in 1979; [4963]

(2) how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time lecturers were employed in the further education sector (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands in each year since 1992; and what was the percentage change on the previous year. [4967]

Mr. Paice: Comprehensive information on the number of full and part-time further education lecturers is not available. The total full-time equivalents of these lecturers in England in the years specified are shown in the following table although, as explained in the footnotes, the figures are not on the same basis for all years. Information is not available separately for the west midlands.

Academic year	Full-time equivalent lecturers (thousands) in LEA maintained FE colleges, excluding sixth-form colleges and colleges of HE[1]	providing FE in FE or HE institutions, including sixth-form colleges	percentage change from previous year[2]
1979–80	66.0	—	—
1992–93	65.6	67.7	-2
1993–94	—	67.8	0
1994–95	—	69.2	+2

Notes:
[1] Colleges of HE were LEA maintained prior to 1988, but not subsequently. The 1979–80 figure in this column therefore includes lecturers in colleges of HE, but the 1992–93 figure does not, so the two are not directly comparable.
[2] The percentage change in 1992–93 is calculated from the information in the first column, for which the 1991–92 figure—not shown—is 66.9 thousand. The percentage changes in 1993–94 and 1994–95 are calculated from the information in the second column.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many full-time lecturers have been employed in the higher education sector (a) nationally and (b) in the west midlands in each year since 1992; and what was each figure as a percentage change on the previous year. [4901]

Mr. Forth: The available information is as follows:

Full-time academic staff[1] numbers in the higher education sector

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
England:
Full-time staff	66,289	68,862	83,445

West Midlands:
Full-time staff	5,799	6,001	6,710
Percentage increase over previous year	2.4	3.5	[2]

[1] Includes those engaged on research only.
[2] Not applicable. Because of differences in the coverage of the survey used to collect the 1994–95 figures they cannot be directly compared to the figures for earlier years.

Students

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) full–time students and (b) part–time students have entered the higher education sector (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands in each year since 1992; and what was each figure as a percentage change on the previous year. [4899]

Mr. Forth: The available information is as follows:

Youth Counselling and Information Services

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what her Department spent on youth counselling and information services; what proportion of the budget this represented in (a) 1979–80, (b) 1983–84, (c) 1987–88, (d) 1992–93 and (e) 1995–96; and if she will make a statement. [5274]

Mr. Paice: Set out in the following table are details of departmental expenditure on the youth service for the years in question and as a proportion of the Department's total education budget. Departmental funding of the National Youth Agency and its predecessor up to 1991, the National Youth Bureau, includes support for the provision of youth information services. The Department's programme of grants to national voluntary youth organisations includes some support for the provision of counselling and information services for young people.

Higher Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students graduated from undergraduate-level higher education in (a) England and Wales and (b) London in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96. [5277]

Mr. Forth: The latest available information covering first degree graduates only is as follows:

First degree graduates

	[1]1979–80	[2]1990–91	[3]1994–95
England and Wales	55,309	118,672	183,912
Greater London	8,579	22,923	34,369

[1] Former UFC universities only.
[2] Former UFC universities, former polytechnics, HEIs and FEIs.
[3] Former UFC universities, former polytechnics and HEIs.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of those completing full-time compulsory education in (a) England and Wales and (b) London continued in full-time education in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96. [5275]

Mr. Robin Squire: The percentage of 16-year-olds in full-time education is as follows:

Academic year	1979–80	1990–91	1994–95[1]	1995–96 (provisional)
England and Wales	[2]n/a	59	71	71
England	42	59	71	71
London	[3]n/a	61	76	n/a

[1] 1994–95 is the latest year for which figures for London are available.

[2] Data for 1979–80 are not available for Wales. In 1980–81 the percentage was 46 in Wales, while it was 43 in England.

[3] Figures are not available for London on the same basis. In 1979, 43 per cent. of 15-year-olds in maintained schools in inner London continued full time in maintained schools or in further education, and 47 per cent. stayed on in outer London.

n/a = not available.

Fovant School

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will publish her decision on the future of Fovant school near Salisbury. [3967]

Mr. Robin Squire: Proposals affecting the school are under consideration. A decision will be made as soon as possible.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) her Department and (2) executive agencies of her Department for each year since 1992. [5424]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not available in the format requested. The numbers of permanent and casual staff employed by the Department and the Employment Service Agency from 1992 onwards can be found in annexe F of the Department's annual report, Cm3210, a copy of which is in the Library.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her estimate of the effect of the proposals for changes to early retirement provisions for teachers on the age profile of the profession. [5536]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend expects that more experienced teachers will stay in teaching and therefore numbers in the age range 50 to 60 will rise if the proposals on early retirement are implemented. The number of teachers leaving the profession in their forties may increase as a result of the improved severance payments available to this age group. In the long term, she expects these changes to produce a smoother age profile for teachers, to that the required number of entrants to the profession remains broadly constant over time.

First Aid Training (Pupils)

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received concerning first aid training for pupils in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools; and if she will make a statement. [5582]

Mrs. Gillan: The Department has received five letters this year relating to the teaching of first aid in schools.

There is scope within national curriculum science for the teaching of first aid. Opportunities also exist within the wider curriculum, for example through programmes of personal, social and health education, for schools to provide information about first aid.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the independent schools receiving funds from the assisted places scheme that have had a full publicly available report by Ofsted or Her Majesty's inspectors in the past five years. [5597]

Mrs. Gillan: Inspections by Ofsted, to monitor the educational provision at independent schools and to ensure that minimum standards are being met in accordance with the Education Acts, do not normally lead to a published report, but the findings are submitted to the Department so that any necessary action can be taken to remedy any deficiencies. In the last five years, 294 schools participating in the assisted places scheme in England were inspected by Ofsted/HMI on that basis. In addition, Ofsted undertakes a programme of inspections on a sample of independent schools leading to full published reports. The following 14 participating schools were the subject of such published reports in the last five years:

(List of schools participating in the assisted places scheme with full inspection reports published in the last five years)

Abingdon School
Brentwood School
City of London Freemen's School
Croydon High School
King's School, Macclesfield
King Edward's School, Birmingham
Lady Eleanor Holles School
Merchant Taylors' School, Northwood
Merchant Taylors' School for Girls, Crosby, Liverpool
Moreton Hall School, Oswestry
Queen Elizabeth's Hospital School, Bristol
Roedean School
Shrewsbury School
Westminster School

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the independent schools benefiting from funds from the assisted places scheme, showing the number and percentage of children gaining five or more A-C passes in GCSE for the past five years. [5594]

Mr. Soames: Costs of attendance at EU-related meetings are not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4952]

Mr. Soames: The percentage of my Department's time and resources spent dealing with EU business could be calculated only at disproportionate cost, but could be expected to be negligible.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the sale of the Rosyth royal dockyard. [5177]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Since the announcement in October 1993 of the Government's intention to sell the royal dockyards, a series of separate negotiations has been conducted with Babcock International Group for the proposed sale of Rosyth royal dockyard.

I am pleased to say that negotiations with Babcock have been concluded and we intend to sign the sale contract shortly, subject only to acceptable final contract terms and conditions. That agreement represents good value for money for the taxpayer and will generate savings of £100 million over 10 years. It will also give Babcock and its employees the prospect of achieving a secure long-term future for the dockyard. To assist in that, the Government have allocated a significant programme of ship refit work to the yard, lasting well into the next decade. The forthcoming refits of the carriers HMS Invincible and HMS Ark Royal and the nuclear-powered submarines HMS Sceptre and HMS Spartan, among others, will take place at Rosyth. My Department is today issuing a consultation document to the trades unions about the impact of the sale on MOD employees.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5425]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Some information is held centrally on numbers of jobs in the Department and its agencies and this is listed in the table. Totals for temporary jobs are included in the numbers of casual staff. Details of all the full-time or part-time jobs held on renewable or unrenewable fixed-term contracts are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Implementation Force

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his latest estimate of the costs of the United Kingdom's military contribution to the NATO-led implementation force in the former Yugoslavia. [6254]

Mr. Portillo: The latest estimates of the costs for the ground operations of the NATO-led implementation force in the former Yugoslavia are that £60 million was spent in 1995–96, and that £160 million will be spent in this financial year. In addition, we estimate that £24 million will be spent in this financial year for Operation Decisive Edge, the air component of the implementation force.

Subject to parliamentary approval, the Government have agreed that £244 million will be provided from the reserve in 1996–97 to meet these costs.

We estimate that a further £120 million may be required in future years, including for repair of equipment deployed and restocking of stores and spares. If the defence budget is unable to absorb those extra costs without detriment to the rest of the defence programme, I shall seek access to the reserve.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action has been taken by the Atomic Energy Authority to decontaminate Reay castle on the site of the AEA's Dounreay Nuclear Research Establishment following the experiment conducted there. [5070]

Mr. Page: This is an operational matter for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the advantages of appointing additional non–specialist members to the board of Nirex. [5067]

Mr. Page: No assessment of such appointments has been considered necessary.

Small Firms (Exports)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates he has made of the percentage of small and medium enterprises which export (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in each EU country; and what is the EU average. [5685]

Mr. Page: My Department has not made estimates of the percentage of small and medium enterprises that export, either for the United Kingdom, or for other EU countries.

Business Links

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that business links' databases are compatible. [5686]

Mr. Page: The business link IT strategy group has defined a mandatory standard format for core contact data, to be held on business links databases, on its target market. This standard has been published to all business links in an IT briefing paper, OSSIT 8 version 2.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he plans to make to the accreditation procedure for business links. [5687]

Mr. Page: I am asking the Accreditation Advisory Board to conduct a full review of the accreditation requirements at its January 1997 meeting. The board will then advise me urgently on any changes or enhancements that it believes are required in the light of the first six months' operation of the accreditation arrangements.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what training is undertaken by personal business advisers in business links. [5442]

Mr. Page [holding answer 21 November 1996]: For the purposes of accreditation, business links are required to ensure that personal business advisers spend a minimum of 60 hours a year on training and professional development and that their managers regularly review and agree the training and development needs of each team member.

My Department has also sponsored the development of a modular framework for continuing professional development, which most PBAs are engaged in.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Atkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to take to prevent the (a) sale and (b) use of devices for the cloning of mobile telephones; and if he will make a statement. [5532]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Following the publication of the industry and Government study group recommendations on mobile phone fraud and crime last year, I am very pleased to see that my hon. Friend the Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) introduced a private Member's Bill on telecommunications fraud on 20 November. I understand that this Bill will implement the study group's recommendation for legislative changes to the current offences on telecommunications fraud, and therefore be highly relevant to the problems of cloned mobile telephones referred to by my hon. Friend.

Industrial Relations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the definitions of (a) risks to life, health or safety, (b) threats to national security, (c) serious damage to property or to the economy and (d) significant disruption of everyday life or activities in the whole or part of the country he has adopted in drafting paragraph 2.5 of chapter 2 of his Green Paper on Industrial Action and Trade Unions, Cm. 3470. [5986]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Green Paper proposes removing immunity from industrial action with disproportionate or excessive effects and invites comments on the suggestion that this term might be defined by reference to the criteria set out in paragraphs 2.5 to 2.7 of the paper. The Government will consider, in the light of comments on the Green Paper, whether any terms need to be further defined when the when the legislation is drafted.

Institute of Patentees and Inventors

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to provide financial support to the Institute of Patentees and Inventors; and if he will make a statement; [5694]

(2) what support he has provided for the Institute of Patentees and Inventors in the last three years. [5693]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The year 1996–97 is the first year of a three-year grant of £10,000 per annum from the DTI to the Institute of Patentees and Inventors. The grant will run to 1998–99, subject to the institute meeting the conditions of the grant. At the end of this period, the Department will review the position with the institute.

Research

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many public sector research establishments there were in (a) 1979 and (b) at the last available date; and how many staff were employed. [5692]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Information on the total number of public sector research establishments is not centrally held. The 1994 efficiency scrutiny of public sector research establishments covered 50 civil establishments, employing around 31,000 staff. Of this total, six establishments have since been privatised—National Engineering Laboratory, AEA Technology, Laboratory of the Government Chemist, Transport Research Laboratory, Natural Resources Institute and National Institute of Agricultural Botany. Additionally, the National Physical Laboratory, while remaining Government owned, is now contractor operated. The remaining establishments, employing around 21,000 staff, are included under the current programme of prior options reviews; decisions on the future of each establishment are taken on a case-by-case basis. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced the timetable of the reviews on 26 January 1996 and the initial results on 22 May 1996.

Freelance Inventors

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what section of his Department is responsible for dealing with freelance inventors; and if he will make a statement. [5695]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Within the DTI headquarters, policy responsibility for issues relating to lone inventors currently rests with the technology and innovation (policy and budget) directorate within the wider technology and standards directorate. The day-to-day concerns of lone inventors are best addressed through the innovation and technology counsellors in the business links, who have the knowledge and access to information networks to advise on how to solve any problems that they may have.

John Innes Centre

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions (i) he and (ii) his officials have had with trustees of the John Innes Foundation about the future of the John Innes centre. [4796]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 19 November 1996]: No discussions, so far as I am aware, have taken place with trustees of the foundation, but I cannot rule out the possibility that the subject may have arisen coincidentally in conversation. The trustees have made no formal representations to the Department.

Mine Shafts

Mr. Berry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to paragraph 19 of the Government observations on the seventh report from the Trade and Industry Committee—Session 1995–96—on former mine shafts, to what part of the United Kingdom the cost of "some millions of pounds" refers. [5262]

Mr. Page [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The reference is to the estimated cost of a comprehensive check of the Coal Authority's database, which covers the coal mining areas of Great Britain.

Arms Trade

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to introduce to combat the trafficking or brokering of arms to countries involved in conflict situations; and if he will make a statement. [5369]

Mr. lang [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The extent to which any new legislation should seek to control trafficking in undesirable goods or the brokering of such deals is one of the matters on which my Department's consultative document, "Strategic Export Controls" (Cm. 3349) presented to Parliament in July, sought views. The consultation period closed at the end of October and the Department is currently considering the responses and follow-up action to the consultation. Current procedures in relation to trafficking in arms are also being examined by the interdepartmental committee set up in response to the allegations that UK companies have been linked to the selling of arms to Rwandan extremists in Zaire. The committee's work on this area will contribute to the wider review of strategic export controls, which is already under way.

Mil-Tec

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions and when Mil-Tec Corporation Ltd. applied or export licences to (1) Rwanda and (2) Zaire since April 1994; and what was the Government response. [5293]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 November 1996]: No such application has been submitted by Mil-Tec Corporation Ltd. since 1 April 1994.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Hain: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. All the figures given for fixed-term appointments include staff on both renewable and unrenewable contracts. The Lord Chancellor's Department does not use the term "temporary job", any jobs of a temporary nature would be considered suitable for casual or fixed-term appointment.

[5420]

Sir Paul Beresford: It is not possible to assemble all of the information immediately. However, I will write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the table in the Library of the House.

Construction Skills Certification Scheme

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department will apply in assessing the performance of the construction skills certification scheme. [5739]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The scheme is a construction industry initiative and it is for the industry to evaluate its success. However, my Department will wish to be kept informed of the numbers joining the scheme, the construction trades it represents and its success in linking with relevant skills and safety training qualifications.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6025]

Sir Paul Beresford: In any case where the Department is exercising a public law function, its decisions are subject to judicial review in the courts, or statutory appeal on similar grounds. This applies whether or not the person affected by the decision is a UK citizen. Information on the administrative decisions in question could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates have been given to prospective purchasers of the Building Research Establishment about future income levels underwritten by the Government. [5735]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total income of the Building Research Establishment in each of the past three financial years; and what proportion of that income came in each year from (a) Government and (b) other public sector sources. [5736]

[1] "Other" income includes that from publication sales and seminars and from tenants whether from public or private sector customers.
[2] "Non-exchequer" income includes non-Government public sector and European funding as well as that from the private sector.

For both of these categories a breakdown between Government and other public sector sources could be made only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the current value of (a) the buildings, (b) the plant and machinery and (c) the land occupied by the Building Research Establishment at (i) Garstang and (ii) its other out-stations. [5737]

[5985]

Sir Paul Beresford: The chair of the Bradford Commission has at no time made any comment to either Ministers or officials in support of, or in opposition to, any Bradford single regeneration budget challenge fund bid.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Publicity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the cost of producing and printing the latest series of leaflets illustrating the range of activities funded by the British overseas aid programme; and if he will list the publicity budget for the Overseas Development administration for each year since 1990. [5286]

Dr. Liam Fox: The latest series of leaflets replace a number of other publications which have been phased out following a reassessment of the Department's publicity programme. There will be a total of 150,000 leaflets in the initial series covering 30 topics. The cost of producing and printing these, including the initial design, will be approximately £72,000.

The ODA's publicity budget covers development education—which accounts for approximately 50 per cent. of the annual budget-exhibitions, the British Overseas Development newspaper, the ODA roadshow and the Internet as well as publications.

Expenditure since 1990 has been as follows:

1992–93: £1,012,000

1994–95: £1,355,000

Dr. Liam Fox: Our ambassador in Kigali is in regular contact with Rwandan Ministers, both Hutu and Tutsi, about refugees in Zaire. Members of our diplomatic missions in other capitals have had meetings with organisations such as the "Forces of Resistance for Democracy", who describe themselves as representing the interests of Hutu refugees.

Sudan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prevalence of donations of food aid in Sudan being conditional on conversion to Islam; and if he will make a statement. [4655]

Dr. Liam Fox: The ODA is not aware of any cases of such a link being made with respect to food aid that it has provided for Sudan, but there are persistent reports of such a link being made in other cases in Sudan.

WALES

Environment Annual Report

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations led to the omission from his Department's annual report on the environment in Wales a reference to (a) the environmental impact of the Wylfa nuclear plant, (b) the decommissioning of the Trawsfynydd nuclear plant and (c) the implications for the Welsh environment of military test ranges. [4713]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The environmental impact of Wylfa and Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations is covered in other official publications. Assessment of the environmental implications of military test ranges is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary and secondary school teachers there are in Wales employed by local education authorities as (a) full-time and (b) part-time teachers. [4935]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Berwyn Mountains SSSI

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what meetings are required between the Countryside Commission for Wales and individual landowners to agree (a) areas and (b) patterns of burning each year under the management agreement on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement; [4834]

(2) how many holdings on the Berwyn mountains in north Wales have concluded section 15 management agreements with the Countryside Commission for Wales; what is (a) the total acreage and (b) the aggregated cost of these agreements for the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [4838]

(3) how many landowners subject to section 15 management agreements on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest are required to record the numbers and distribution of animals and birds on the areas under agreement; what annual reports are required; how many reports have been received; and if he will make a statement; [4836]

(4) how many section 15 management agreements on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest require owners to control foxes, carrion crows or magpies; and if he will make a statement; [4840]

(5) under how many section 15 management agreements on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest, the shooting of black grouse is specifically excluded; and if he will make a statement; [4821]

(6) how many meetings took place between Countryside Commission for Wales staff and landowners on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest to agree burning patterns in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995; and if he will make a statement; [4833]

(7) what prescriptions for the burning of heather have been set under section 15 management agreements on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest; on how many holdings such prescriptions have been set; and if he will make a statement; [4835]

(8) if landowners subject to section 15 management agreements on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest are required to submit annual returns on the numbers of pest species controlled; and if he will make a statement; [4839]

(9) how many (a) foxes, (b) carrion crows and (c) magpies have been controlled under the requirements of section 15 management agreements on the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement. [4837]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The negotiation, implementation and monitoring of management agreements for the Berwyn mountains site of special scientific interest under section 15 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 is the responsibility of the Countryside Council for Wales. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Paul Loveluck, to arrange for a reply, and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the consequences of the completion of the River Dee crossing on traffic in Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [4938]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Flintshire county council is responsible for the River Dee crossing.

Women Professors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of women holding professorships in the higher education sector in Wales. [4937]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In 1994–95, the Higher Education Statistics Agency recorded 23 women holding professorships at higher education institutions in Wales.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) full–time jobs, (b) part–time jobs, (c) full–time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed–term contracts, (d) part–time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed–term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5430]

Mr. Hague: The information is shown in the following table:

(a) Full Time	2321	2237	2053	1943	1764
(b) Part Time	206	143	248	194	167
(c) FTA	n/a	n/a	n/a	122	138
(d) Casual	135	182	232	132	203

The table provides data for Welsh Office and executive agency Cadw. To disaggregate the data would be a disproportionate cost.
1. Part–time staff were counted as a whole time person until 1994 and from April 1995 they were calculated as full time equivalents based on their working hours.
2. Fixed–term Appointments—this information is not available prior to 1995.
3. Generally all fixed–term appointments are renewable.
4. Casual and temporary posts are classified as casual.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) primary and (b) secondary pupils (i) were permanently excluded and (ii) had fixed–term exclusions from school in 1995–96; and of those in (i) how many returned to mainstream eduction. [5586]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information is available for permanently excluded pupils only. Returns provided by local authorities indicate that in the 1995–96 academic year, 65 children were excluded from primary schools and 455 from secondary schools. Of these, 130 returned to mainstream education. It is not possible to break down this figure between primary and secondary pupils.

South East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust concerning the losses made in running coach holidays to Spain and shopping day trips to France in trust vehicles; what departmental guidance exists covering such business ventures; what reference to the district auditor has been made with respect to such ventures; and if he will make a statement. [5997]

Mr. Hague: None. Income generation schemes do not need my approval, but statutory auditors may inspect them and a copy of the latest guidance has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 496, about expenditure by public bodies, if he will indicate the principal three methods used within the variety of arrangements referred to ensure effective monitoring and control of capital expenditure and how they were used with respect to the new Mamhilad headquarters of the South East Wales Ambulance NHS trust; what monitoring took place of the overspend prior to 29 January; and what intelligence gathering method his Department has to detect (a) deliberate understatement of capital cost and (b) unreported overspend on capital cost. [5991]

Mr. Hague: Capital expenditure on all health schemes is monitored quarterly against amounts set out in the full business case approved by my Department before a project starts and cannot be exceeded. In the case of the ambulance trust, the Mamhilad project had only just begun by 29 January 1996. The Department would have become aware of any overspend through the quarterly monitoring process. The statutory auditors examine compliance with statutory and other procedures.

Secondees and Consultants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 497, if he will list the employers who have provided the secondees to his Department. [5990]

Mr. Hague: The employers who have provided secondees are as follows:

University of Wales, Aberystwyth
Gwent Health Authority
Bro Taf Health Authority
Dyfed Powys Health Authority
North Wales Health Authority
Rhondda NHS Trust
Swansea NHS Trust
Bridgend and District NHS Trust
Gwent Community Health NHS Trust
Welsh Health Common Services Authority

One person is seconded from Eversheds to the private finance panel executive and works as part of the Welsh Office private finance unit.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the water budget agreed for the intake of water for the impounded lake behind the Cardiff bay barrage; what water abstraction rights he has agreed for the Blackweir offtake for the Cardiff dock feeder with the Cardiff Bay development corporation, the National

Rivers Authority and Associated British Ports; and what impact those water abstraction rights have been assessed to have on prospective water quality and availability in the projected lake behind the barrage. [5996]

Mr. Hague: The details of the water budget are an operational matter for the corporation and I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his response to be placed in the Library.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6038]

Mr. Hague: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Millennium Celebrations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 428, what appraisal he has made of the outcome of the lunch he attended for the millennium celebrations; how much support he obtained from the Welsh business community in relation to (a) Welsh presence at the Greenwich exhibition and (b) celebrations within Wales; what funds were used for the lunch; and if he will place in the Library a list of those attending the lunch. [6073]

Mr. Hague: I have made no such appraisal. I have received a number of expressions of interest in Welsh participation in the millennium exhibition. The lunch was sponsored and paid for out of private funds. It would not be appropriate to place in the Library a list of those attending this private function.

Play Wales (Funding)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had in relation to the funding of Play Wales from 1 April 1997; what consultations he has had with the Welsh Local Government Association concerning future funding arrangements for it; what consideration he has given to the possibility of funding Play Wales after 1 April 1997 via a grant to the Welsh Council for Voluntary Action; and if he will make a statement. [5989]

Mr. Hague: I have had several representations about the funding of Play Wales, including over 50 during the consultation on "Redefining the Relationship". These include letters from the Welsh Local Government Association which have been taken into account. I have considered the possibility of funding Play Wales via a grant to the Wales Council for Voluntary Action but concluded that the position should remain as I announced on 15 October, Official Report, column 866.

The Welsh Local Government Association's decision, that Play Wales should not receive a top-slice of revenue support grant in 1997–98, and the consequences of that decision, are matters for the association.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow Southern Orbital Road

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning proposals for a Glasgow southern orbital road; and if he will make a statement. [4264]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to the representations made by the hon. Member for Eastwood, 37 letters have been received, mainly from residents of Eaglesham, about the need to bypass the village and construct a Glasgow southern orbital route. East Renfrewshire council submitted an outline bid to the 1998–99 transport challenge fund for the Glasgow southern orbital route M77—Newton Mearns—to East Kilbride which would effectively bypass Eaglesham. The application has been placed on the shortlist for consideration in the second stage of the competition and the council has been asked to send a full appraisal and any other information in support of the application to the scottish office by 27 January 1997. Departmental and council officials recently met to discuss the project.

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the reason for the delay in starting lung transplants at Glasgow royal infirmary; [4779]

(2) what plans he has to start lung transplants at Glasgow royal infirmary; and if he will make a statement. [4780]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are currently considering a needs assessment on the introduction of lung and heart/lung transplantation in Scotland. A decision will be announced in due course. Our main concern is to ensure the best outcomes for Scottish patients who require these types of transplantation.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when funding will be available for the new maternity unit at Glasgow royal infirmary; and if he will make a statement. [4781]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A business case was approved by the Scottish Office in April 1996 which allowed the Glasgow Royal Infirmary University NHS Trust to begin work on the procurement process for the new maternity unit. The trust will explore private finance options for this development and have begun work on this process. As the trust is also considering other important capital developments, it has decided to manage these as one project, and so additional planning work has been necessary. The trust aims to undergo the major part of the private finance initiative process in the first half of 1997.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the legal and administrative costs incurred by the Scottish health service central legal office and the royal infirmary in the court case between Mr. Higgins and the royal infirmary, Glasgow; and what was the value of the item upon which the dispute was founded. [4905]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is entirely a matter for the Glasgow Royal Infirmary University NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chief executive, Mr Nigel Clifford, for details.

Rottenrow Maternity Hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money he estimates will be realised from the sale of the site of Rottenrow maternity hospital. [4782]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Glasgow Royal Infirmary University NHS trust has provided an estimate of the marketable value of this property. This is commercially sensitive information which it would be inappropriate to disclose in advance of concluding any sale agreement. I can, however, assure the hon. Member that the trust will seek to maximise the proceeds from the sale of this site.

Legal Aid

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most recent estimate of the current annual cost of criminal legal aid in Scotland; and what were the equivalent figures for one, two and three years ago.[5130]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest estimate of the annual cost of criminal legal aid in Scotland for 1996–97 is £76.6 million.

The equivalent cost for the last three years is set out in the list.

1993–94: £72.8 million

1994–95: £76.2 million

1995–96: £74.4 million.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5480]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has had in place guidelines on policy appraisal for equal opportunities since 1992. We are currently updating these guidelines in the light of the guidance published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in July this year.

This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not.

Prisons (Costs)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual cost of keeping a prisoner in each type of Scottish prison. [5153]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 25 November 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the annual cost of keeping a prisoner in each type of Scottish prison.

The average cost per prisoner place at HM Prisons in Scotland in 1995–96 was £24,019 for secure prisons and £17,221 for open prisons. This has been calculated as total net expenditure (excluding capital, Headquarters and other central costs) divided by the average number of places available.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5429]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of full-time and part-time staff, full-time and part-time staff on fixed-term appointments, and full-time and part-time casual staff employed each year since 1992 are shown in the tables.

We do not hold statistics which categorise fixed-term appointments as renewable or unrenewable, but the great majority are open to being made permanent or to extension. w also do not distinguish between "temporary" and "casual" employees.

Crown Office Properties

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) how much the Crown Office is required to pay in lieu of non-domestic rates to each council in Scotland this financial year and (b) how much it had actually paid by 13 November. [5659]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office makes an annual contribution in lieu of rates payment on its properties to the Valuation Office agency, an executive agency of the Inland Revenue). The exception to this would be where the Crown Office is a minor occupier in a Government building and a contribution would be paid to the major occupying Department. The estimated contribution in lieu of rates for Crown Office this financial year is £1,063,000, of which £926,000 has been paid.

Government Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate at 1996–97 prices the public sector balance between revenue and expenditure for Scotland for each year from 1979–80 to 1994–95 after deducting a gross domestic product share of the United Kingdom general government borrowing requirement, a gross domestic product share of privatisation proceeds and allocating 90 per cent. of oil revenues to Scotland's revenue. [1366]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 31 October 1996]: I have been asked to reply. The table shows the calculations requested. The method proposed for calculating Scotland's budget balance, by simply assuming that the shares of Scotland in total expenditures and revenues are in proportion to Scotland's share of GDP, is misconceived, since it takes no account of available information of government expenditure and revenue in Scotland. Approximate estimates of these are published in the "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland" annual report. These show much higher borrowing figures for Scotland in recent years than given by the requested calculations.

Public Sector Finances

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of state for Scotland if he will list the public sector surplus or deficit (a) in total and (b) for Scotland for each year since 1979–80 assuming a gross domestic product share of privatisation proceeds and allocating (i) 80 per cent., (ii) 85 per cent. and (iii) 90 per cent. of North sea oil revenues to Scotland. [1363]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 31 October 1996]: I have been asked to reply.

The table shows the UK public sector borrowing requirement, and estimates of Scotland's shares of privatisation proceeds and North sea oil revenue using the formulae prescribed. These estimates are not sufficient to enable the calculation of the public sector borrowing requirement for Scotland. Approximate estimates of the general government borrowing requirement in Scotland in 1993–94 and 199–45 are available in the "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland" annual report.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drug Dealing

32. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Lord President of the Council what assessment he has made of the financial scale of dealings in the United Kingdom in illegal drugs. [4040]

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to make an overall assessment with any accuracy. What is clear is that the scale of such dealings is substantial—the latest estimate of the total street value of illegal drugs seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise alone is nearly £500 million in 1995.

"Tackling Drugs Together"

34. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what new proposals he has to publicise the recommendations of the document "Tackling Drugs Together". [4042]

Mr. Newton: Publicity for the implementation of the Government's drugs strategy for England, "Tackling Drugs Together", is kept under regular review by ministerial colleagues and by me, under the auspices of the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Drug Misuse, which I chair. This will continue to focus in particular on raising awareness of the work of the 105 local drug action teams across England.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5419]

Mr. Newton: The number of full-time posts in the Privy Council Office for each year since 1992 has been as follows:

1996: 38

The increase in 1994 reflects the setting up of a central drugs co-ordination unit reporting to me. There have to date been no part-time posts and no temporary or casual posts, although in the last two years some posts have been filled by temporary or casual staff for short periods and some individuals have worked on a part-time or job-share basis. No staff are employed on fixed-term contracts, either renewable or unrenewable. I am not responsible for any agencies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Procedural Reform

33. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further reforms he proposes to the consideration of legislation during the remainder of this Parliament. [4041]

Mr. Newton: The Government propose to take forward the practice of publishing bills in draft for consultation, with a view to introducing them at a suitable opportunity. Draft Bills on voluntary identity cards and on long-term care in old age were announced in the Gracious Speech.

Domestic Committees

35. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will introduce an oral question period for the Chairmen of the domestic committees; and if he will make a statement. [4043]

Mr. Newton: I do not propose to make any further changes in the question rota at this late stage in the Parliament.

Statutory Instruments

36. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of holding debates on statutory instruments (a) on the Floor of the House and (b) in Committee. [4044]

Mr. Newton: As agreed between the Government and the Opposition in December 1994, all affirmative instruments are referred automatically to a Standing Committee, but may be de-referred on a Government motion. The Government accede to any reasonable Opposition request for de-referral. The arrangements for debates on negative instruments are settled by agreement through the usual channels.

Question Time

37. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will assess the advantages of moving Ministers' Question Time to the morning. [4045]

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 28 October, Official Report column 47.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6030]

Mr. Newton: Information is not collected in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Refreshment Department Staff

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee if he will make a statement on the number of catering grades and management grades of the Refreshment Department in (a) 1987, (b) 1992 and (c) 1996. [6046]

Sir Colin Shepherd: This is a matter for the Director of Catering Services. I have asked her to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Whisky

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what plans he has to allow House of Commons whisky to be made available for sale at Heathrow duty free shops on the same basis as House of Lords whisky; and if he will make a statement. [6140]

Sir Colin Shepherd: None. The Committee considers it inappropriate that House of Commons gifts and souvenirs should be available from sources other than Refreshment Department outlets.

Refreshment Facilities

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what representations the Committee has received on the new refreshment facilities in the House. [4034]

Sir Colin Shepherd: The Committee has received no representations. I have received one written representation, and noted verbal comments from several hon. Members. I have also examined comments in the suggestions book in the Members' Tea Room, including three from the hon. Lady, which is the only altered refreshment facility presently operating.

When the full service in the Tea Room is available and the Terrace Cafeteria opens, following the kitchens becoming operational, the Committee will keep the changes made under careful review.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee when, and by whom, the decisions were taken on the cost and details of the refurbishment of the Members' Tea Room and Strangers' Cafeteria. [6044]

Sir Colin Shepherd: The decision on the principle and the cost of the proposed refurbishments of the Members' Tea Room and the former Strangers' Cafeteria was taken by the House on 12 July 1994, Official Report, columns 940–62, when it approved the Catering Committee's first report of Session 1993–94.

Details of subsequent decisions taken to refine the principle of the refurbishments are available in the Committee's minutes of proceedings from Sessions 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Official Photographer

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will take steps to secure the appointment of an official House photographer [4035]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: There are no plans to appoint an official House photographer. Details of the arrangement whereby a Central Office of Information contract photographer is available to hon. Members on request were published in the all–party notices in April last year.

Investors in People

Mr. Allen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick–upon–Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, (1) what plans he has to introduce an investors in people programme for the staff of the House; [5375]

(2) what approach he has received from investors in people in respect of a programme for the staff of the House; and if he will make a statement. [5363]

Mr. Beith: The House authorities have received details of Investors in People and are aware of the ways in which it can assist with training programmes for staff. When a planned House–wide review of training is undertaken, consideration will be given to whether it will be appropriate and beneficial to go in for a programme of this kind.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Sound Barriers

12. Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider his policy for sound barriers on existing motorways. [4013]

Mr. Watts: I am reviewing the policy for providing noise barriers on roads constructed or last improved before 16 October 1969, the date from which the noise insulation regulations took effect. I expect to make a statement shortly.

Crossrail

13. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the crossrail project in London. [4015]

Mr. Bowis: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State confirmed on 2 April, crossrail is expected to come after the Jubilee line extension, Thameslink 2000 and the channel tunnel rail link in the sequence of major new rail projects for London. Railtrack is considering the project in the light of the Government's policy that it should proceed as a joint venture with a substantial private sector contribution.

School Transport

17. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children travelled to school by means other than private car in (a) 1979 and (b) 1995. [4019]

Mr. Bowis: It is estimated that, on average, about 5.7 million children aged five to 15 travelled to school by means other than private car during the period 1993 to 1995. Figures are not available for 1979.

Road Accidents

18. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to reduce road accidents. [4022]

Mr. Bowis: Since the early 1980s, we reduced road deaths by 35 per cent. and serious road injuries by 39 per cent. We are promoting a variety of measures to reduce accidents further, such as red light and speed enforcement cameras, 20 mph zones and speed reducing road engineering measures.

Alongside these we have major publicity campaign on drink–driving and inappropriate speed.

Slots (Heathrow)

19. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on the ring–fencing of slots in and out of Heathrow. [4023]

Sir George Young: The Government do not consider it appropriate to ring–fence airport slots for domestic routes, as this would distort the aviation market.

European Airline Subsidies

20. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he plans to make to the Transport Commissioner regarding continued public subsidy for European state–run airlines. [4024]

Sir George Young: The UK Government's views on the harmful effects of state subsidies to airlines are well known to the Commission. Where appropriate, we shall continue to back up those views by using the powers available to us under the treaty of Rome to influence or challenge the Commission's decisions.

Rail Privatisation

22. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold discussions with the director of Opraf on the success fees paid to accountants, lawyers and consultants involved in the privatisation of the railways. [4026]

Mr. Watts: No.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 238, if he will list the total number of hours worked by consultants employed by (a) Samuel Montague, (b) Kleinwort Benson, (c) KPMG, (d) Coopers and Lybrand and (e) Linklaters and Paines in relation to rail privatisation. [5653]

Mr. Watts: The answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Rail Freight

23. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received supporting measures to attract more freight on to the railways. [4027]

Mr. Watts: The Department receives a wide variety of representations on this subject, to which we attach high priority.

The key to improving rail's share of the freight market is privatisation. The private sector is bringing new ideas and practices to rail freight in Britain, and is already attracting new traffic to the railway.

We continue to make available grants to encourage the shift of freight from road to rail. We have recently modified the grant regime to encourage long-distance rail freight and we are working to streamline the grant procedures.

Rail Services (Grimsby and Cleethorpes)

25. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in respect of service levels from Grimsby and Cleethorpes on Central and North Eastern Rail. [4029]

Mr. Watts: None

London Underground

26. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on investment in the Northern line of London Underground. [4030]

Mr. Bowis: London Underground re-introduced southbound services last month on the City branch of the Northern line following the completion of tunnel strengthening works and reconstruction of London Bridge station. Three of the 10 station modernisations planned at the southern end of the line have been completed, with four more to follow next year; the project includes the installation of passenger security equipment in the form of monitored help points and closed circuit television systems. A fleet of new, privately financed trains will start to enter service next year on the Northern line. In addition, I understand that London Underground's future plans for the line include substantial improvements to stations, track, signalling and other infrastructure.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total funding of his Department for improvements on the Northern line of London Underground during the last 12 months. [5389]

Mr. Bowis: This Department does not provide grant specifically for investment in the Northern line. Allocation of funds for investment in London Underground is a matter for London Transport. The Government provided a total of £904.55 million in grant to LT in 1995–96. London Underground estimates that capital investment in the Northern line during the 12 months to 9 November 1996 totalled £113 million; this figure excludes investment by GEC-Alsthom in new trains for the line under its private finance initiative contract with London Underground.

A34

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the use of sound-deadening material in the resurfacing of roads with particular reference to the A34 through Botley, North Hinksey and South Hinksey in Oxfordshire. [3704]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Pattern, dated 25 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about his policy on the use of sound deadening material in the resurfacing of roads with particular reference to the A34 through Botley, North Hinksey and South Hinksey in Oxfordshire.

There is no statutory framework to require the Department of Transport to take steps to mitigate nuisance from noise which has increased as a result of traffic growth on an unaltered highway. Therefore, we do not resurface roads other than for safety or maintenance reasons. To do so would be incurring premature costs which would require funding being removed from other genuine maintenance projects.

The Highways Agency can only undertake resurfacing in the most cost effective manner.

When resurfacing works on the A34 through Botley, North Hinskey and South Hinskey become due we shall give careful consideration to the type of material to be used.

Emergency Towing Vessel

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the annual cost of the placing of an emergency towing vessel in (a) the Dover strait, (b) north-western Scotland and (c) the western approaches from 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997. [3640]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Nick Grainger, dated 25 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of placing an emergency towing vessel (ETV) in (a) the Dover Strait, (b) north western Scotland and (c) the western Approaches from 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997.

The cost of each contract for emergency towing vessels at (a),(b) and (c) above are commercial in confidence between the Coastguard Agency and the companies involved. However the total budget for the three ETVs for these areas (to cover charter and running costs) between 1 October 1996 and 31 March 1997 is £3.2m.

M1

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the design capacity of the M1 from junction 1 to Luton; and what is the current traffic flow for the hours of 7 am to 10 am and 4 pm to 7 pm. [4099]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 25 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about design capacity and traffic flows on the M1 between Junction 1 and Luton (Junction 10).

Between M1 Junction 1 and 10, certain lengths of the motorway are much busier than others. Traffic counts on motorways are carried out junction to junction. Data for one small section of this length of the M1 (Junctions 6–6a) are not currently available. Between Junctions 1 and 10 the average flow is therefore the arithmetic mean of traffic for the 8 sections of motorway, but excluding the section between Junction 6 and 6a. The highest recorded flows are between Junctions 7–8 and the lowest flows are between Junctions 1–2. For the three hour periods requested the flows are typically as follows:

Junction	Vehicles Southbound 7 am–10 am	Vehicles Northbound 7 am–10 am	Vehicles Southbound 4 pm–7 pm	Vehicles Northbound 4 pm–7 pm
Average between Junctions 1–10	13,000	8,900	9,500	13,500
Junction 7–8 (dual 4 lanes)	17,800	14,100	14,600	18,070
Junction 1–2 (dual 3 lanes)	10,000	4,500	5,100	9,100

There is no precise definition of a road's capacity since it is dependent upon a number of factors such as alignment, frequency and type of junctions, volume of traffic entering and leaving at junctions, flow composition eg the proportion of heavy goods vehicles, and the weather. There is a relationship between speed and volume such that as a road get busier speeds reduce. However, at lower speeds flows may not decrease but may even increase with vehicles being able to travel safely more closely together. On motorways, speeds normally start to reduce when the flow increases beyond 1,600 vehicles per lane per hour. During a three hour period this equates to a unidirectional vehicular flow of about 14,400 vehicles on a dual three lane motorway, ie Junction 1 to 2, and 19,200 vehicles on a dual four lane motorway, ie Junction 7 to 8. However, the characteristics of the M1 close to London mean that speeds would reduce at lower flows than these.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4533]

Mr. Bowis: The appraisal of environmental issues is a key part of the processes of formulating, developing and implementing my Department's own policies and programmes. We also contribute to the Government's inter-departmental work on green issues, and are taking forward our areas of action as set out in "This Common Inheritance—the 1996 UK Annual Report".

The Department has an environmental policy statement and action plan which follows the principles of BS 7750 on environmental management systems. The aim is to promote cost effective action within the Department to comply with government commitments, legal requirements, approved technical standards and emerging best practice.

Progress made in improving the Department's environmental performance is published in the Department's working environment annual report.

The Government's Green Paper, "Transport: the Way Forward", published in April 1996, sets out the ways in which the Department aims to promote the efficiency, competitiveness and environmental sustainability of transport in the UK.

Train Protection Mechanisms

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the benefits of advanced train protection in preventing accidents; what assessment he has made of the absence of advanced train protection in respect of the Watford accident; and if he will install advanced train protection mechanisms at those locations his Department assesses as presenting the greatest risk of accidents. [5064]

Mr. Watts: The costs and benefits of the BR version of automatic train protection were assessed by the British Railways Board and the independent Health and Safety Commission in 1994–95. On 30 March 1995, the Government endorsed the HSC's view on the future of ATP.

Railtrack remains committed to a co-ordinated programme of measures to reduce the risks of ATP preventable accidents. These measurers comprise Railtrack's train protection strategy and include a driver reminder appliance due to be installed in train cabs during 1997, and a train protection warning system due to be piloted in 1997 and to commence installation by early 1998. TPWS will be installed at those locations assessed by Railtrack to be at greatest risk of TP preventable accidents.

The independent investigation by the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate into the railway accident near Watford junction on 8 August 1996 is continuing. A report will be published by HSE when the investigation is complete.

Cowden Collision Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent Railtrack has complied with the recommendations of the Health and Safety Executive report into the Cowden collision. [5283]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive's report into the accident at Cowden made 15 recommendations, of which 12 were for Railtrack and three for the British Railways Board. Eleven of the recommendations relating to Railtrack are being actioned. The remaining recommendation, which relates to automatic train protection, has been partly accepted by Railtrack and discussions with HSE are continuing. HSE's railway inspectorate is monitoring implementation to ensure compliance.

Buffer Stops

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent Railtrack has complied with the recommendation of the Cannon Street inquiry that proposed the installation at stations of new or modified buffer stops that could provide a maximum retardation of 15 per cent.; and if he will make a statement. [5337]

Mr. Watts: I understand that the installation of new designs of buffer stops is currently in progress. Railtrack's continuous programme of infrastructure maintenance includes the replacement of buffer stops.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 50 busiest Railtrack stations; and which of those are equipped with new or modified buffer stops providing a maximum retardation of 15 per cent. [5335]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive and Department of Transport do not hold this information.

Bull Bars

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the European directive on the protection of occupants of motor vehicles in the event of a frontal impact, if he will introduce measures to outlaw bull bars. [5063]

Mr. Bowis: I am pleased to report some progress in this area. My Department has been fully involved in the preparation of a draft amendment to the external projections directive, 74/483/EEC, which will set standards to prevent the fitting of aggressive bull bars. The Commission has put this forward and I hope that it will be adopted early next year.

Roadside Exhaust System Tests

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many roadside tests on the quality of motor car exhaust systems have taken place in England and Wales since 1 January. [5391]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 25 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many roadside tests on the quality of motor car exhaust systems have taken place in England and Wales since 1 January.

No checks are carried out specifically on the condition of car exhaust systems. However VI Examiners do carry out special checks on car exhaust emissions. General roadworthiness checks are also carried out.

During the 1995/96 financial year 86,936 cars had their exhaust emissions checked. During the same period, roadworthiness checks were carried out on 1,026 cars.

North-eastern and North-western Traffic Areas (Merger)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if operators with bases in the north-western and north-eastern traffic areas will be obliged to pay two licence fees when the offices are merged. [5174]

Mr. Bowis: The location of the office from which a licence is administered does not affect the fees charged. Operators with operator licences in separate traffic areas are required to pay a fee for each licence they hold.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of overtime hours currently worked in (a) the north-western traffic area and (b) the north-eastern traffic area. [5173]

Mr. Bowis: From the beginning of September to date, the total number of overtime hours worked is (a) North Western traffic area 529 and (b) North Eastern traffic area 921.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the current estimate of savings to be made as a result of the closure of the north-western traffic area office; [5175]

(2) what will be the impact on accommodation costs of the merger of the north-western and north-eastern traffic area offices in Leeds. [5176]

Mr. Bowis: The estimated annual savings, in 1996–97 prices, that will be made as a result of closing the north-western traffic area office in Manchester are £1.3 million of which some £267,000 can be attributed to accommodation savings. There will be some expenditure on handling the transferred work. Details have not been finalised and precise estimates of that expenditure are not yet available.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the equipment at the West Drayton air traffic control centre was last replaced. [5108]

Mr. Bowis: Equipment at the West Drayton ATC centre has been regularly updated over the years since the centre was established in the 1970s. For example, the main flight data processing system was replaced in 1990 and there have been further component upgrades since then. All equipment is subject to safety case approval by the safety regulation group.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates and outcome of reviews undertaken on the effectiveness of the air traffic control centre at West Drayton. [5106]

Mr. Bowis: The West Drayton centre is constantly under review. It is subject to a twice-yearly unit safety audit by the safety regulation group and the British Standards Institute has just completed an assessment of the centre and will be recommending that the centre receives ISO9001 accreditation, the first major ATC centre to receive such an accolade in the world.

Road Tax Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many drivers have been convicted of driving without a road tax licence since 1 January. [5390]

Mr. Bowis: The number of people successfully prosecuted for vehicle excise duty evasion since 1 January is 190,392. A further 209,054 evaders paid an-out-of court settlement.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5482]

Mr. Bowis: The Department of Transport is committed to the aim on policy appraisal of the guidance for equal treatment and is active in examining statistics for evidence of differential effects of policy as between men and women; identifying women's concerns;

working with the transport industry to accommodate these concerns in the design and provision of transport and pedestrian environments; and encouraging women to enter and progress in the transport industries.

The Department is guided in its work by a women's transport network comprising women and men from the transport industries, local government and research organisations.

London to Birmingham Motorway Journey Times

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of average journey times from London to Birmingham on the M1–M6 for journeys embarked upon at peak and non-peak times in 1990 and 1996. [5245]

Mr. Watts: None. Journey times are not yet systematically monitored on specific routes on the motorway network. However, the Highways Agency has research under way seeking to measure them automatically by both roadside and vehicle-mounted techniques.

Parking Regulations (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the enforcement of parking regulations on traffic flows; and if he will make a statement. [4450]

Mr. Bowis: In London, the introduction of red route measures, allied to strict enforcement of parking controls by the police, has been demonstrated to reduce congestion. In Sheen town centre, for instance, red route measures have led to an improvement in overall journey times of over 20 per cent. More generally, research undertaken for the Department indicates a clear relationship between reducing the number of illegally parked vehicles and increased traffic speeds.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5427]

Mr. Bowis: I will write to the hon. Member.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes there have been to the required security checks carried out at the (a) English and (b) French sides of the channel tunnel since its opening; and if he will make a statement. [5537]

Mr. Watts: The required security checks vary according to the level of assessed risk. Similar arrangements exist at the French side of the channel tunnel, as agreed by the UK and French Governments.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the security requirements for (a) individual passengers and (b) lorries carrying freight, on the (i) English and (ii) French sides of the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement. [5538]

Mr. Watts: In the UK, the Channel Tunnel (Security) Order 1994 requires the operator of the tunnel and trains that go through it to put in place certain security measures. All traffic is liable to be security screened. It is not our practice to reveal details of the actual measures. Similar requirements exist on the French side of the tunnel.

Vehicle Numbers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of (a) cars and (b) lorries on United Kingdom roads in each of the past 30 years. [5832]

Mr. Bowis: Estimates of licensed vehicle stock in Great Britain, by taxation group, for each year between 1950 and 1995 are published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain", 1996 edition, table 9.5. Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend and learned the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Lorry Weights

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the change in the number of lorries in the United Kingdom following each change in permitted lorry weights in the last 20 years. [5833]

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6036]

Mr. Bowis: I am not aware of any.

In some cases, legislation provides for a specific right of appeal. Otherwise administrative decisions made by or on behalf of the Secretary of State in matters of public law are subject to judicial review at the instance of the affected party, whether or not a UK citizen.

A27 (Worthing)

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the report of the inspector into the future route of the A27 in the Worthing area. [4021]

Mr. Watts: An announcement on the scheme will be made as soon as possible.

Air Services (Liberalisation)

Sir Alan Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been achieved in talks between the United Kingdom and United States Governments on the liberalisation of air services. [4018]

Sir George Young: Formal negotiations with the US Government on the liberalisation of air services will resume in London on 4 to 6 December.

Regional Traffic Control Centres

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role the police would have in the proposed regional traffic control centres; and if he will make a statement. [6120]

Mr. Watts: The general principles underpinning the development of RTCCs have been discussed with the police at national and local level, and the Highways Agency is continuing to work with the Association of Chief Police Officers on all aspects of the proposals. There are no plans to change the role of the police. They will continue to perform their present functions, and will remain responsible for policing the network and for managing traffic in the vicinity of accidents and other incidents.

The centres will complement existing local traffic control and communications systems provided by the agency to enable the police to deal with accidents and other incidents on the network.

Regional traffic control centres will provide a facility for the Highways Agency to manage traffic across the motorway and trunk road network, and improve the co-ordination and dissemination of traffic information.

Bypasses

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what allowance he makes for environmental and road safety benefits accruing to villages arising out of the construction of new bypasses when considering proposed bypasses for transport supplementary grant. [5365]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Environmental and road safety benefits are taken into account in considering whether to accept road schemes for transport supplementary grant. The Department's cost-benefit analysis formula includes a monetary value for road safety improvements. There is no established method of valuing environmental benefits in monetary terms but the environmental impact of a scheme is part of the overall assessment framework.

Air Freight

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the volume of air freight travelling to and from Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [5459]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Cargo services by UK and US airlines between Scotland and the US and by European Economic Area airlines between Scotland and EEA countries are already fully open. It is for the airlines of those countries to decide whether they wish to take up the opportunities available to them. We have also given exceptional permission to Cargolux, Air France and Lufthansa—all non-UK airlines—to operate services between Prestwick and the USA.

Talks with the US Government on aviation issues, including cargo services, are continuing.

In general, we consider sympathetically any request from a foreign airline to operate services to Scotland which are not currently permitted, provided that the UK receives reciprocal treatment from the foreign Government.

Road Haulage Association

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions on which the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) met the Road Haulage Association in his ministerial capacity; and if he will list the principal issues under discussion on each occasion. [5409]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Following the addition of road safety and local transport to my hon. Friend's ministerial responsibilities in July 1994, he met the association on the following occasions:

Date	Meeting
2–3 October 1994	RHA annual conference
9 May 1995	RHA annual dinner
30 August 1995	Jointly with the Freight Transport Association and the Confederation of Passenger Transport at the North East traffic area office
27 September 1995	Meeting with Secretary of State
3–5 October 1995	RHA annual conference (stood in for the Secretary of State)
12 December 1995	Launch of FTA/RHA consignor/consignee liability accord
13 February 1996	Joint meeting with the FTA
3 May 1996	RHA annual tipper convention
14 May 1996	RHA annual dinner
4 June 1996	Launch of good lorry code jointly with the FTA

A wide range of transport topics of interest to the association and its members would have been discussed at the meetings and events.

Wyre Piddle Bypass

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the extent to which the proposed Wyre Piddle bypass will act as a bypass for Wyre Piddle and Pershore; and if he will make a statement. [5291]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 21 November 1996]: I have made no assessment.

The Wyre Piddle northern bypass is contained within Hereford and Worcester county council's 1997–98 transport policies and programmes submission and the accompanying annexe B sets out the projected traffic flows with and without a bypass. It makes no reference to traffic in Pershore.

TREASURY

Allowances

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue which would be raised from abolishing the married couples' allowance and increasing the personal allowance to £5,634 per annum. [4469]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The estimated full-year cost at 1996–97 income levels of abolishing the married couples' allowance and increasing the non-aged personal allowance to £5,634 is £7.7 billion. The estimate has been calculated on the basis that the additional personal allowance and widow's bereavement allowance would also be abolished and that the aged personal allowances would be increased by the same amount as the non-aged personal allowance.

Partnership and Closed Company Registrations

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 392, what estimate he has made of the total value of the tax relief available to (a) partners in partnerships and (b) directors of non-dormant closed companies. [5431]

Mr. Jack: No special reliefs are available to individuals in partnerships or to directors or participators in close companies. Information is not available about the total value of reliefs available to these two groups of taxpayers.

Revenue and Expenditure Balance (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list at 1996–97 prices the cumulative public sector balance between revenue and expenditure for Scotland from 1979–80 to 1994–95 after deducting a GDP share of the United Kingdom general government borrowing requirement, a GDP share of privatisation proceeds and allocating 90 per cent. of oil revenues to Scottish revenue. [1382]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 31 October 1996]: The table shows the calculations requested. The method proposed for calculating Scotland's budget balance, by simply assuming that the shares of Scotland in total expenditures and revenues are in proportion to Scotland's share of GDP, is misconceived, since it takes no account of available information of government expenditure and revenue in Scotland. Approximate estimates of these are published in the "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland" annual report. These show much higher borrowing figures for Scotland in recent years than given by the requested calculations.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number and percentage of households which have nobody in work for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each region. [2817]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 25 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of households with nobody in employment.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many full-time jobs have been created in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each other member state of the European Union in each of the last six years. [4771]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Robert N. Wareing, dated 25 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of full-time jobs created in the United Kingdom and the European Union in the last six years.

Information is available only for the net change in employment, which can be calculated by comparing figures for different years.

Information showing the number of persons working full-time in European Union member states is published in Eurostat's Labour Force Survey Results for each year between 1989 and 1995 (Table 48 from 1992 to 1995 and Table 41 for earlier years). Copies of the publication are available in the House of Commons Library. The latest available for the United Kingdom is provided in the following table.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, on the same departmental basis as table 6.4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97" the breakdown of the total private capital invested in the PFI scheme for the period before 1996–97. [4050]

Mr. Jack: Table 6.4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97" provided aggregated figures for capital expenditure under the private finance initiative. Table 6.5 of the report provided the information on a departmental basis for the years 1996–97 to 1998–99.

A breakdown of the capital investment in PFI prior to that is as follows.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in 1997–98 of abolishing inheritance tax; if he will estimate the number of individuals who would be better off in 1997–98 as a consequence of such a policy; and if he will estimate the average annual monetary gain to each individual. [3246]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: It is provisionally estimated that, in 1997–98, about 19,000 transfers made on death and in lifetime will have an aggregate inheritance tax liability of £1.6 billion, and an average tax liability of around £85,000. Information on the likely number of beneficiaries is not available.

Industrial Action

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many days were lost due to industrial action in the first quarter of 1996; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the last 15 years. [4818]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Sir Irvine Patnick, dated 25 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of days lost to labour disputes.

The data requested are in the attached table.

Labour disputes statistics cover all stoppages of work connected with terms and conditions of employment, except those involving fewer than ten workers or lasting less than one day. These are excluded unless the total number of working days lost in the dispute is greater than 100.

Number of working days lost in the United Kingdom due to labour disputes

1994	15
1995	71

[1] Data for 1996 are provisional.

Golden Shares

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those privatised companies in which the Government hold golden shares; and what is the percentage of share capital in each case. [5703]

Mr. Jack: Her Majesty's Government hold a golden or special share in the following companies:

Cable and Wireless
Sealink Stena Line
BT
British Aerospace
VSEL Consortium
British Gas
Rolls Royce BAA
National Grid
National Power
PowerGen
Scottish Power
Scottish Hydro Electric
British Technology Group
British Technology Group International
Northern Ireland Electricity
Belfast International Airport
British Energy
AEAT.

The nominal value of each special share is £1, representing a minute proportion of the authorised share capital in all cases.

Unemployment

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people (a) in total, and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24, (ii) 25 to 34, (iii) 35 to 44, (iv) 45 to 54, (v) 55 to 64 and (vi) 65-plus years have experienced at least one spell of unemployment since 1992 in the United Kingdom (1) as an absolute figure and (2) as a percentage of the economically active work force in the relevant age band. [1894]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Judith Church, dated 25 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people have experienced at least one spell of unemployment since 1992 in the United Kingdom, by age.

The available data are shown in the following table. Data are only available for Great Britain.

Number of people in Great Britain who have experienced at least one spell of claimant unemployment since January 1992

Age band (years)	Number of people (thousands)
16–24	3,813.0
25–34	2,588.8
35–44	1,700.3
45–54	1,472.6
55–64	735.1
65 and over	0.4
All ages	10,310.9

It is not possible to calculate proportions as a percentage of the economically active workforce because the corresponding number of people who have never been economically active over the period is not known—only point in time estimates of the latter are available.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of in 1997–98 of abolishing capital gains tax; if he will estimate the number of individuals who would be better off in 1997–98 as a consequence of such a policy; if he will estimate the average annual monetary gain to each individual; and if he will make a statement on the plans he has to ensure that the abolition of capital gains tax does not open up a tax loophole resulting in the loss of income tax revenues. [3247]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: It is provisionally estimated that 105,000 taxpayers will have an aggregate capital gains tax liability of £1.3 billion for 1997–98. The average tax liability is around £12,400. These figures exclude gains made by companies which are charged to corporation tax.

It is not appropriate to comment further on possible changes to the tax system in the run-up to the Budget.

Births

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many births were registered in Great Britain in each of the last 15 years. [2950]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The information falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 25 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of live births that occurred in Great Britain in each of the last fifteen years.

The figures requested are shown in the attached table.

1991	766,241

1993	736,755
1994	726,382
1995	708,189

Taxation (Tobacco and Alcohol)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much revenue was received from taxation on tobacco sold in the United Kingdom in each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year; [4557]

(2) how much revenue was received from taxation on alcohol sold in the United Kingdom in each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year. [4558]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The information requested is given in the table:

	Tobacco tax in real terms (at 1995 prices) £ million	Percentage change[1]	Alcohol tax in real terms (at 1995 prices) £ million	Percentage change[1]
1992	8,520	7.6	9,260	3.8
1993	9,490	13.1	9,240	1.4
1994	9,250	–0.2	9,550	5.8
1995	9,310	4.2	9,600	3.9

[1] The percentage change is the value of current price tax receipts compared to the previous year. The figures cover excise duty and VAT. Value added tax has been estimated from Office for National Statistics figures for consumers' expenditure on tobacco and alcohol. Tax in real terms is calculated using the retail prices index (all items).

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of revenue lost through the smuggling of tobacco into the United Kingdom for each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year; [4553]

(2) what estimate he has made of revenue lost through the smuggling of alcohol into the United Kingdom for each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year. [4554]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 November 1996]: Based on a survey conducted in June 1996, Customs has estimated that the annual revenue evaded through smuggling currently amounts to some £560 million for tobacco products and some £210 million for alcoholic drinks—these estimates do not include commercial fraud. Total revenue collected amounts to £18,640 million in 1995–96. The actual loss of revenue to the Exchequer will be less as some of the smuggling is likely to represent additional consumption. Estimates are not available for earlier years.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much revenue was received from duties on tobacco imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year; [4555]

(2) how much revenue was received from duties on alcohol imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year. [4556]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 November 1996]: Estimates of the excise duty on commercial imports of tobacco products and alcoholic drinks are shown below. Data for customs duties are not readily available.

	Tobacco products		Alcoholic drinks
	Real terms at 1995 prices £ million	Percentage change[1]	Real terms at 1995 prices £ million	Percentage change[1]
1992	630	–2.4	1,780	7.6
1993	640	4.5	1,870	6.9
1994	1,020	62.9	1,920	5.2
1995	930	–6.4	1,790	–3.5

[1] The percentage change in the value of current price duty receipts compared to the previous year.

Figures in real terms have been calculated using the retail prices index (all items).

Customs and Excise

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the funding of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each year since 1992 (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change on the previous year. [4559]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The funding of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each year since 1992 in real terms, together with the percentage change on the previous year, is as follows:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97[1]
Percentage change on previous year	5.5	5.9	–4.6	–0.9	–3.7	–3.7

[1] Estimate.

The figures in 1992–93 are high because of costs associated with the implementation of the single market. Reductions from 1995–96 result largely from recommendations in the fundamental expenditure review which focused resources on risk, and increased intelligence and investigation activity. The impact of the FER is subject to evaluation and Ministers will consider future funding for Customs and Excise in the light of the outcome.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4995]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The Treasury will be introducing its resource accounting system on 1 April 1997. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Arms Sales

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what prosecutions he is considering in respect of arms sales to Rwanda or Zaire. [5290]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Anyone in possession of information which might suggest offences have been committed should make that material available to the commissioners of Customs and Excise and it will be thoroughly examined.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the average revenue from the landfill tax (a) nationally and (b) in relation to the Hill and Moor landfill site, Worcesteshire. [5366]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 November 1996]: In the 1995 Budget, the net revenue yield from the landfill tax was estimated to be £110 million in 1996–97 and £450 million in a full year. The landfill tax is levied at a rate of £7 per tonne for active waste and £2 per tonne for non-active waste. The annual revenue from any particular site will depend on the size and scope of its operations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Seal Cull (Russia)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what research purpose the 500 harp seals and the 500 fully grown females referred to in the letter referred to in his answer, 10 June, Official Report, column 40, were taken. [5433]

Dr. Liam Fox: When the issue of seal research was raised at senior official level with the Russian authorities in September, they said that details of these activities would not be available until November.

The British embassy in Moscow wrote to the Russian authorities on 4 November to find out if the information is now ready. It followed this up on several occasions and was advised on 20 November that the information is not yet available.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often the British embassy in Moscow has recently contacted the Russian authorities about the seal cull in the White sea; when was the last time the British embassy was contacted; and if he will make a statement. [5340]

Dr. Fox: The issue of seal culling and the use of seals for research was raised at senior official level with the Russian authorities in September. The British embassy has followed up these discussions on several occasions since then. Officials were advised that details fo research activities would be available in November. The embassy was last contacted by the Russian authorities on 20 November when it was advised that the information was not yet available.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Sri Lanka. [5387]

Dr. Liam Fox We discuss a wide range of issues with the Sri Lanka Government. Most recently, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I met the Sri Lankan Foreign Minister on 14 October. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary visited Sri Lanka from 30 to 31 August. I visited from 25 to 29 September.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in northern and eastern Sri Lanka [5385]

Dr Fox: We continue to believe that the conflict in Sri Lanka can be resolved only through a negotiated settlement.

We have urged the Government of Sri Lanka and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam to make every effort to protect the civilian population and to work actively to reach a negotiated settlement.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what economic, humanitarian and military assistance has been given to the Government of Sri Lanka in the last year. [5388]

Dr Fox: Our bilateral aid programme to Sri Lanka is some £6.8 million for 1996–97 of which about £1.4 million will be spent through Oxfam and Save the Children Fund on relief and rehabilitation for those displaced by the conflict in the north and east. We have also provided emergency assistance to help those displaced in the north. Details of military assistance are confidential between Governments.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government's representatives last visited Jaffna; and at what level. [5386]

Dr Fox: Our high commissioner in Colombo visited Jaffna on 31 October.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a representative of the British high commission in Cyprus will next visit the Karpass area of northern occupied Cyprus. [5393]

Mr. David Davis: The British high commission regularly sends representatives to visit all areas of Cyprus, including the Karpass. The most recent visit to the Karpass area was on 11 October 1996.

Land Mines

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other member states of the European Union in respect of a common policy on the sale of land mines; and if he will make a statement. [5505]

Mr. David Davis: The EU has had a common moratorium on the export of all anti-personnel land mines to all destinations since 1 October, when it adopted a strengthened joint action on anti-personnel land mines. The UK has had such a moratorium in place since April.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5417]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the FCO departmental reports and to the civil service statistics and staff in post summary tables which contain information on full-time, part-time and casual staff employed by this department and its executive agencies. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

This Department has a policy of flexible employment. Jobs are not specifically set aside for different types of contract. Information on contractual arrangements is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rwandan Refugees (Zaire)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the United Nations to ensure the distribution of food and water to Rwandan refugees in Zaire takes place. [5163]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are in close and regular contact with UN agencies and with the parties in the region to assess requirements and to ensure wider distribution of humanitarian relief to those in most need. We are also engaged in intensive consultations with potential partners and the UN on possible roles for the temporary multinational force authorised under United Nations Security Council resolution 1080, and the humanitarian task force the UN Secretary-General was requested to plan for in UNSCR 1078.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced on 20 November that the UK is providing a further £10 million of assistance to the Great Lakes region to help meet immediate humanitarian needs and support the long-term needs arising from the return of refugees to their homes.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6026]

Dr. Liam Fox: It is unclear precisely how the hon. Member defines administrative decisions and it would incur disproportionate cost to list all administrative decisions taken.

The introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 resulted in the withdrawal of the statutory right of appeal for foreign nationals applying for most categories of short-term entry clearance—that is, a stay of six months or less. Administrative decisions in such cases can be reviewed in the courts.

British passports are issued under the royal prerogative and there is no statutory right of appeal against administrative decisions relating to their grant or refusal. Such decisions can, however, be reviewed by the courts.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it a condition of Spain joining the integrated military structure of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation that there will be no Spanish military influence or control over Gibraltar or its territorial waters. [5732]

Mr. David Davis: There can be no question of Spanish command over the territory of Gibraltar, or of any arrangement which allowed Spain to use NATO to take forward its claim to sovereignty over Gibraltar.

Sudan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the advantages of holding an internationally monitored referendum for the people of southern Sudan in respect of self-determination. [4656]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Sudan needs constitutional arrangements acceptable to its people in all parts of the country, but the best way of ascertaining their views has yet to be decided. A referendum may be part of a settlement to the civil war. But much will depend on whether satisfactory answers can be found to issues such as timing, the nature of the question and acceptability and implementation of the result.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current state of peace initiatives in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [4657]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The peace initiative of the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development which is supported by the United Kingdom and other western countries through the Friends of IGAD, FOI, has stalled. We hope that an initiative to involve the Friends of IGAD more closely with the work of IGAD will help to re-energise it. The Government of Sudan are pursuing a strategy of "peace from within". They have signed a political charter with some of the southern groups. They claim that they are ready to talk to the Sudan People's Liberation Army, which has not signed the charter.

The SPLA remain wedded to the declaration of principles that the Government of Sudan rejected at the last substantive round of IGAD talks. Many observers are unclear that the political charter represents a serious peace initiative. But we have called on the SPLA to test out the Government's good faith by talking to them.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions he has met representatives of southern Sudanese groups in the last year; with which groups he met; at what locations; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [4661]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 November 1996]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met the Sudan People's Liberation Army leader, John Garang, in Nairobi in August and urged him to respond constructively to overtures from Khartoum. As well as attending my right hon. and noble Friend's meeting with John Garang, our ambassador in Khartoum has met him separately this year and met South Sudan Independence Movement leader Riek Machar, who has signed the political charter with the Government of Sudan, twice also. He has also met representatives of the Union of Sudan Africa Parties and Nuba Mountains in Nairobi and regularly sees a wide range of southern elders living in Khartoum and when he is on tour. Officials in London have held meetings with representatives of southern groups on around 12 occasions this year, in addition to seeing them at more general events. Officials in Cairo and Nairobi also see southern Sudanese representatives.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the budget for Her Majesty's ambassador to Sudan for visits to (a) outlying areas of the Government-held part of Sudan and (b) non-Government-held areas in the south for the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [4650]

Mr. Hanley: The embassy's local and regional travel budget for this financial year is £9,051. It does not distinguish between travel to Government-held areas and travel to non-Government-held areas.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the visits Her Majesty's ambassador to Sudan has made to peripheral areas of the Government-held part of Sudan in the last 12 months, indicating the locations, dates and durations; and if he will make a statement. [4651]

Mr. Hanley [holding reply of 18 November 1996]: During the last 12 months, the ambassador has made the following trips to Government-held destinations outside Khartoum: Northern province (archaeological sites), 18 to 23 November 1995; Nuba mountains via El Obeid, 25 to 31 January 1996; El Da'ein (south Darfur), 4 July; Kosti, 27 July; Juba, 3 August; Damazin/Roseires, 8 and 9 November; and Kassala/Gedaref, 15 to 17 November.

Members of the ambassador's staff have made a further 11 visits, including to Port Sudan—twice—and to the Government-held towns of Wau and Juba in the south.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British diplomats, of what rank and in what location, work in Britain's relations with the Sudan; what proportion of their time is taken up by the Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [4692]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 November 1996]: There are currently 11 UK-based staff at the British embassy in Khartoum. The ambassador is a member of the FCO senior management structure. The embassy will shortly be reduced by one member of staff as a result of an efficiency inspection carried out this summer. Relations with Sudan and support to the embassy are looked after by a team at various levels in London. Relief aid is handled by a separate team at the ODA. It is not possible to list them or to break down the time they each devote to Sudan.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in the last three months from (a) members of the public and (b) hon. Members concerning Her Majesty's Government's efforts to promote a resolution to the war in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [4658]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 November]: Between 15 August and 20 November Foreign Office Ministers replied to 92 letters from right hon. and hon. Members about Sudan. Many of those have simply asked for comments on the circular letter from Rev. Dr. Richard Rodgers. We have received 154 representations from members of the public, of which 102 were postcards which Dr. Rogers provided to his supporters and asked them to send in. Those have been replied to by officials.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in the last four months concerning conditions and standards in Kober prison, Khartoum north; and if he will make a statement. [4660]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 November 1996]: We have received one representation about Kober prison. The embassy in Khartoum brought the allegations to the attention of the Government of Sudan. The Government of Sudan replied that action had been taken against a member of staff accused of killing a prisoner.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4539]

The Solicitor-General: I am the Green Minister for the Law Officers' Departments and agencies and at my meetings with their chief executives and finance officers I seek to ensure that environmental considerations are taken fully into account in operational matters, including procurement and accommodation management.

Lenient Sentences (Complaints)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Attorney-General how many complaints of undue leniency in sentencing have been referred to the Crown Prosecution Service under the Criminal Justice Act 1986; and how many of these have been referred on to the Attorney-General. [4626]

The Solicitor-General: Approximately 80,000 cases prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service result in conviction and sentence at the Crown court annually. A significant number of these cases fall within the category of offences subject to review under the provision of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. The Crown Prosecution Service has established systems to ensure the most careful consideration to any sentence which could potentially be appropriate for review. Information on the total number of cases considered by the Crown Prosecution Service since the passing of the Act is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

West Midland Serious Crime Squad

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list, with dates and charges, the 27 people whose convictions have been quashed as a result of discredited evidence from the West Midland serious crime squad. [4508]

The Solicitor-General: I have taken the hon. Member's question to relate to those cases detailed in the two written answers given to the hon. Member by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 16 February 1994, Official Report, column 782.

A revised list incorporating the outcome of those appeals which were pending before the Court of Appeal on 16 February 1994 is shown:

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6022]

The Solicitor-General: Decisions of the Law Officers are not subject to any statutory right of appeal.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation Task Force

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the current chairman proposes to relinquish his position as chairman of the deregulation task force. [5578]

Mr. Freeman: The right hon. Francis Maude's current appointment as chairman of the deregulation task force is until September 1997.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proposals he intends to bring forward to meet the deregulation task force targets for a reduction in business costs by 2000. [5577]

Mr. Freeman: The deregulation task force has produced two annual reports, in September 1995 and September 1996. The Government accepted the majority of the recommendations in both these reports.

In its 1995 report, the deregulation task force recommended that the burden of Government surveys be cut by 25 per cent. In response, the Government set up an independent study which reported in September 1996. The study put forward a number of recommendations which will reduce businesses costs in completing Government surveys by 26 per cent.—or £17.5 million per year—by the year 2000, without damaging the quality of essential data collected.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minster what steps he intends to take to broaden the membership of the deregulation task force. [5575]

Mr. Freeman: Two new members were appointed to the deregulation task force in September. They are Henry Angest, who is chairman and chief executive of Secure Trust Group plc, a financial services company, and Thomas Swan who runs Thomas Swan and Co Ltd., a chemical manufacturing, biotechnology and scientific equipment company. There are no current plans for further additions to the membership.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what were his criteria for establishing membership of the deregulation task force. [5576]

Mr. Freeman: All members of the task force were appointed for the expertise and experience they could contribute to its work as individuals. Members were selected from a large number of sources, including the lists held by the Cabinet Office public appointments unit.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is his policy towards members of the deregulation task force holding the position of prospective parliamentary candidate. [5574]

Mr. Freeman: The deregulation task force is an advisory body. As is the case with all non-departmental public bodies, the members of the task force have been appointed for the expertise they can contribute to its work. All the recommendations the task force makes to the Government are considered entirely on their merits, and in the light of views of others.

Civil Servants (Secondments)

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the seconded civil servants referred to in his answer of 24 July, Official Report, column 455, by the Departments from which they were seconded. [4709]

Mr. Freeman: Many Government Departments, together with a few executive agencies, have seconded staff to the European Commission as national experts. The number of staff each Department/agency has seconded—with the exception of Northern Ireland Departments, where separate details are not recorded—for each of the last four years together with the current position is as follows:

Human Rights and Political Prisoners (China)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister with whom he raised the issue of human rights and political prisoners when he officially visited China recently. [5535]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 4 June, Official Report, column 333.

Equal Opportunities (Civil Service)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made towards achieving equality of opportunity in the civil service. [6139]

Mr. Freeman: Considerable progress has been made. I have today published two reports on equal opportunities in the civil service—the 1996 data summary and "Equal Opportunities in the Civil Service—A Progress Report". The representation of women, members of the ethnic minorities and disabled people has increased against a backdrop of reducing staff members. Copies of both reports have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Band Competitions (Policing)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the additional costs for the Royal Ulster Constabulary of policing band competitions in Comber, County Down on (a) 17 May, (b) 29 June and (c) 20 September. [3897]

Sir John Wheeler: The competitions were policed from within existing local police resources. There were, therefore, no additional costs for the RUC.

Firearms Licences

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of firearms licences are issued on personal protection grounds; and how many are issued for target shooting. [4456]

Sir John Wheeler: The Chief Constable has advised me that on 31 October 1996 there were 134,103 registered firearms in Northern Ireland. Of these, 10,681, or 8 per cent., were authorised as personal protection weapons, 1,805, or 1.3 per cent., for target shooting and 260, or 0.2 per cent., were for both purposes.

RUC (Suicides)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department is taking to reduce the level of suicides by members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary who use personal protection weapons to end their lives; and how many such suicides have been recorded by the RUC since 1976. [4457]

Sir John Wheeler: Over the past 20 years, the number of suicides in the community has increased and a changing pattern has emerged. Not surprisingly, this has been reflected to some degree in the RUC. The force welfare branch was established in 1972 and, following extensive research, the occupational health unit was established in 1986. Each suicide of an RUC officer has been studied in detail to try to establish factors that might assist in early recognition of difficulties and allow preventive strategies to be put in place. The force has employed several strategies to address the problem from as many angles as possible.

A stress working party to oversee and review the effectiveness of new initiatives was set up some years ago. Initiatives introduced in the force include: a video dealing with alcohol problems; a stress package administered by specially trained officers; supervisory training giving information on the identification and treatment of stress; promotion of physical fitness training; and a health screening service to help to identify individuals who exhibit high stress. In addition, recruiting procedures have been monitored, with particular attention given to past health problems and any effect that they may have on the individual as a serving police officer. Families of prospective recruits also have the opportunity to learn about problems that may arise and the signs to be aware of. Since 1976, there have been 53 suicides of full-time RUC officers, both regulars and reserves. Of these, a firearm was used in 45 cases.

A recent survey by the university of Ulster estimated that there are between 3,125 and 5,125 Chinese, 1,050 Indians, 641 Pakistanis and 1,366 travellers living in Northern Ireland. The social security computer systems do not hold details of ethnicity in relation to the statistics on the unemployed.

1995–96	735	188	923

As Health and personal social services are provided on an integrated basis the breakdown shown is an estimated apportionment.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5422]

Sir John Wheeler: In the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments and their executive agencies, the information is not available in the format requested.

Class Sizes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 669, if he will publish such information as his Department has collated in respect of the range of class sizes in which five, six and seven-year-olds are taught. [5157]

Mr. Ancram: Details of the number of classes within specified size ranges are collected from each nursery and primary school. Class size information by age or year group is not recorded.

Homework Centres

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 670, relating to homework centres, if he will place a copy of the inspectorates's report in the Library; and what assessment he has made of the contribution of homework centres to (a) home school support and (b) educational achievement. [5158]

Mr. Ancram: The education and training inspectorate's report was an interim report, not for publication. The inspectorate will conduct a further evaluation of the homework centres during this academic year, which will address, among other things, the contribution of the centres to home-school liaison and the schools' views on the educational progress and achievements of the pupils who attend. This report will be published and I will place a copy in the Library.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the recommended ambulance response times to (a) urban localities and (b) rural localities in each health trust area. [5155]

Mr. Moss: The recommended ambulance response times as per charter standards are based on population densities. Based on this criteria, the Eastern board area is classified as rural so that 50 per cent. of emergency calls should be answered within eight minutes and 95 per cent. within 18 minutes. The other three board areas are classified as separately populated, so that 50 per cent. of emergency calls should be answered within eight minutes and 95 per cent. within 21 minutes. According to those criteria, there are deemed to be no urban areas in Northern Ireland. There is no breakdown for each health trust area.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the health trust areas that have failed to meet recommended ambulance response times in each of the past five years. [5156]

Mr. Moss: Unfortunately, the information is not available in the format requested. As response times are collected on a health board basis, the information cannot be provided on a trust by trust basis.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the percentage of total ambulance call-outs in each health trust area in each of the past five years which were (a) within and (b) outside recommended response times. [5159]

Mr. Moss: Unfortunately, the information is not available in the format requested. As response times are collected on a health board basis, the information cannot be provided by health trust areas. However, in all board areas, 50 per cent. of emergency calls were answered within the eight minutes Orcon target. The following boards failed to meet the 95 per cent. target over the past five years:

However, the table lists the health board areas in which the recommended response times have not been met in the last five years:

Year	Board area	Performance target 95 per cent.	Calls met per cent.
1991–92	Southern	21 minutes	91.4
	Western	21 minutes	92.6
1992–93	Eastern	18 minutes	94.8
	Northern	21 minutes	94.9
1993–94	Eastern	18 minutes	93.5
1994–95	Eastern	18 minutes	94.8
	Southern	21 minutes	94.7
1995–96	All targets met

The recommended ambulance response times as per charter standards are based on population densities. Based on this criteria, EHSSB is classified as rural, i.e. emergency calls per cent. within 8 minutes, 95 per cent. within 18 minutes. The other three smaller Boards are classified as sparsely populated i.e. emergency calls 50 per cent. within 8 minutes, 95 per cent. within 21 minutes.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the future of the Northern Ireland education and library boards. [5191]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to my statement of 25 June 1996 on the review of educational administration and to the draft Education and library Boards (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, which was published on 16 October 1996. Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Northern Ireland Forum regarding the future of the Northern Ireland education and library boards. [5193]

Mr. Ancram: I have received an interim report by the Northern Ireland Forum for political dialogue on its investigation of educational administration in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with community representatives regarding the future of the Northern Ireland education and library boards. [5192]

Mr. Ancram: I have recently had discussions with a wide range of community representatives, including Members of Parliament and district councillors, as well as representatives of the education and library boards.

In-work Benefits

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown of expenditure on in–work benefits in each of the past five years. [5731]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Family credit (£'million)	Disability working Allowance [1] (£'million)	Housing Benefit [2]
1991–92	37.2	—	n/a
1992–93	47.8	0.1	n/a
1993–94	56.5	0.2	n/a
1994–95	62.1	0.4	n/a
1995–96 [3]	71.0	0.9	n/a

[1] Disability working allowance was introduced in April 1992.
[2] It is not possible to identify separately the amount of housing benefit paid to those in employment.
[3] Estimated figures.

Child Care

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the (a) women who are mothers and (b) men who are fathers who are employed by his Department have received assistance from the Department with child care. [1281]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 4 November 1996]: Although Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments collect statistical information on staff employed in Government Departments and executive agencies, information is not collected on parental status of individual staff. It would be inappropriate for us to request this information from staff and difficult to justify the collection of such data. However, in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments the following child care assistance is available or planned:

Special Leave with Pay;

Reimbursement of expenses when normal working routine is broken by job demands;

Access to Parent Partnership Scheme run by the Northern Ireland Childminding Association;

Childcare information package;

Holiday Playschemes which cater for the children of staff during school holidays have been developed at eight locations in Northern Ireland; and

A pre-school nursery subsidy scheme offering financial assistance currently operating in the Department of the Environment and the Child Support Agency.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organophosphate Warble Fly Dressing

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has undertaken into the effect of organophosphate warble fly dressing on cattle. [461]

Mrs. Browning: All veterinary medicines, including warble fly treatments, are assessed against statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy, including the safety of the target animal concerned. The Government are advised on this by the independent scientific veterinary products committee. Manufacturers are required to produce their research as part of the authorisation process for their products and my Department does not undertake nor fund any such research.

The use of organophosphorus compounds as insecticides, particularly during the campaign to eradicate warble fly, has been claimed either to cause BSE or to render cows susceptible to BSE. The original epidemiological investigation considered any possible association between the use of agricultural chemicals, including OP insecticides, and the occurrence of BSE. None was found. The only positive correlation found was in relation to the use of animal feed which contained ruminant protein in the form of meat and bone meal. MAFF has not undertaken any research on the suggested link between BSE and organophosphates.

The independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has considered the OP theory and concluded that it fails to explain a number of key facts about BSE. It, too, has concluded that there is no justification to extend the current transmissible spongiform encephalopathies research to include the OP theory.

A study was carried out by the toxicology unit of the Medical Research Council to test whether an OP could bind to "normal" prion protein—an essential prerequisite for the development of BSE, according to the OP theory. The scientists conducting the experiment concluded that there was no evidence of binding. This experiment was conducted by the MCR with its own funds and although MAFF was informed we had no part in its design.

Rabies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate his Department has made of the cost of eradicating an outbreak of rabies in the United Kingdom. [3447]

Mrs. Browning: We estimate that eradicating a single outbreak of rabies might cost the public purse £4 million. Added to this would be the costs of disruption to individuals and business, possibly for several months.

Badgers

Ms Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will place in the Library the results from tests carried out on badgers culled by his officials at Amberley, Stroud; [3761]

(2) what factors underlay his Department's decision to kill 30 badgers at Amberley, Stroud; and if he will make a statement. [3762]

Mrs. Browning: Seventeen badgers—not 30—have recently been culled from a farm in the vicinity of Amberley, Stroud. Laboratory cultures on tissues from these badgers has not yet been completed—this normally takes six to eight weeks—but I will place the result in the Library of the House when available.

The approach taken before a decision to kill any a badgers for tuberculosis control purposes is as follows. After a confirmed outbreak of bovine tuberculosis, a veterinary investigation is undertaken. All possible causes other than badgers are considered. If all are ruled out and there is evidence of badger activity on the farm, a badger source is suspected.

Any action to trap and humanely kill the badgers on the affected land will be authorised by senior veterinary staff if there has been a previous outbreak within the same parish in the previous six years, as was the case at Amberley. If there has been no outbreak within this time period, the evidence is considered by a sub-committee of the independent consultative panel on badgers and bovine tuberculosis. Where it is believed that the disease was transmitted to cattle on part of the farm, only badgers which use that part of the farm may be trapped and humanely killed.

Badgers can be trapped and humanely killed only by the Ministry's wildlife unit on that part of the farm where it is believed that the disease was transmitted to the reactor cattle, or the whole of the farm if it is not possible to be more precise.

Poultry Meat Inspection

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many poultry meat inspectors were employed by each local authority in each year since 1979. [5499]

Mrs. Browning: The Department does not hold figures on the number of poultry meat inspectors employed by each local authority. Since 1 April 1995, poultry meat inspectors have been employed by the Meat Hygiene Service, an Executive Agency of the Ministry.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions there have been for breaches of the Poultry Meat Hygiene Regulations 1995. [5500]

Mrs. Browning: There have been no prosecutions to date for offences under the Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995.

Butter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what change has been made to the European Commission's definition of butter; for what reasons and when the change was made; and how the new definition differs from the old. [4370]

Mr. Baldry: There has been no change in the definition of butter for the purposes of administering the preferential access quota for New Zealand butter imports into the EU. The European Commission concluded in June of this year that spreadable butter did not conform with this definition and was not, therefore, eligible for the preferential rate of duty which applies to imports of butter from New Zealand under the GATT current access quota.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4524]

Mr. Boswell: The Department will shortly undertake specific environmental audits at some of its major sites as a continuing part of its green housekeeping strategy. We are committed to observing wherever possible best environmental practice in the management of our estate, in our approach to purchasing goods and services, in the disposal of waste and in all of our day-to-day operations.

We promote sound and cost-effective environmental practices and foster an understanding of environmental issues amongst the staff.

The Department also has a number of wider initiatives to improve environmental performance. These include appraisal of the environmental impacts of policies where these are significant; monitoring and evaluation of policies to provide feedback on environmental performance; and annual review of the Department's environmental commitments in "This Common Inheritance; UK Annual Report". I am the Department's nominated Green Minister, charged with integrating environmental considerations into our strategies and policies.

The Department also supports initiatives in the agricultural industry to improve environmental performance and competitiveness through achieving recognised environmental standards. The LEAF initiative—linking the environment and farming—is one example of an industry-led environmental audit. The MAFF codes of good agricultural practice set out industry-wide standards for the protection of air, soil and water.

Surplus Beef

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the advantages of introducing a distribution scheme to give away surplus beef held in storage. [4580]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Sir R. Howell) on 19 November 1996, Official Report, column 471.

Planning Constraints

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that planning constraints on agricultural buildings are applied equally to a small and large farm holdings; and if he will make a statement. [4924]

Mr. Boswell: We have no plans to seek a change to the thresholds for agricultural permitted development rights in the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 under which holdings of less than five hectares have more limited rights than larger holdings.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4951]

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Food Surpluses (Storage)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the nature and quantity of foods of European Union surpluses that are in storage within the United Kingdom. [5437]

Mr. Baldry: Tables showing levels of all produce held in intervention within the EU, with levels for the UK separately identified, are placed in the House at regular intervals, most recently on 19 November.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the (a) average, (b) minimum and (c) maximum payment made in 1995 under the arable area payments scheme. [5699]

Mr. Baldry: The following table sets out the information requested for payments in England. Some claimants will have received more than one payment. The minimum figures given are for the smallest payments actually made; for most counties the minimum would otherwise have been nil because some claims will have been totally disallowed.

Culled Cattle Storage

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many culled cattle are currently in storage awaiting destruction; where they are stored; and what is the total cost to date of storage. [5700]

Mr. Baldry: As at 15 November 907,477 animals had been slaughtered under the over-30-month scheme, of which 33,624 had been directly incinerated. The carcases of 177,586 animals were held in 40 cold stores at various locations throughout the UK. In addition 112,803 tonnes of meat and bonemeal and 71,451 tonnes of tallow from the rendered remains of OTMS cattle were held in seven MBM stores and two tallow stores awaiting eventual incineration. Storage costs since slaughtering under the scheme began in May were £3.39 million.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6019]

Mr. Boswell: I regret that the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Horse Sales

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many sales at which horses have been sold for export have been notified to his divisional veterinary managers between 1 January and 30 September; [2690]

(2) how many premises have been certified by his officials for the sale of horses for export for (a) 1995 and (b) between 1 January and 30 September 1996. [2691]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 7 November 1996:]: Divisional veterinary managers were notified of a number of sales of horses in the nine months to 30 September 1996. But no horses were certified for export to other European Union member states directly from those sales.

As at 30 September 1996 there were 41 approved markets in Great Britain with facilities to handle horses for intra-Community trade. Prior to this year, livestock markets were not approved specifically for the handling of horses for intra-Community trade. It is not necessary for sales at which horses are certified for export to non-EU member states to be approved by divisional veterinary managers.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he issues in respect of the definition of premises of origin for the purposes of export health certification; and for how many days animals have to be held at such premises prior to export. [4255]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: There is no specific definition of premises of origin. For cattle and pigs for breeding and production, there is a requirement that the animals have remained on holdings for 30 days preceding loading or since birth. Time spent at an approved collection centre, assembly point or place of loading may be counted as part of the 30-day period. Similarly, rams for breeding must be kept for 60 days on a holding where no case of contagious epididymitis has been diagnosed in the previous 12 months.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live sheep have been exported from the United Kingdom between July and October, inclusive. [4250]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: The information gathered by the Ministry's staff monitoring exports at Dover shows that the number of live sheep exported during this period was:

	Number
July	131,730
August	142,398
September	139,767
October	118,696

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many loadings of consignments of sheep destined for export have been supervised by MAFF full-time staff since March 1996. [4251]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: The loadings of 16 consignments of sheep were supervised in this period.

Southall Horse Market

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his officials last inspected the Southall horse market; what was the outcome; and if he will make a statement. [3994]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The last inspection visit was made on the 30 October 1996. Discussions on the welfare standards to be observed were also held with representatives of the market operator.

Lydden Lairage (Incident)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what report he has received regarding an incident at Lydden lairage on 5 October; and if he will make a statement. [5458]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The Ministry received telephone reports about ill sheep at Lydden Court farm on 5 October. A number of demonstrators were outside the premises and the police were also present. Arrangements were made for veterinary advice to be given to the owner of the premises by his private veterinary surgeon.

Hedley Loams Ltd.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of damages have been claimed in the last two years from the Government by Hedley Loams Ltd. or its livestock consultant. [5401]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 21 November 1996]: A claim for damages from Hedley Loams (Ireland) Ltd. is outstanding. We have not received any formal notification of the amounts claimed.

[3820]

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) on 7 March, Official Report, columns 350–351.

Further information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Costs

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current (i) administrative and overhead costs required to administer social security claims and payments and (ii) numbers of civil servants and benefit centres; and what were the costs in each year since 1980 at 1996 prices. [1] The figures shown represent total administrative costs including administrative grants.

[2] The figures for the financial years 1990–91 to 1996–97 are taken from the 1996 Social Security departmental report.

[3] The figures prior to 1990–91 include the Department of Social Security repayment to the Department for Education and Employment for the administrative costs of the unemployment benefit service, which has now ceased, and are taken from the appropriate social security departmental reports and government expenditure plans.

[4] Social Security claims and payments are administered via 155 district offices, three benefit centres in Ashton in Makerfield, Belfast and Glasgow and four benefit directorates dealing with centrally administered benefits at Blackpool, Preston, Newcastle and Washington. The current number of civil servants is 92,038.

Incapacity Benefit

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the total number of applicants for (a) long-term and (b) short-term incapacity benefit in the past year; [4460]

(2) how many people were refused (a) long-term and (b) short-term incapacity benefit in the past year; [4462]

(3) what was the total number of people in receipt of (a) long-term and (b) short-term incapacity in the past year. [4461]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Following a claim for incapacity benefit those who have paid sufficient national insurance contributions and who are incapable of work in their previous occupation are awarded the short-term benefit. After 28 weeks, although a further claim is not required, recipients must be incapable of all work to continue to receive benefit. If incapacity continues beyond 52 weeks, the long-term rate of incapacity benefit is automatically awarded without the need for a further claim.

Rate of incapacity benefit	Claims (October 1995 to September 1996)	Disallowances (October 1995 to September 1996)
Short term (up to 28 weeks)	1,054,000	[1]391,000

n/a = not available

Rate of incapacity	[3]Recipients (as at 341 May 1996)
Short term (up to 28 weeks)	117,000
Short term (from 28 weeks)	105,000
Long term (from 52 weeks)	1,572,000

[1] Number of claimants who have not paid sufficient national insurance contributions and those judged to be capable of their previous occupation; 100 per cent. sample of incapacity benefit computer system.

[2] Claimants failing the all work test; 5 per cent. sample of incapacity benefit computer system.

[3] The latest date for information is available.

[4] All figures exclude a small number of cases not held on the system.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the numbers gaining and (b) the cost, if claimants of incapacity benefit with part-time earnings retained benefit at a rate reduced pound for pound where earnings exceed the limit. [4266]

Mr. Burt: None.

Incapacity benefit is intended to support people incapable of work. A small amount of paid work is permitted but only if such work is directly beneficial to the particular medical condition of the claimant and will help aid their recovery. It would be inappropriate to continue to pay incapacity benefit to those who become able to support themselves in paid employment. Disability working allowance is available to help top up earnings of people moving from incapacity benefit into paid work.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the staffing complement of the Benefits Agency office in Clydebank; how many casual staff are currently employed; and in what capacity. [4513]

(2) what measures are in place to ensure that casual and partly trained staff are not employed in direct contact with clients to administer benefits in the Benefits Agency office in Clydebank; [4512]

(3) what estimate he has made of the impact of the annual staffing costs in the Clydebank Benefits Agency office arising from the employment of casual rather than permanent staff. [4514]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 21 November 1996:

The secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary questions asking what is the staffing complement of the Benefits Agency (BA) office in Clydebank; how many casual staff are currently employed; and in what capacity;

what measures are in place to ensure that casual and partly trained staff are not employed in direct contact with clients to administer benefits in the BA office in Clydebank; what estimate he has made of the impact on the annual staffing costs in the Clydebank BA office from the employment of casual rather than permanent staff.

As at 31 October 1996 there were 157 staff in post at the Benefits Agency office in Clydebank. This figure included 10 staff employed on a casual basis on general administrative assistant duties. There are no vacancies at present.

All staff in the Benefits Agency office in Clydebank who are in direct contact with customers receive appropriate training for these duties. Staff in contact with the public receive between 1–15 weeks training depending on the nature of their duties and their previous experience. This training also includes time observing an experienced receptionist.

Casual staff employed by the Benefits Agency at Clydebank office are paid on the same payscales as their equivalent permanent counterparts. They do not, in common with all casual civil servants, belong to the non contributory Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme. There are no savings from this to the local office staffing budget.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4531]

Mr. Burt: The policy for the use of the Department's resources ensures that full account is taken of the needs of the environment. For example:

The DSS is a signatory to the corporate commitment to energy efficiency. Energy consumption for the estate is monitored and progress towards the Government targets are reported annually to the Department of Environment.

All our new buildings and major refurbishments are audited for their environmental performance to obtain Building Research Establishment environmental assessment method (BREEAM) accreditation.

The Department is a founder member of London's first clean air charter for fleet best practice. This commits the Department to improving the environmental performance of our official vehicles over the next three years.

The Department's environmental initiatives and performance are promoted externally through our membership of organisations such as the Environment Council and through the Social Security report, published annually.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets he proposes to set for operating cost reductions at the Child Support Agency; and what time scale applies. [4736]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency operating costs.

The Agency is committed to living within the resource budget set annually by the Secretary of State. The budget allocated to the Agency for 1996–97 is £207 million. The planned expenditure for the Agency as outlined in the DSS Departmental Report 1996–97 to 1998–99 is:

1997–98: £213 million

1998–99: £192 million

I hope this is helpful.

Public Caller Offices

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost in the last four years of refurbishing the public caller offices in Wales. [5252]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. John Marek, dated 21 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what has been the cost in the last four years of refurbishing the public caller offices in Wales.

£12,174,487 has been spent refurbishing public caller offices in Wales during the last four financial years. This figure is provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people, covered by the Hull benefits office, were in receipt of invalidity benefit on (a) 31 March 1995 and (b) the latest available date; [4711]

(2) how many people formerly in receipt of invalidity benefit in the area covered by the Hull benefit office are now in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment. [4708]

Mr. Burt: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 21 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many people, covered by the Hull Benefits Office, were in receipt of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) on (a) 31st March 1995 and (b) the latest available date; and how many people formerly in receipt of IVB in the area covered by the Hull Benefit Office are now in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment.[4708].

The information is not available in the format requested. Statistics are not collated for customers leaving IVB to take up full or part time employment. The information available is shown in the table below:-

Hull district benefits agency

Customers in receipt of invalidity benefit on 31 March 1995	Customers in receipt of incapacity benefit on 30 September 1996[1]
12,931	13,238

Figures are provisional and subject to change.[1] Sickness benefit and IVB were replaced by incapacity benefit (IB) from 13 April 1995. The figure quoted is for IB short term higher and IB long term, ie cases from the 29th week of incapacity. this is comparable to IVB.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Maintenance

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new legislation he intends to introduce so that parents with care on benefit derive direct advantage from the child maintenance that they receive. [6137]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I have today laid before Parliament regulations which introduce a new scheme called the child maintenance bonus. This scheme will allow parents with care on income support or income-based jobseeker's allowance who are also receiving child maintenance to build up a weekly credit of £5—or the weekly amount of maintenance, if less—towards a lump sum of up to £1,000, payable when they leave benefit for work. Subject to the approval of Parliament, the scheme will begin on 7 April 1997.

This new initiative will provide a direct cash benefit for parents with care from maintenance they receive, enhancing the incentive for them to find employment while also encouraging compliance with the Child Support Agency among both parents with care and absent parents.

I have also today laid a package of regulations which make a number of miscellaneous amendments to child support regulations to simplify and speed up the handling of applications. This package includes a measure to increase the effectiveness of reduced benefit directions and a regulation which defers the re-introduction of fees for the services of the Child Support Agency until April 1999.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners who depend (a) wholly and (b) very largely on state pension, broken down by (i) standard region of England, (ii) England, (iii) Wales, (iv) Scotland and (v) the United Kingdom; and in each case what are the figures as a percentage of the population of that area. [5017]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Due to the small sample size of the family expenditure survey and the method of grossing applied to the figures, it is not possible to provide reliable estimates for regions or individual countries within the United Kingdom.

Numbers of pensioner units dependent upon state pension in the united kingdom

Pensioner units	Numbers	Proportion of all pensioner units per cent.	Proportion of overall population (benefit units)
Wholly Dependent	150,000	2	Negligible
"Very Largely Dependent" (75 per cent. + per cent.)	1,600,000	23	5 per cent.

Notes:

1. For the purposes of this reply, the term "very largely dependent" has been interpreted to mean those pensioner units who receive 75 per cent, or more of their income from state pensions.

2. For the purposes of this reply, "state pensions" includes retirement pension, widows benefits, incapacity benefit and unemployment benefit for those over state pension age. The estimates include SERPS and graduated retirement benefit.

3. Estimates of numbers of pensioner units are shown to the nearest 50,000. Percentages are shown to the nearest whole percentile. Any estimate of less than 25,000 or less than 0.5 per cent. is labelled negligible. The estimate of the proportion of the entire population is an estimate of the proportion of the total number of benefit units, as defined in the households below average income series. A benefit unit is defined as being either a single person or a couple, including any children aged 16 years or under and single children in full time education aged 16 to 18. A pensioner unit is defined as being a single person over state pension age, or a couple where the husband is over state pension age.:

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many areas of the country the Spotlight on Benefit Cheats campaign is running. [5267]

Mr. Heald: The Spotlight on Benefit Cheats campaign is currently running in 14 areas of the country.

Fishermen

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultations he has had with the fishing industry about the impact of the jobseeker's allowance on those who previously claimed unemployment benefit following the detention of vessels in port as a result of bad weather or repairs; [5589]

(2) what plans he has to exempt fishermen from the jobseeker's allowance in order to allow them to claim unemployment benefit when their vessel is detained in port due to bad weather or repairs; [5590]

(3) what steps are being taken to help fishermen who find themselves unable to work as a result of (a) bad weather at sea and (b) damage to their boat. [5591]

Mr. Roger Evans: Share fishermen have a unique position in the benefit system. They pay a special higher rate of class 2 national insurance contributions. This gives them access to contribution-based jobseeker's allowance in the same way that they previously had access to unemployment benefit. They are the only group of claimants given such special access. This special treatment dates back many years and is in recognition of the hazardous and arduous nature of the work share fishermen do and because fishing quotas and bad weather give them an irregular income.

The Government have introduced for share fishermen a package of special rules in contribution-based jobseeker's allowance which are designed to ensure that they are in a broadly similar financial position to the one that they enjoyed under unemployment benefit. These special rules were developed after detailed discussions with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The special rules include an exemption from the 16-hour weekly remunerative work limit, without which they would lose benefit as soon as they worked for more than 16 hours. Share fishermen are also exempt from the rules under which high earnings can be averaged across a period so that they affect benefit in a number of weeks, rather than simply on one occasion. Most jobseeker's allowance claimants have £5 of their part-time earnings disregarded. However, share fishermen benefit from a higher, £15, earnings disregard.

This whole package of special rules clearly illustrates how far the Government have gone in jobseeker's allowance to ensure that share fishermen continue to receive special treatment. The rules are specifically designed to provide share fishermen with the necessary financial support for those periods when they are unable to fish because of factors such as bad weather or damage to their boat.

Fishermen who are paid employees are treated in the same way as other jobseekers.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6034]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Low Incomes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to resume publication of the annual survey of statistics on low-income families. [6060]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: None.

A review in 1988 of the methodology used in these statistics revealed methodological weaknesses and it was recommended that they be replaced by the households below average income—HBAI—series. The latest edition of HBAI, for 1979 to 1993–94, was published on 14 November 1996 and a copy is available in the Library.

HEALTH

General Practitioners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the general practitioner fundholding surpluses for each health district in the north west of England. [2942]

Mr. Malone: The latest information available relates to 1994–95 and copies of the tables have been placed in the Library.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners were employed by NHS trusts on 1 September; and which trusts employed them. [4166]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not held centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to ensure that sufficient numbers of general practitioners are recruited. [4170]

Mr. Malone: There are more general practitioners practising now than ever before, up from 24,035 at October 1995 to 26,830 at March 1996. We intend to publish proposals at the end of the year which will ensure that general practice continues to be an attractive option for doctors.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the amount of savings accrued in the budgets of fundholding general practitioners for each year of the scheme's operation; [4171]

(2) if he will make a statement on the total overspends incurred by fundholding general practitioners in each year of the scheme's operation. [4172]

Mr. Malone: In each year of the scheme, fundholding general practitioners in aggregate have made efficiency savings of between 3 and 4 per cent., and overspends normally below 1 per cent. of budgets set. GP fundholder savings are available to be reinvested for the benefits of patients in accordance with regulations.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there were for general practitioners in each health authority area in England on 1 September and on the same date in each year since 1990. [4232]

Mr. Malone: The information requested will be placed in the Library.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many single-handed general practitioners were practising per health authority in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [4186]

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

[5166]

Mr. Malone: All patients have the right to be registered with a general practitioner and can expect their local health authority to find a general practitioner within two working days.

NHS Trusts (Finance)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to amend the 1995–96 requirement for return on capital placed on NHS trusts during the next five months; and if he will make a statement. [4697]

Mr. Horam: We have no proposals to amend the 6 per cent. return on capital requirement placed on national health service trusts.

Mr Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service trusts there were in England in 1995–96; and how many failed (a) to break even, (b) to achieve their target rate of return on relevant net assets, (c) to stay within their external financing limit and (d) to meet one or more of these targets. [5588]

Mr. Horam: In 1995–96 there were 433 national health service trusts in England. Financial information for 1995–96 will be available shortly following analysis and validation of the trust audited annual accounts by the NHS executive.

Mathematicians (Research Groups)

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the current research groups sponsored by his Department working on AIDS and cancer research contain qualified mathematicians in them. [4965]

Mr. Horam: The Department's policy research programme funds the clinical operational research unit at University college London, whose work includes the development and application of mathematical and statistical models and decision analysis related to clinical aspects of health care, including cancer. The majority of researchers within the unit are qualified mathematicians. The Department funds CORU by £210,000 per year.

Health Authorities (Finance)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities facing deficits at the end of this financial year as a result of general practitioner fundholders spending above their agreed budgets. [5379]

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities are predicting budget deficits of more than £1 million for the coming financial year. [4169]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities are currently developing their financial plans for 1997–98. Information concerning these plans has not yet been collected centrally. Health authorities are required to submit their financial plans for 1997–98 to the executive in April 1997.

NHS Executives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the current chairmen of area NHS executives who have been provided with corporate credit cards. [5136]

Mr. Malone: None of the regional chairmen have corporate credit cards.

Former Mental Hospitals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that former mental hospitals within the former metropolitan regional health authorities are cleared and made safe. [5186]

Mr. Burns: If a former mental hospital is owned by a national health service trust the responsibility for closure and subsequent security lies with the trust.

If the property is owned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, the responsibility for closure and any decommissioning lies with the trust occupying the property. Once it is vacant, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, through the regional office of the NHS executive, becomes responsible for day-to-day management and security. The security arrangements will depend upon the nature of the property but will normally comprise 24-hour presence of security guards and boarding up. If appropriate, demolition will be instigated.

British Medical Association

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met British Association officials; and what matters were discussed. [5848]

Mr. Malone: Officials acting on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly meet representatives of the British Medical Association and discuss a range of issues.

1. Figures represent a count of each and every occasion on which a patient was in contact with a member of the community dental service. Figures therefore may include an element of double counting. The number of individual patients seen will be smaller than this.
2. This table will include some patients who were seen in screening or preventive programmes.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to include all staff working in primary health care in the NHS pension scheme. [4195]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 17 June 1996, Official Report, column 352.

Nurses

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were employed by NHS trusts in (a) accident and emergency, (b) general medicine, (c) paediatrics, (d) cardiology, (e) general surgery, (f) intensive care, (g) paediatric intensive care and (h) in total in each of the last six years. [4229]

Mr. Horam: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many newly qualified nurses there were in each of the past six years; and what was his Department's estimate of the national requirement for newly qualified nurses in each of those years. [4234]

Mr. Horam: Information relating to the number of newly qualified nurses is collected by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and published in its annual report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of professional misconduct were upheld against nurses in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [4180]

Mr. Horam: The information is not held by the Department of Health.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have been recruited from (a) Ireland, (b) Canada, (c) Australia and (d) New Zealand by NHS trust for each year since 1991. [4230]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

National Blood Authority

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the accounts, as at 1 October, of the (a) National Blood Authority and (b) national blood service. [4231]

Mr. Horam: The published accounts of the National Authority are for the year ending 31 March. This is in line with the legal requirement applying to all health bodies. The national blood service is part of the National Blood Authority and does not have separate accounts.

Special Registers

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many special registers there are in England. [4173]

Mr. Burns: Special registers are not a feature of the national health service.

Efficiency

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will continue to ask the NHS to achieve 3 per cent. efficiency target. [4174]

Mr. Horam: We will announce the 1997–98 efficiency target required of the national health service shortly.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the costs to each health authority arising from the change in value added tax regulations allowing NHS bodies to reclaim VAT on contracted-out services for 1996–97. [4179]

Mr. Horam: On 18 September, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise announced its intention to apply a stricter application of the deadlines for submitting claims for the recovery of the VAT on contracted out services. Following representations from the Department of Health and national health services bodies, Customs announced on 28 October that it would consider claims for periods before 1 April up to the end of November. This will enable the national health service to submit outstanding claims. For 1996–97, they may make claims until 30 June 1997.

Hospital Information Support Systems

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent on the design and implementation of the hospital information support systems in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [4181]

Mr. Horam: In 1994–95 the national health service executive, through the hospital information support systems initiative, allocated £580,000 to Nottingham City Hospital NHS trust. This was one of the pilot sites for testing out the means of specifying, purchasing and implementing hospital-wide integrated computer systems. This was the final allocation of funds to an NHS trust under the HISS initiative against design and implementation of hospital information support systems. Information on local NHS spend on the design and implementation of hospital information support systems is not held centrally.

Mr. Horam: During 1996–97, the central cost for managing and monitoring the implementation of NHSnet services is estimated at £4.1 million. Information about the costs of implementing the NHSnet system in each NHS organisation is not held centrally. The capital cost of maintaining and developing the NHS-wide electronic communications system called NHSnet is met by the private sector suppliers of networking services.

Elderly Patients (Hospital Beds)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients over 75 years of age have an average length of stay in an acute hospital bed of over four weeks. [4196]

Mr. Burns: The latest information available centrally shows that 289,010 patients with a length of stay over four weeks, and who were aged 75 years and over, were discharged after treatment in the acute sector—excluding geriatric and psychiatric sectors—in national health service hospitals in England in 1994–95.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collates on the priorities in respect of allocation of hospital provision for the elderly in each London NHS trust; and if he will make a statement. [5152]

Mr. Burns: Information on the priorities of hospital provision for the elderly in individual national health service trusts is not held centrally. National health service care and treatment is open to everyone on the basis of clinical need, irrespective of age. It is for NHS bodies locally to ensure the availability and provision of appropriate services for local residents.

Mr. Horam: Performance information for national health service ambulance services is contained within the Department of Health's Statistical Bulletin 1995–96, copies of which are available in the Library. The performance of the London Ambulance Service NHS trust continues to improve.

Health Authority Funding (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the level of grant agreed by his Department in April 1996 in respect of each London health authority; and if he will indicate subsequent payments agreed since April 1996. [5190]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities do not receive grants as such. Information on initial cash limits for 1996–97 and additions made to date for health authorities in London are shown in the table:

Mr. Horam: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to reduce the role of community health councils in monitoring local health services; and if he will make a statement; [5978]

(2) if he will make it his policy that major changes in the role and function of community health councils will not be made without the full support of community health councils; [5982]

(3) what assessment he has made of the advantages of community health councils being located in accessible shop-front high street premises; and what plans he has to change the present arrangements; [5980]

(4) what plans he has to remove the accommodation standard for community health councils; and if he will make a statement; [5979]

(5) what plans he has to reduce the role of community health councils in supporting complainants; and if he will make a statement. [5981]

Mr. Horam: There are no plans to alter the role of community health councils. They will, of course, be consulted about any suggestions made.

As independent, statutory bodies it is for individual CHCs to decide, on the basis of local circumstances, how they exercise their statutory functions in representing the interests, in the health service, of their local population.

CHCs need to have a visible public profile and we have no plans to change the current accommodation standards guidance, including the desirability of progress towards locating them in shop-front premises.

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the issues regarding access to the NHS pension scheme for workers in primary care referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for West Lancashire (Mr. Pickthall) 4 June, Official Report, column 384; [6042]

(2) when he will be in a position to make an announcement about bringing general practitioners' practice staff into the NHS pension scheme; [6040]

(3) what is his policy on access to a good occupational pension scheme for (a) nurses, (b) receptionists, (c) practice managers and (d) others employed in primary care. [6041]

Mr. Malone: We are considering opening up the national health service pension scheme to general practitioner practice staff. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stalkers and Paedophiles

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to publish the Government's stalking Bill; [5333]

(2) when he intends to publish the Government's Bill to establish a national register of paedophiles. [5312]

Mr. Maclean: Bills on both these topics will be published shortly.

Ms Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the responses he has received to the consultation paper, "Stalking–The Solutions". [5334]

Mr. Maclean: Comments on the consultation paper were not sought with the aim of publication. I can, however, assure the hon. Member that the overwhelming majority of comments were favourable.

The following organisations responded to the paper:

The Association of Chief Officers of Probation, Association of Chief Police Officers, Association of Magisterial Officers, British Transport Police, British Fur Trade Association, Childline Conservative Women's National Committee, Council of Circuit Judges, Cumbria Constabulary, General Council of the Bar, Guild of Editors, Hampshire Constabulary, Holborn Law Society, Justices' Clerks Society, Law Commission, Magistrates' Association. Mind, National Free Church Women's Council, National Anti-Stalking and Harassment Campaign, The Newspaper Society, North Eastern Circuit Court Service, National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Paisner and Co, Police Federation, Portsmouth Circuit Court Service, Rights of Women, Riverside Housing Association, Royal College of Psychiatrists, Nineteen branches of Soroptimist International, Suzy Lamplugh Trust, Townswomen's Guild, Victim Support, Welsh Women's Aid, Women's National Commission, and the Women's Aid Federation of England.

We received responses from the hon. Member, the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) and the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe). In addition, there were 28 responses from private individuals.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4957]

Mr. Howard: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cox : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women held in custody in prisons in England and Wales while seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom as at 18 November. [5568]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information as at 18 November 1996 is not available. However, as at 5 November 1996, 319 men and six women who had sought asylum at some stage were recorded as being detained in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) in what circumstances a United Kingdom citizen working in Germany and there assaulted and injured by another United Kingdom citizen, qualifies for compensation under the terms of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; [6209]

(2) what protection a United Kingdom citizen has when he or she becomes a victim of a crime in another country of the European Union; [6144]

(3) in what circumstances British citizens are able to claim under the criminal injuries compensation scheme if they are victims of crime while in another EU country. [6206]

Mr. Maclean: Under the terms of the criminal injuries compensation scheme approved by Parliament, eligibility is restricted to victims of crimes of violence whose injury was sustained in Great Britain. Victims of crime committed in another country must normally look for protection or redress under whatever arrangements obtain in the country concerned, or to such insurance arrangements as they may have made. I understand that a number of European Union countries, including Germany, do have schemes for compensating victims of violent crime, although none are as generous as the Great Britain scheme.

Mr. John Berry (Compensation)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation the Home Office has paid to Mr. John Berry following the recent Court of Appeal case. [5601]

Mr. Kirkhope: An application for compensation on behalf of a Mr. John Berry was made on 2 February 1994 and compensation will be paid under section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

We have not yet received Mr. Berry's final claim and although an interim payment has been made it is not the practice to disclose the amount of such payments in individual cases.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1996 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in. [4067]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 14 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to my letter to him of 18 November 1996, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

High Court Cases

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the High Court cases which he has lost since becoming Home Secretary and the amount of costs awarded against his Department in each case. [5405]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 1 November 1996]: Since May 1993, the Home Office has been involved in several thousand cases in the High Court. These cases include judicial review applications and writ actions. The Home Office has been successful in more than 90 per cent. of the judicial review cases. The detailed information requested is not readily available.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will draw up a new code of practice on ministerial accountability to Parliament; and if he will ensure a right of access under such a code of practice on ministerial accountability to Parliament to full documents rather than solely the information they contain. [6008]

The Prime Minister: The standards expected of Ministers in relation to their duty of accountability to Parliament are laid down in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". Following recommendations in the Public Service Committee's recent report on "Ministerial Accountability and Responsibility", an amendment has been made to the opening section on ministerial conduct. This now includes the statement that Ministers:

> "must be as open as possible with Parliament and the public, withholding information only when disclosure would not be in the public interest, which should be decided in accordance with relevant statute and the Government's Code of Practice on Access to Government information".

In addition, and also following a recommendation from the Public Service Committee, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has initiated discussions with the main opposition parties with a view to bringing forward a resolution of the House on how it expects Ministers to discharge their responsibilities to Parliament.

The reason the Government believe that their commitment to openness is best expressed in terms of access to information, rather than in terms of access to specific documents, is set out in the Government's response to the Public Service Committee's report.

Ministerial Travel Abroad

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Prime Minister what is the procedure for purchasing tickets for overseas travel and reimbursement of costs for Ministers taking part in delegations abroad partly of a non-ministerial, personal or party political nature; and for how long Her Majesty's Government keep records of such visits. [5384]

The Prime Minister: Departments have their own procedures for purchasing tickets for Ministers' travel on official trips abroad. Where the delegation in question is partly of a governmental and partly of a personal or party political nature, Ministers are required to ensure, in accordance with the terms of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", paragraph 72, that no undue obligation is involved to their Department.

"Questions of Procedure for Ministers", paragraph 65, requires the Minister in charge of each Department to ensure that the Department draws up and maintains a record of all ministerial delegations whose travel has been at public expense. No systematic record is kept of Ministers' private travel, though Cabinet Ministers are expected to seek my, and then Her Majesty the Queen's, approval and junior Ministers are required to seek the approval of the Foreign Secretary and their Secretary of State before they travel overseas.

Ghurkas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken to implement his undertaking to the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Nepal at Downing Street on 12 November to consider (a) bringing Gurkhas' pension rights nearer to those of British service personnel and (b) allowing more Gurkha wives to accompany their husbands on overseas duty. [4308]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) on 20 November, Official Report, column 613.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 26 November. [4388]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

United Nations Secretary-General

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the President of the United States on the future of Dr. Boutros Ghali as Secretary-General of the United Nations; and if he will make a statement. [6305]

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government have had frequent high-level discussions in recent months with the United States Administration on a wide range of UN issues, including the election of the UN Secretary-General.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department has taken in respect of recent comments broadcast on Radio St. Helena by the governor of St. Helena relating to the quality of life on the island. [6216]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: In his broadcast on 11 September, the governor referred to meetings that he had had with Ministers in London on issues affecting

St. Helena. Subsequently, officials from ODA and FCO visited St. Helena as part of their discussions with the St. Helena Government aimed at improving the economic situation on the island and its dependencies.

Iraq

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Iraqi opposition. [6537]

Mr. Hanley: We remain committed to the territorial integrity and unity of Iraq. It is for the Iraqi people to decide their political future. They have greatly suffered from Saddam Hussein's policies and his refusal to fulfil Iraq's international obligation. Sadly, we see no prospect that he will relent. We believe that the interests of the Iraqi people would be best served by a Government who are representative of all the Iraqi people and follow responsible policies. Efforts by Iraqis to form a unified and representative opposition to Saddam Hussein's regime with this aim therefore deserve our support and encouragement.

Exports (Indonesia)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on the export of defence equipment to Indonesia. [6538]

Mr. Hanley: The Government attach importance to our political and economic relationship with Indonesia. It plays a significant and responsible role both in the region and more broadly as a prominent member of various international groupings and a major contributor to peacekeeping forces. Our bilateral relations with Indonesia continue to develop strongly.

All applications to export UK defence equipment to Indonesia, and to other destinations, are carefully scrutinised on a case-by-case basis against established criteria and internationally agreed guidelines. Human rights are a key factor, and we take into consideration inter alia the political situation and the prospects in Indonesia. We do not license for export, to Indonesia or to any other country, any UK defence equipment likely to be used for internal repression. We apply this criterion rigorously, but remain confident that it leaves open the possibility of substantial co-operation with Indonesia in the procurement of defence equipment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Fisheries Council

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the European Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 22 November. [6636]

Mr. Baldry: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Fisheries Council in Brussels on 22 November together with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State at the Scottish Office and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State at the Northern Ireland Office.

I again made it clear that the UK could not contemplate significant further reductions in its fleet without the issue of quota hoppers being resolved. I also reiterated the need for our performance under MAGP III to be correctly assessed and presented.

Following its inconclusive debate in October on the Commission's multi-annual guidance proposals—MAGP IV—the Council considered a presidency compromise aimed at meeting the concerns expressed by member states. Most felt that the compromise provided a basis for further work, but that considerable analysis and discussion would be needed before conclusions could be drawn.

The Council concluded that work on the presidency compromise would continue with a view to reaching a decision before the end of the year if possible.

On satellite monitoring, I supported the constructive approach taken by the presidency in producing a text which addressed our key concerns, in particular in exempting smaller vessels operating within 12 miles of the coast. I also put to the Council a suggestion from industry for synchronising implementation with new rules by the International Maritime Organisation relating to the global maritime distress and safety system; and I emphasised the need to use the advent of satellite monitoring to reduce the existing regulatory burden. Several member states continued to have difficulties on a variety of points and the presidency concluded that the Council would have to return to the issue at a later date.

The Council unanimously adopted fish prices for 1997.

The Commission also presented a report on the monitoring of third country vessels in Community waters which the Council noted.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5481]

Mrs. Browning: In July this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not.

Guidance was already in place in MAFF requiring those involved in the development of policies to evaluate the equal treatment aspects. Officials are now considering how best to revise this in the light of the revised model guidance.

Poultry Meat Inspection

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many poultry meat inspection posts were created within local authorities to implement the Poultry Meat Hygiene Regulations 1995. [5498]

Mrs. Browning: We are not aware that any poultry meat inspection posts have been created within local authorities to enforce these regulations. Poultry meat inspectors are appointed by Ministers to assist official veterinary surgeons in carrying out functions specified in the regulations relating to the supervision of licensed premises. Enforcement responsibility in such premises rests with the Meat Hygiene Service and not local authorities.

North-east Drift Netting Season

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the Environment Agency in respect of the introduction of a new byelaw to change the opening date of the 1997 north-east drift netting season. [5688]

Mr. Baldry: I wrote to the chairman of the National Rivers Authority on 12 February requesting that the NRA and its successor body, the Environment Agency, reconsider the case for further controls on the exploitation of spring salmon, including postponing the opening date of the north-east coast salmon drift net fishery. Subsequently, officials drew the Environment Agency's attention to advice by the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea that measures should be taken to reduce fishing mortality by fisheries exploiting stocks, particularly of multi-sea-winter salmon, other than those in individual rivers which are above minimum biologically accepted levels.

Arable Area Payment Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments were made in 1995 under the arable area payments scheme (a) £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £30,000, (g) £30,001 and £35,000, (h) £35,001 and £40,000, (i) £40,001 and £50,000, (j) £50,001 and £75,000, (k) £75,001 and £100,000, (l) £100,001 and £150,000, (m) £150,001 and £200,000, (n) £200,001 and £250,000, (o) £250,001 and £500,000, (p) £500,001 and £1 million, (q) £1 million and £1.5 million, (r) £1.5 million and £2 million and (s) in excess of £2 million. [5707]

Mr. Baldry: The following table sets out the numbers of payments made by the Ministry under the 1995 arable area payments scheme in the bands requested. Some claimants will have received more than one payment.

Gelatine

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 584, for what reasons the greatest monthly export of gelatine between January and June 1996 occurred in April. [5666]

Mrs. Browning: We are not aware of the reasons underlying the level of exports of total gelatine recorded for April 1996. However, the variation in the volume of exports in this period is not out of line with the normal monthly variations seen for exports of this commodity.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what instructions he gives to his veterinary staff regarding (a) the approval of markets and other collection centres for the purposes of intra-Community trade and (b) the operation of markets when animals are presented for sale for export to EC countries. [4165]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: An animal health circular on the procedures for approval of collection centres, which included details of the conditions under which approved markets must operate, was issued to veterinary staff earlier this year. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much 1996–97 PFI expenditure was committed at September 1996; and what is his latest estimate of total PFI expenditure for 1996–97 in respect of each Government Department; [5706]

(2) what was the 1995–96 PFI expenditure in each Government Department; [5705]

(3) what is his latest estimate of PFI expenditure in 1996–97; [5531]

(4) what was the total commitment of PFI expenditure for the year 1996–97 at September 1996. [5530]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 November 1996]: For a breakdown of capital expenditure on PFI in 1995–96 by Department, I refer the hon. Gentlemen to my answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 25 November 1996. An aggregated estimated outturn of capital expenditure on PFI for 1996–97, along with forecasts for the future three years, broken down by Department and aggregated estimates of the cost of the future revenue commitments of the public sector will be published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for 1997–98 on 26 November. Information on the amount of PFI expenditure as of September 1996 was not collected separately—there is no financial or accounting reason to do so—and could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6037]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Current Accounts Directions

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each current accounts direction issued by Her Majesty's Treasury giving the name of the Department to which it is directed and the date on which it will be made. [4975]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The form of the current appropriation accounts prepared by Departments is prescribed in "Government Accounting" and no accounts directions have been issued in respect of these accounts. Her Majesty's Treasury issues accounts directions to Departments in respect of the accruals-based accounts prepared by their Supply-financed executive agencies and trading funds, a number of accounts of entities which are regarded as Departments, certain NHS bodies, the NHS summarised accounts, and a number of individuals accounts.

Departments are in the process of introducing resource accounts which will conform to the guidance given in the resource accounting manual currently being considered by the financial reporting advisory board. This guidance is intended to remove the need to issue separate accounts directions in respect of bodies which will fall within the departmental boundary for the purposes of resource accounting and budgeting.

The following list shows the Supply-financed executive agencies, trading funds, entities regarded as Departments and the summarised accounts prepared by the NHS to which Her Majesty's Treasury has issued an accounts direction, and the financial year in respect of which the direction became effective. Information on the directions issued in respect of individual accounts is not kept centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Privatisation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the capital receipts to the Exchequer for each privatised business since 1979. [5669]

Mr. Jack: Table 5.6 of the public expenditure statistical analyses for 1996–97 gives a breakdown of privatisation proceeds received by the Exchequer for all privatisations from 1979 to the end of the 1995–96 financial year. Proceeds to that date totalled £64 billion. The target for 1996–97 is £4½ billion.

Marriage and the Family

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what research his Department has commissioned into the effects of the tax system on marriage and the family; [3545]

(2) if he will launch a public consultation process on how the tax system could be used to support marriage and the family. [3544]

Mr. Jack: We take careful note of any public representations we receive, and keep track of analysis and research that is produced on tax and the family.

ENVIRONMENT

Village Pubs (Discretionary Rate Relief)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors will determine whether village pubs qualify for discretionary rate relief under the provisions of the Local Government and Rating Bill. [5140]

Sir Paul Beresford: Billing authorities will have the power to grant up to 100 per cent. relief to any public house providing that:

(i) it is within a rural settlement of 3,000 people or less;

(ii) it has a rateable value of less than an amount prescribed by the Secretary of State by order;

(iii) the billing authority is satisfied that the public house is of benefit to the local community;

(iv) the billing authority considers it reasonable for it to grant relief, having regard to the interests of its council tax payers.

Environment Agency (Councillor David Barlow)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the role of Councillor David Barlow in the work of the Environment Agency and at what level; how much time he will be required to give to the work of the agency; what qualifications or experience led to his appointment; and if he will make a statement. [5359]

Mr. Clappison: Councillor David Barlow has been appointed a member of the Environment Agency's area environment group for the upper Severn.

Area environment groups are non-statutory consultative forums appointed by the agency which meet quarterly to advise on local delivery of its services. Appointments to them are made by the agency's area managers. DoE Ministers have no involvement in their composition.

Elected Mayors

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the results of his consultation on elected mayors; and which local authorities expressed interest in the idea. [5132]

Sir Paul Beresford: The responses to the consultation paper, "The Internal Management of Local Authorities in England" published by my Department in 1991, showed very little support for elected mayors. Of more than 600 responses, only four were in favour of elected mayors. None of these were from county councils, shire or metropolitan district councils, or London boroughs.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5521]

Sir Paul Beresford: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a programme. However, my Department is at present responsible for 130 major software systems.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5520]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department uses a number of propriety software packages and for these, information on the number of programs or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

My Department is carrying out an inventory of that bespoke software which is likely to still be in use in year 2000 as a part of its strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department is holding, and with whom, on the future development of Battersea power station; and if he will make a statement. [5503]

Sir Paul Beresford: Wandsworth council has been keeping my Department informed of proposals to redevelop Battersea power station as and when it considers it necessary.

Building Products (Fire Effluents)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the research evaluated by his Department relating to the testing of the toxicity of the fire effluents of building products. [5580]

Mr. Clappison: The toxicology of the major components of fire effluents such as carbon monoxide and hydrogen cyanide, is well understood and is not being studied in the Department's present research programme. The programme does include studies of methods for the assessment of toxic hazard in fire, which take into account existing toxicity data and such factors as burning behaviour.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5487]

Sir Paul Bersford: In July this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adopt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to asses whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. My Department has existing guidance on policy appraisal in place and is currently in the process of updating this to reflect the new model guidance.

The recent Government report, "One Year On", outlines action taken by Government to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Biodegradable Matter (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the total volume of biodegradable matter that was composted in London in the current year; and what is his forecast of the figure for 2000. [5161]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 25 November 1996]: No information is currently held centrally on the amount of biodegradable matter that is composted in London. However, my Department is carrying out a new waste survey which, among other things, asks waste collection authorities to provide the Department with information on the amount of waste they collect for composting, and also what methods they operate towards encouraging home composting in their area. It is expected that the summary results of the first survey covering 1995–96 will be available around March next year.

In the Government's White Paper, "Making Waste Work: A Strategy for Sustainable Waste Management in England and Wales" published in 1995, we have set a target that 1 million tonnes of organic household waste should be composted per year by 2000.

Agenda 21 (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken by his Department to monitor the Agenda 21 process in London; and if he will make a statement. [5162]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The Government Office for London is an observer on the group steering the Association of London Government initiative to develop a local Agenda 21 for London.

Pollution (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has of the carbon deficiency of London in the current year; and what are his predictions for 2000. [5194]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The term "carbon deficiency" is not known to us.

Water Leakage Targets

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the leakage targets submitted to Ofwat by the water companies; [5920]

(2) what legislation governs the introduction of mandatory leakage targets for the water companies if the leakage targets submitted to Ofwat are judged insufficient. [5977]

Mr. Clappison: The Director General of Water Services has responsibility for assessing water companies' leakage targets. He has said that he will take a company's performance against its target into account when setting price limits. Those companies which fail to meet the targets they have set for 1997–98 may also face enforcement action.

Section 38(2) of the Water Industry Act 1991 enables my right hon. Friend to prescribe such standards of performance in connection with the provision of supplies of water as, in his opinion, ought to be achieved in individual cases. However, he may act only on written application from the Director General of Water Services under section 39 of the 1991 Act.

Bathing Water Directive

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of cost neutrality requirements on the revised European Union bathing water directive, with particular reference to water quality standards. [4273]

Mr. Clappison: The Department commissioned a report on a study of the cost implications of the proposed revision of the bathing water directive and a number of possible versions of the revision including water quality standards with a neutral cost benefit. Copies were placed in the House Library in February 1995.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what numerical level of mandatory standard for faecal streptococcus bacteria the Government propose for inclusion in the revised European Union bathing water directive. [4274]

Mr. Clappison: Recent research suggests that mandatory standards for faecal streptococci indicating water quality broadly equivalent to the existing coliform bacteria standards would maintain a satisfactory level of health.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment what plans he has to ensure the revision of the 1976 bathing water directive during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Union in 1998. [4275]

Mr. Clappison: Priorities for the United Kingdom 1998 presidency will be formulated nearer the time.

Kirklees Metropolitan Council

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the level of funding from his Department for the provision of public services by Kirklees metropolitan council in 1996–97; and what were the equivalent figures in recent years. [5600]

Sir Paul Beresford: The main Government grants are revenue support grant and redistributed national non-domestic rates. Kirklees MBC received £222.623 million in 1996–97, £211.726 million 1995–96 and £211.844 million in 1994–95 from these sources.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for local government revenue spending in 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [6306]

Mr. Gummer: Every year, the Government announce the sum of money which local authorities are expected to spend—the total standard spending or TSS. Next year's figure is £45.66 billion, up 2.5 per cent. on last year, after adjusting for changes in function. This means an increase of £1.1 billion, and when the transitional costs of local government reorganisation are taken into account, represents a cash improvement of 2.4 per cent. TSS is planned to be £46.54 billion for 1998–99 and £47.29 billion for 1999–2000.

In allocating this sum between services for 1997–98, I have decided to give the main priority to education. My proposal is therefore that education spending should increase year on year by 3.6 per cent. after adjusting for the introduction of nursery vouchers. Councils must decide how much they actually spend on education, but I am sure that parents, governors and teachers will wish to ensure that education remains the top priority for authorities.

I propose that the level of aggregate external finance distributed to local authorities in 1997–98 should be £35.77 billion. After adjusting for changes in function, this represents an increase of some £530 million or 1.5 per cent. compared with this year's figure.

I also propose that the national non–domestic rate poundage for 1997–98 should rise to 45.8p, reflecting the annual increase in the retail prices index to September.

I propose to set the distributable amount of non-domestic rates at £12.03 billion. I propose that the total of Revenue support grant should be £18.69 billion. Special and specific grants within AEF will amount to £5.05 billion.

I shall announce shortly my proposals for the distribution of Government grants, including my proposals for changes in the standard spending assessment methodology. At the same time, I shall announce my capping intentions.

The Government have played their part by creating stable low inflation. It is essential that local and central Government continue to play their parts in restraining expenditure. My proposals for total standard spending, aggregate external finance and the non–domestic rate poundage represent a fair and balanced approach to funding the demands on local authority services in 1997–98.

This settlement will work for local authorities which look carefully at their spending priorities. If all councils take every opportunity to increase their cost efficiency in the delivery of services, then even in the climate of a tight settlement, the provision for next year will allow them to meet priority needs across the range of their functions.

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make it a statutory requirement on all local authorities to clearly identify statutory and discretionary expenditure in their annual budget. [6261]

Sir Paul Beresford: None. It would be seen as a considerable burden by local authorities to be required to separate their total expenditure into discretionary and statutory components.

Town Centre Retailing

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to study the impact on town centre retailing of free bus services provided by out-of-town retail sites. [6262]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have no plans to commission research on this subject.

Public Finance Initiative

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons private sector investment in the building of waste disposal facilities in Hampshire is not eligible for PFI support. [6258]

Sir Paul Beresford: Adjustments to the revenue support grant/standard spending assessment system to assist PFI credit arrangements recognise that, where such arrangements represent an alternative to "traditional" capital expenditure, support would be justified comparable to that provided by the capital financing standard spending assessment. The costs of service contracts which fall outside the definition of such arrangements is envisaged as reflected in other elements of the SSA system.

Housing

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for implementing the new powers in the Housing Act 1996 which are available to local authorities for improving standards in houses in multiple occupation. [6541]

Mr. Clappison: The Department has today issued a consultation paper inviting comments on a number of detailed provisions relating to the new policies with regard to houses in multiple occupation contained in the Housing Act 1996.

The Act contained an important package of measures to tackle poor standards of accommodation provided in houses in multiple occupation, including bedsits, hostels and some shared houses and houses converted into flats. The Government have been particularly concerned to ensure that these properties have adequate fire safety precautions. It is also important to ensure that strong powers are available to allow local authorities to deal effectively with the problem of the proliferation of hostels in resort areas.

Once the policy details set out in the consultation paper are finalised, implementation can begin early in the new year. I intend, subject to the responses we receive, that local authorities will be able to commence new registration schemes, fire safety checks and the new enforcement procedures in March next year. Implementation of the remaining parts of the package will follow as further details are settled.

The key proposals in the paper concern, first, the new form of registration schemes which local authorities may establish in their areas. Model registration schemes will be available which can be adopted by local authorities without further reference to the Department. These models specify the HMOs which will be subject to registration. These will be the larger HMO properties and will include some houses converted into self-contained flats which are predominantly let on rented tenancies and which are not converted by the 1985 or subsequent building regulations approval. Properties managed or controlled by specified landlords, such as registered social landlords, universities or health service bodies will be excluded. There are also proposals for the maximum level of fees payable by an HMO landlord. The average maximum fee is likely to be about £350 per HMO. Fees at half this level are also payable on renewal of registration after five years.

Local authorities will also be required to carry out a check on fire safety precautions in a specified category of HMOs which are regarded as most at risk. It is estimated that about 100,000 HMOs will be covered by this duty which will be phased in over a three-year period to give authorities enough time to check all the affected properties.

The paper also sets out proposals for modifying the procedures for serving enforcement notices which must be followed by authorities. Before taking formal enforcement action the authority must serve a "minded to" notice on the HMO landlord giving him the chance to make representations to the authority. If a formal notice is subsequently served, then the authority will have powers to charge for certain administrative costs up to a maximum of £300 per notice.

The proposed new duty on HMO landlords to keep their properties fit for the number of occupants will be introduced at a later date following approval by the Secretary of State of the national code of practice on HMO standards, on which work is currently underway.

I have placed a copy of the consultation paper in the Libraries of both Houses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the evidence in the working time directive case which the European Court examined. [4719]

Mr. Lang: It would be contrary to established practice to publish the pleadings in the case. Two pieces of scientific evidence were submitted by the UK. One was a table of fatal accident rates by industry, reproduced from OECD "Employment Outlook 1989", chapter 4, Occupational accidents in OECD countries, table 4.1 on page 143. The second was the report on health and safety aspects of working hours by Professor Harrington, which has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the total cost incurred by the Government in contesting the working time directive in (a) legal fees, (b) civil service time and (c) payments made to outside organisations or agencies. [4720]

Mr. Lang: Disbursements incurred in bringing legal proceedings relating to the working time directive in the European Court of Justice were in the region of £50,000. No records were kept of the time spent on the case by civil servants. Payments to outside organisations totalled around £11,000.

Aerospace Exports

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each of the last three years the value of civil aerospace exports to the United Kingdom balance of payments. [5603]

Mr. Greg Knight: The value of UK exports of civil aerospace, and their contribution to the total current account credits, are given in the following table.

	1993	1994	1995
UK civil aerospace exports (£ billion)	5.0	4.7	5.2
Civil aerospace exports as a proportion of total current account credits (per cent.)	2.1	1.8	1.7

Business Links

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department has put in place to ensure that business links advisers can provide support for the freelance inventors; and if he will make a statement. [5696]

Mr. Page [holding answer 25 November 1996]: All business links are expected to provide practical advice to their local business community on issues relating to invention and innovation. Most business links would expect to do so through the services either of their innovation and technology counsellor or their design counsellor.

The nature of the advice will vary from business link to business link, and according to the specific needs of the inventor. A number of business links hold regular surgeries or clinics which the freelance inventor could attend. In some cases, the local business link partners may have decided to delegate the responsibility for assisting freelance inventors to one of the partners, for example the Local Enterprise Agency. In other cases, the business link will have access to other local agencies—such as a business innovation centre—or to national organisations such at the Patent Office or the Institute of Patentees and Inventors.

Further practical help is available in that innovation and technology counsellors and design counsellors can issue innovation credits to provide a modest subsidy to assist their clients in seeking help on technology related issues. Over 260 innovation credits have been used for patent searches and intellectual property rights services.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4940]

Mr. Lang: The cost to the Department of Trade and Industry of visits to Europe related to EU business by Ministers, accompanied by a private secretary, in the last 12 months has been some £24,000.

The Department is heavily involved in EU business in relation to a wide range of policy areas. Officials are continually involved in negotiation on EU legislation and policies affecting the UK. The cost of sending officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe on EU business could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4960]

Mr. Lang: Many areas within the Department of Trade and Industry deal with matters connected with British membership of the European Union as part of wider responsibilities. The data requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 515, (1) when he expects the completion of the criteria for potential lenders to the loan guarantee scheme; [6039]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 515, when he expects new specialist lenders in the technology sector to be added to the loan guarantee scheme list of approved lenders. [6043]

Mr. Page: We are aiming to complete the criteria for adding new specialist lenders to the scheme by the end of January 1997. At the same time we are working to identify possible candidates. Following this, we are aiming, as quickly as possible, to select the new lenders and add them to the scheme subject to the satisfactory conclusion of the necessary negotiations and legal work.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 515, how many loans were made (a) up to £30,000, (b) between £30,000 and £100,000, and (c) above £100,000. [6045]

Mr. Page [holding answer 25 November 1996]: Of the 35,574 loans guaranteed between 1 April 1988 and 31 October 1996, the figures are:

Loans up to £30,000: 24,932;

Loans between £30,000 and £100,000: 9,402;

Loans above £100,000: 1,240.

Libya (UN Sanctions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his discussions with the US Government on Libyan sanctions, and cases of British nationals who have allegedly transgressed UN sanctions. [5834]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

We regularly discuss UN sanctions against Libya with the US Government. Both Governments remain committed to the rigorous implementation of the sanctions until Libya has complied fully with UN Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

Any contravention of the legislation implementing these sanctions in the UK is a matter for the competent prosecuting authorities.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

British Youth Opera

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations she has received from the British Youth Opera; what reply she is sending; what action she is taking; and if she will make a statement. [3796]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 13 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend has received one recent representation from the British Youth Opera expressing concern about the level of public funding it receives, to which she has sent a reply.

Ministers set the overall framework for funding of the arts, but decisions on the distribution of funding, whether they concern the balance of funding between art forms or the allocation of grants to individual arts organisations, are taken by the Arts Council and 10 regional arts boards without the involvement of Ministers.

My right hon. Friend has drawn the correspondence to the attention of the chairman of the Arts Council of England.

Orchestras

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many (a) regional and (b) London orchestras she has visited and listened to since her appointment. [5271]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since becoming Secretary of State for National Heritage, I have enjoyed performances by a wide range of orchestras. Some have a main base in London. Many tour throughout the country or abroad, or have residencies outside London.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those administrative decisions of her Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6031]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 25 November 1996]: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions (a) her Department and (b) English Heritage have held concerning the leasing of land near Stonehenge for the construction of a dual carriageway on the A303 trunk road. [5543]

Mr. Sproat: Neither the Department nor English Heritage have held any such discussions.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she received the consultants study on pigeons in Trafalgar square; what are its recommendations; what was the total cost of the study; and what factors underlay its commission. [6218]

Mr. Sproat: The consultants' report was received in July 1996. Its recommendations are still being considered by the Department. A copy of the report is available in the House of Commons Library. The cost of the study was £1,680. It was commissioned to enable the Department to decide whether any action should be taken to control the population of the pigeons in Trafalgar square.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

"Foresight Action"

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has had from the aerospace industry in respect of "Foresight Action"; and if he will make a statement. [5605]

The Deputy Prime Minister: My right hon. Friends the President of the Board of Trade and the Secretary of State for Defence and I take a close interest in developments in the aerospace industry and have discussed a range of matters with representatives of the industry in recent months, including "Foresight Action".

Engagements

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list his official engagements for the month of November; and on what basis his salary is calculated. [6259]

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio has had many meetings with ministerial colleagues and others in the month of November.

The Minister without Portfolio does not receive a ministerial salary. He does, however, continue to draw the usual parliamentary salary.

TRANSPORT

Bypasses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on the extent to which bypasses should provide for traffic growth beyond the volume of traffic to be re-routed round the town or village bypassed. [5925]

Mr. Watts: This depends on the circumstances of each individual scheme. The case for providing additional capacity to accommodate extra growth depends on such factors as the extent of the growth, the cost of accommodating it and the effect that such additional provision would have on the environment.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been carried out to assess the extent to which the construction of bypasses relocate traffic problems. [5988]

Mr. Watts: The Department monitors the impact of all trunk road schemes, including bypasses, after they have been opened so as to assess whether traffic problems have been reduced as expected. A report on this work, "Comparison of Forecast and Observed Traffic on Trunk Road Schemes", was published in 1993. A summary of a more recent and detailed study of a sample of schemes, "Post-implementation Scheme Evaluation: Were the COBA Assessments Accurate?" by Knight, Powell and Whittaker, was presented to the—planning and transportation research and computation—European Transport Forum in September this year.

Road Traffic Forecasts

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the national road traffic forecasts advisory group last met; when revised national road traffic forecasts are to be published; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which such forecasts are likely to be sensitive to the amount of road building planned. [5923]

Mr. Watts: The national road traffic forecasts advisory group last met on 20 June 1996. No decision has yet been made on when revised national road traffic forecasts are to be published. Work is continuing to assess the extent to which such forecasts are likely to be sensitive to the amount of road building planned. Past experience suggests only a small influence.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the likely effects of the policies in planning policy guidance note No. 13 about managing demand and reducing the growth in traffic, on the national road traffic forecasts. [5926]

Mr. Watts: We have commissioned research on the impact of the land-use planning policies contained in our planning policy guidance notes, the most relevant being PPG 6 and 13. This suggests that, of themselves, centralisation and higher density development will not have a significant impact on forecast traffic growth. We have not produced a formal estimate of the impact of complementary transport demand management measures. However, it is clear that both land-use policies and complementary transport measures would have to be developed and introduced together as part of any strategy to influence traffic growth.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5351]

Mr. Bowis: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer programme. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a programme. My Department is at present responsible for 55 major software systems.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5342]

Mr. Bowis: My Department uses a number of proprietary software packages and for these information on the number of programmes or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

My Department is carrying out an inventory of that bespoke software which is likely still to be in use in the year 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to begin consultations with United Kingdom airlines regarding the proposals to change the two-centre strategy for air traffic control. [5110]

Mr. Bowis: It will be for the Civil Aviation Authority carry out such consultations. The chairman of the CAA will be reporting to Ministers on the review following the CAA board meeting in December and it is hoped that final decisions will be made in March 1997. Given this timetable, I would expect the CAA to consult with airlines early in the new year.

Boeing 737

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action the Civil Aviation Authority has taken following Boeing's instructions regarding defective rudders on Boeing 737s. [5111]

Mr. Bowis: In accordance with the Chicago convention on international civil aviation, the policy of the Civil Aviation Authority is to endorse airworthiness directives promulgated by the airworthiness authorities of the state of design of an aircraft type.

The CAA has therefore required all UK registered Boeing 737 aircraft to be inspected in line with the requirements set out in US Federal Aviation Administration airworthiness directive T96-23-51. The initial inspections have been completed within the required time scale and repeat inspections are being undertaken as directed.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents similar to those described in the national transport safety document of 16 October have been reported in respect of United Kingdom-registered Boeing 737s. [5562]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 137, if he will make a statement on the accidents occurring in 1993. [5652]

Mr. Bowis: All of the accidents in 1993 listed in my reply of 30 October, Official Report, column 137, occurred while the aircraft involved were stationary at airports and had no bearing on the airworthiness of either the individual aircraft or their type.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department was first made aware of the problems within the Boeing 737 rudder system. [5563]

Mr. Bowis: The first known incident involving a Boeing 737 which was subsequently attributed to an uncommanded rudder deflection occurred on 3 March 1991. This was notified to the Civil Aviation Authority on the following day by the US Federal Aviation Administration. On 10 November 1992, the US National Transportation Safety Board drew attention to six similar rudder problems which had occurred world-wide, and made some interim recommendations. This information was passed directly to all UK operators affected.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many Boeing 737 services are operated to and from United Kingdom airports on (a) scheduled and (b) charter operations; [5560]

(2) what percentage of total passengers travelling to and from the United Kingdom fly on Boeing 737 aircraft. [5561]

Mr. Bowis: In 1995 there were approximately (a) 214,000 scheduled and (b) 26,000 charter, passenger carrying flights operated to or from United Kingdom airports using Boeing 737 aircraft. These flights carried approximately 20 per cent. of the total number of passengers travelling to or from the United Kingdom in that year.

Moroccan Aircraft

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspections were undertaken on Moroccan registered aircraft flying to or from the United Kingdom in the last available year. [5651]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Passenger Transport Local Factor Requirements

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how load factor requirements in passenger service requirements will be monitored. [6010]

Mr. Watts: Franchisees are required to demonstrate that capacity levels are not exceeded by means of passenger counts. Franchisees are required to carry out passenger counts when so requested by the Franchising Director, subject to a maximum of two counts in any 12 month period and a minimum of one count in any 15-month period. The counts must be designed to ensure that the results are typical of demand on the services being monitored for that time of year and day of the week. The methods for undertaking the surveys must be approved by the Franchising Director, and the results are subject to audit by the Franchising Director.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sanctions will apply against rail franchise operators exceeding load factor requirements. [6011]

Mr. Watts: Where load factors are specified in the passenger service requirement, failure of the franchise operator to use all reasonable endeavours to provide sufficient capacity so as not to exceed the load factor specifications will constitute a breach of the franchise agreement. If there is a breach of the franchise agreement, the Franchising Director may serve an enforcement order requiring compliance. Failure to comply is an event of default.

Air Bags

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusion she has reached about the safety of air bags in passenger vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [5571]

Mr. Bowis: Air bags can supplement the protection given by seat belts in severe frontal collisions but seat belts remain the key safety feature in these and a much wider variety of accidents.

However, evidence from the United States, where the seat belt wearing rate is low compared with the UK, continues to show that injuries can be caused when an occupant is too close to an airbag when it deploys. This highlights two points:

the importance of wearing a seat belt;

the extreme danger of using a rearfacing child restraint in a front passenger seat where an airbag is fitted In an accident, the inflating air bag can strike the child seat with such force that the child will almost certainly receive serious or fatal head injuries.

The motor industry has agreed to label cars to alert motorists to this danger and we are continuing to press for this action to be as effective as possible. The situation is being kept under review.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4950]

Sir George Young: The cost of attendance by Department of Transport Ministers and officials at EC Transport Councils during the period 14 November 1995 to 14 November 1996 was £17,607.

The cost of attendance by departmental officials at other EC meetings during the same period can be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

HGV Drivers (Working Hours)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many hours per day long-distance heavy goods vehicle drivers will be permitted to drive their vehicles under the proposed 48 hours per week work rules. [6248]

Mr. Bowis: The transport sector is excluded from the provisions of the working time directive. Existing Community and national legislation on driving time and rest periods is therefore not affected.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent in public money in each year since 1993 on tendering costs for the private finance initiative, broken down by (a) consultants' and (b) other costs. [5755]

Mr. Watts: Information regarding tendering costs for DBFO—design, build, finance and operate—roads projects is being provided separately by the chief executive of the Highways Agency in response to the hon. Member's question relating specifically to those projects. Information relating to the other PFI transport projects is not readily available, particularly in cases where my Department is not the project promoter, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A1 Dualling

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list all dual carriageway schemes approved on the A1 between Newcastle and the Scottish border since 1992, indicating the location, the estimated start and completion dates and the value of the contract involved; [5541]

(2) if he will make a statement on his current policy on the proposed upgrading of the A1 to dual carriageway standard between Newcastle and the Scottish border; and what dual carriageway improvements are currently under consideration on the A1 between Newcastle and the Scottish border. [5542]

Mr. Watts: I toured this section of the A1 in July of this year. The Marshall Meadow, tender cost £2.18 million, and Brownieside—£3.49 million—improvement schemes were completed in 1993. The Willowburn-Denwick improvement remains in the programme.

In addition to these major schemes, a comprehensive programme of low cost safety schemes has been undertaken over the last few years. We continue to assess the needs of the route to identify sections where further improvements including sections of dual carriageway to provide safer opportunities for overtaking could be taken forward.

Roads (Stonehenge)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions (a) his Department and (b) its agencies have held concerning the leasing of land from the National Trust for the construction of a dual carriageway at Stonehenge; and if he will make a statement. [5544]

Mr. Watts: None. Those routes discussed at the planning conference in November 1995 which would pass through National Trust land were not supported by the conference. We have announced our intention to proceed with identifying a bypass for Winterbourne Stoke.

Rail Investment

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has given to the Rail Regulator in relation to levels of investment in (a) the rolling stock companies and (b) Railtrack. [5749]

Mr. Watts: None.

Road Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to privatise the national roads network. [5759]

Mr. Watts: None.

Accidents (Children)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the number of child accidents broken down by (a) casualties and (b) fatalities in a half-mile radius of school gates for the year 1971 and each year since 1979; [5762]

(2) what was the number of child accidents, broken down by (a) casualties and (b) fatalities in the vicinity of school gates for the year 1971 and each year since 1979. [5761]

Mr. Bowis: The information requested about the proximity of child accidents in relation to their schools is not collected in the national road accident reporting system.

Traffic Management

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he is undertaking to assess the implications of handing over strategic traffic management to private companies from the police; and if he will make a statement. [5760]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Sir M. Shersby) on 25 November 1996, Official Report, column 63.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public financial provision has been made for future liability in private finance initiative transport projects. [5754]

Mr. Watts: Aggregate projections of the level of public sector expenditure expected to arise from signed PFI contracts, including those in the transport sector, is being published today in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Rail Franchises

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public financial provision has been made in case of failure of rail franchises. [5753]

Mr. Watts: The Franchising Director has required each franchisee to fund a performance bond which he can call in in the event of franchise failure. Therefore no specific public provision for franchise failure has been made.

Channel Tunnel Fire

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral statement of 19 November, Official Report, column 837, on the channel tunnel fire, what response he has received to his representations to his French counterpart on the publication of the inquiry by the French authorities. [5746]

Mr. Watts: A response has not yet been received from the Secretary of State for Transport's French counterpart.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his statement of 19 November, Official Report, column 837, on the channel tunnel fire, what is the procedure by which Eurotunnel must prove that operations can recommence safely; from which bodies advice will be taken; and if separate evaluation will be made of the position of passenger services, care shuttles, freight services and lorry shuttles. [5747]

Mr. Watts: Eurotunnel will be making a detailed submission to the Intergovernmental Commission, setting out proposals for restarting services carrying passengers. This is expected shortly. The Safety Authority will examine and consider the submission, taking advice from experts as necessary. Permission for Eurotunnel to operate a limited freight service was granted on 20 November 1996. After examining Eurotunnel's submission, the Safety Authority will advise the Intergovernmental Commission. The Intergovernmental Commission will then decide whether to authorise a restart of operations.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the estimates of the frequency and effects of fire on board a semi-open heavy goods vehicle shuttle train included in Eurotunnel's application for its operating certificate for this service. [5748]

Mr. Watts: Eurotunnel's proposals for the design and construction of the semi-open HGV shuttles gave estimates of the frequency of any fire occurring on board a semi-enclosed HGV shuttle in transit as about one in every 20 years.

The effects of a fire on board a shuttle which were considered included procedures for evacuation, heat and smoke and the ability of the ventilation system to control it, and the fire resistance of the amenity coach.

As part of the general safety submission in the Tunnel the fire resistance of the cross-passage doors was tested, as was the ability of the normal ventilation system to maintain the service tunnel as a "safe haven" while a cross-passage door might be open for evacuation or rescue.

Public Sector Investment

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since 1979, public sector investment in transport (a) overall, and (b) broken down for (i) roads, (ii) rail and (iii) other forms of transport, in real terms, cash terms and as a proportion of gross domestic product. [5752]

Mr. Watts: Figures are not readily available in this form. But transport investment is reported annually in "Transport statistics Great Britain" and the Transport Report. Summary information for years prior to 1985–86 was published annually in the Government's expenditure plans. GDP figures for comparative purposes can be found in the annual "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) reorganisation and (b) set-up costs were incurred by (i) British Rail, (ii) Railtrack, (iii) the Office of the Rail Regulator, (iv) the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and (v) his Department during the privatisation of the railways, broken down to show the costs of (1) consultants and (2) others, for each year since 1993–94. [5758]

Mr. Watts: Details of the costs incurred by the British Railways Board in the privatisation process are a matter for the board itself. However, the board's annual report and accounts show that it incurred costs of £85 million in 1994–95 and £101 million in 1995–96. I understand from the board that it estimates that it will incur further costs of £53 million in 1996–97. Any breakdown of those figures would be for the board to provide.

Details of the costs incurred by Railtrack are, similarly, a matter for the company itself. However, I understand from the company that it incurred costs of £46 million in 1994–95 and £32 million in 1995–96. Again, any breakdown of those figures would be for the company to provide.

The Office of the Rail Regulator and the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising were set up in November 1993, and so have incurred no set-up costs since 1993–94. The annual costs of each office for 1994–95 and 1995–96 were as follows:

	1994–95	1995–96
Office of the Rail Regulator
Consultancy costs	2.9	3.0
Other costs	6.1	6.0
Office of Passenger Rail Franchising
Consultancy costs	13.1	27.0
Other costs	3.5	7.4

Details of the costs incurred by my Department are as follows:

£ million cash

	1994–95	1995–96
Consultancy costs	11.8	20.9
Other costs	2.2	6.4

Railway Industry

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimate of the outturn provision for the railway industry for 1996–97. [6417]

Sir George Young: The announcement of the public expenditure settlement for my Department, which I made today, included a forecast outturn of £1,760 million for Opraf passenger grant for 1996–97. For the railway industry as a whole, there have also been proceeds from the sale of businesses, which—other than those from the sale of Railtrack—have served to offset this grant. After taking account of the net revenues of the businesses sold, net forecast receipts for the railway industry are £980 million. Therefore, the latest forecast of financial provision for the railway industry in 1996–97 is £780 million—that is, Opraf grant of £1,760 million less net receipts of £980 million.

Port of Tyne Authority

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the statutory period for representations about the proposed privatisation of the Port of Tyne authority ended; and if he will make copies of the responses available. [6637]

Sir George Young: The statutory period for representations ended on 31 October. Respondents were asked to confirm their agreement to publish their comments. Copies of the representations of all those who gave permission have been placed in the DOT information centre, Great Minster house, 76 Marsham street, London SW1P 3EB, where they will be available for inspection for six months from today.

Food Hygiene Regulations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many infringements of food hygiene regulations which resulted in a prosecution have occurred on United Kingdom registered cruise liners in each year since 1990. [5246]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not held centrally.

SCOTLAND

Business Rates

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the costs and benefits of harmonising business rates in Scotland with those in England and Wales; [5134]

(2) what is his present estimate of the cost of harmonising business rates in Scotland with those in England and Wales in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [5133]

Mr. Kynoch: The 1995 revaluation was the first to be carried out with the relevant law and practice in Scotland fully harmonised with that in England and Wales. Since 1990, the Secretary of State has taken responsibility for prescribing Scottish non-domestic rate levels. The Scottish national non-domestic rate was set at the level of the English rate for 1995–96 and subsequent years. As a result of this policy, Scottish businesses have paid £1.4 billion less in rates over the five-year period from 1990 and can now plan ahead with much greater confidence. If the rate poundage had risen in line with inflation since 1990, Scottish businesses would now be faced with more than double their current rate levels.

Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning clause 45 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill; and what response he has given. [5495]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Law Society of Scotland has made representations about the provisions in clause 45 and has asked for a meeting with Ministers. It is hoped to arrange such a meeting shortly.

Mental Illness Specific Grant

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to modify the regulations governing the distribution of funds from the mental illness specific grant; and if he will make a statement; [4848]

(2) what was the (a) amount and (b) percentage of the mental illness specific grant (i) in total and (ii) given to head injury projects in each year since 1991–92 to the latest available date; what are his forecasts of the figures for (1) 1997–98 and (2) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [4811]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The continuation of the mental illness specific grant—MISG—has been confirmed for 1997–98. The effectiveness of the grant and alternative funding arrangements are currently being evaluated.

I have no plans to specify to authorities the distribution of funds to particular projects and types of client groups. The distribution between authorities following local government re-organisation has encouraged stability for existing projects.

The table sets out (a) the level of MISG provided to head injury projects for each year since the commencement of the grant and (b) this as a proportion of the total allocation.

MISG allocation to head injury projects 1991–97

(a) Allocation to head injury projects	£0	£277,000	£418,000	£685,000	£949,-000	£1.0 million[2]
(b) Allocation to head injury projects as a percentage of Total	£0	4.6 per cent.	4.2 per cent.	4.9 per cent.	5.3 per cent.	5.6 per cent.

[2] Figures for 1996–97 allocation to head injury projects are provisional.
It is for local authorities to identify, and submit for approval, projects for MISG funding in future years.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the per capita cost of public expenditure on (a) health and (b) personal social services in Scotland for each year since 1990. [5062]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information is set out in the table:

£ per head

	Health	Personal Social Services
1990–91	582	112
1991–92	654	122
1992–93	718	134

Thomas Hamilton

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the report commissioned by Lord Cullen into Thomas Hamilton, relating to his occupations and finances, produced by Inspector Paul Hughes of Central Scotland police and submitted to the Cullen inquiry. [5534]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The police report in question was instructed on behalf of the Lord Advocate as part of the investigations carried out following the death of Thomas Hamilton. The report was submitted to the inquiry, but it was not introduced as evidence. Evidence given by Chief Inspector Hughes, which covered the subject matter of the report, is detailed in the transcripts of the inquiry proceedings—page 248—which are already in the Library.

Scottish Legal Aid Board

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many staff are employed by the Scottish Legal Aid Board; and what is the total wage cost; [5661]

(2) how many employees at the Scottish Legal Aid Board are solicitors; and what is the total salary cost. [5662]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: On 31 March 1996, the Scottish Legal Aid Board employed 268.6 full-time equivalent staff of whom eight were solicitors.

The total salary cost for the period 1995–96 was £4.8 million of which £0.3 million was paid to solicitors.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the salaries paid to (a) members and (b) the chief executive of the Scottish Legal Aid Board. [5663]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information is set out in the table:

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total value of abatements from legal aid accounts submitted by solicitors to the Scottish Legal Aid Board in the years 1994–95 and 1995–96; if he will list the cases where the abatement was more than (i) 25 per cent., (ii) 10 per cent. but not more than 25 per cent., (iii) 5 per cent. but not more than 10 per cent. and (iv) 3 per cent. but not more than 5 per cent. of the account rendered; and if he will express in percentage terms the relationship between the abatements and the total fund paid to solicitors exclusive of outlays. [5664]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The total value of abatements from legal aid accounts submitted by solicitors to the Scottish Legal Aid Board was £4.6 million in 1994–95 and £4.3 million in 1995–96.

Detailed information on abatement levels broken down by percentage is not available.

Excluded Pupils

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) primary and (b) secondary pupils (i) were permanently excluded from school in 1995–96 and (ii) had fixed-term exclusions; and how many of those in (i) returned to mainstream education. [5587]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 25 November 1996]: Information on the number of primary and secondary pupils who were excluded from school on a fixed term—temporary—basis is not available. Nor is information on the number of pupils permanently excluded who returned to mainstream education.

The most recent available information, consistent with that set out in the report on attendance and absence in Scottish schools, 1994–95, published by the audit unit of HM inspectors of schools, is set out in the table.

	Number of pupils permanently excluded from schools in 1994–95	Number of half days of temporary exclusions from schools from January to July 1995

Secondary pupils	296	157,958

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of indebtedness was acquired by the North of Scotland Water Authority on 1 April from (a) Shetland islands council, (b) Orkney islands council, (c) Western Isles islands council, (d) Highland regional council, (e) Grampian regional council and (f) Tayside regional council. [5974]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The level of indebtedness acquired by the North of Scotland Water Authority on 1 April 1996 was:

Area	Total £ million
Shetland	3.6
Orkney	10.2
Western Isles	9.8
Highland	46.7

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the expected level of capital expenditure by the North of Scotland Water Authority on (a) sewerage works and (b) water scheme works in 1996–97 and 1997–98 in (i) Orkney and (ii) Shetland. [5976]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The expected level of capital expenditure in Orkney and in Shetland on sewerage works and water scheme works in 1996–97 is:

£ million

	Sewerage	Water
Orkney	1.25	3.15
Shetland	1.5	1.0

The programme for 1997–98 has not yet been finalised.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount was spent on capital works in respect of (a) water schemes and (b) sewerage schemes undertaken by (i) Orkney islands council and (ii) Shetland islands council in each financial year from 1992–93 to 1995–96. [5975]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information is set out in the table:

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the non-domestic rate poundage for 1997–98. [6633]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. I propose that the Scottish non-domestic rate poundage for 1997–98 should be 45.8p. An order prescribing the poundage will be laid before Parliament in due course.

This decision maintains the link between the Scottish and English poundages. It ensures that Scottish business will continue to benefit from the Government's unified business rate policy. If the power to set poundages had not been removed from local authorities by 1994–95, the last year before full harmonisation, businesses in Scotland would have been paying around £500 million more a year in non-domestic rates than was in fact the case, and indeed a good deal more had authorities increased business rates by more than the rate of inflation.

The total cost to the Government of UBR policy over the five years to April 1995 was in the region of £1,400 million. These figures show the extent of the Government's commitment to ensuring that business in Scotland have a guarantee of stability and are not disadvantaged as compared with their competitors south of the border.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to further regulate the use of capital receipts by Scottish local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [6634]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Last year, I introduced measures to control the indebtedness of Scottish local authorities through limits on their ability to utilise capital receipts by requiring them to set aside 25 per cent. of those receipts for the redemption of debts.

I have decided that, from 1 April 1997, Scottish local authorities will set aside 50 per cent. of receipts raised from the sale of land and other property held on the general fund and, in the case of housing, 75 per cent. of receipts raised from the sale of housing stock. Scottish Homes will also be required to apply receipts to debt repayment from next year.

So far as the general fund is concerned, these decisions confirm the intention I announced on 28 November 1995. The exceptions to these set-aside rules will remain as in the current year, including an exemption from debt redemption rules when assets are transferred by an authority as part of a private finance initiative project.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce details of the 1997–98 local government settlement. [6635]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For the second successive year, I have decided to improve on the plans for the local government settlement. The level of Government supported expenditure has been increased by 2.2 per cent. or nearly £132 million and the level of aggregate external finance by 1.1 per cent. or £60 million, in both cases after adjusting for the phasing-out of local government reorganisation on costs and the transfer of responsibility for funding nursery education.

Next year, Scottish local authorities will receive Government support totalling over £5.4 billion, which represents over 37 per cent. of the total Scottish Office budget. As a result of the settlement, Scottish local government will continue to enjoy levels of spending and Government support far in excess of those available in either England or Wales. Spending in Scotland will be 30 per cent. higher per head of population than in England and Government support will be 42 per cent. higher.

In determining the settlement, I have given particular priority to the police and fire services, and have also provided additional resources for education and social work.

I have decided that capping must be retained in order to protect council tax payers, and I am today announcing my provisional capping principles for next year. Council tax payers in the areas concerned will also benefit from the second year of the transitional mismatch and district equalisation schemes. Grant totalling around £18 million will be provided in 1997–98 to fund these schemes and this will be in addition to the aggregate external finance total which I am announcing today.

The details of the settlement are:

Government supported expenditure

I propose that Government supported expenditure—GSE—for 1997–98 should be set at £6,214.3 million. This compares with previous plans of £6,186 million.

Grant aided expenditure

Local authorities will incur an estimated £793.3 million on loan and leasing charges in 1997–98. This is an increase of £15.5 million over this year's figure. These charges continue to increase and I am announcing separately the action I am taking to bring them under greater control. After deducting this sum from the GSE total, £5,421.0 million is available for allocation as grant aided expenditure—GAE. This GAE amount is also 2.2 per cent. or over £116 million higher than that for the current year, after making the above adjustments. I shall announce GAE figures for individual local authorities as soon as possible.

Aggregate external finance

I further propose that Government support for local authority current expenditure—aggregate external finance (AEF) which consists of revenue support grant, specific grants and non-domestic rate income—for 1997–98 should be set at £15,343.2 million, which compares with the previous plans of £5,298 million. Proposals for the distribution of AEF to individual local authorities are likely to be issued to councils before Christmas.

Capping

I have the power to cap a local authority either where I consider that its planned expenditure is excessive or where there is an excessive increase in its planned expenditure as compared with the previous year. My provisional capping principles for 1997–98 are:

any increase in budget between 1996–97 and 1997–98 of more than 0.5 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the council's GAE for 1997–98—in the case of Dumfries and Galloway, Fife, Highland, Orkney islands, Scottish Borders, Shetland islands and Western Isles councils—and the council's GAE for 1997–98 adjusted to take account of the second year of the self-financed mismatch scheme, in the case of all other councils; any budget for 1997–98 more than 12.5 per cent. above the council's GAE assessment, as adjusted if necessary, will be excessive save that if that budget is no greater than the budget set by that council for 1996–97, the council will not be capped.

WALES

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the teaching profession in Wales has taken early retirement in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4939]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is shown in the table:

School teachers taking early retirement as a percentage of school teachers in service[1]

	Percentage of teachers taking early retirement
1990–91	2.3
1991–92	1.8
1992–93	1.8
1994–95	2.0

[1] Includes grant-maintained and independent school staff who are in the teachers' superannuation scheme (TSS), excludes those returning to non-pensionable occasional service.

Pig Carcases (Antibiotic Residues)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what tests are required by his Department to be applied in slaughterhouses in Wales to verify the absence of antibiotics in pig carcases; what discussion he has held with the European Commission on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [5360]

Mr. Hague: Under the national surveillance scheme for residues in meat, which implements EC directive 86/469, samples from pigs are collected each year from randomly selected slaughterhouses by the Meat Hygiene Service, and tested for the presence of residues of veterinary medicines including antibiotics. The results show that the incidence of residues found in 1995 was very low. Only 83 samples out of some 16,000 tested from pigs were above the action level. Because of the considerable margins of safety involved, none of these samples was likely to have posed a health risk to consumers.

Discussions on measures intended to harmonise, improve and extend existing controls on surveillance for residues have already been held. Member states have agreed EC directive 96/23, which repeals EC directive 86/489, which among other changes will require a small number of samples from pigs to be taken on farms as well as at slaughterhouses. It is to enter into force in all member states by 1 July 1997.

Disability

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra financial assistance he plans to give to organisations in Wales devoted to assisting and advising those suffering from disability in the financial year 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [5549]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend will announce his spending plans for 1996–97 in the usual way later this year.

Arable Area Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what area of land was set aside in Wales in 1995-96 under the arable area scheme. [5548]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The area was 4479.18 hectares.

Non-domestic Rates

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his proposal for the Welsh non-domestic rate poundage for the next financial year. [6539]

Mr. Hague: I propose that the national non-domestic rate poundage for Wales should rise to 41.4 p to reflect the annual increase in the retail prices index to September 1996.

Local Government Finance

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for local government revenue spending in 1997–98. [6540]

Mr. Hague: I propose to set local authority and police authority total standard spending in Wales for 1997–98 at £2,931.1 million. This figure includes £169.2 million for care in the community. It represents an increase of £66.3 million, 2.3 per cent. on the comparable level of funding for 1996–97.

I propose to set central Government support for total standard spending at £2,577.7 million.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4943]

Mr. Paice: The cost to the DfEE of sending Ministers and accompanying officials to meetings related to European Union business between 1 November 1995 and 31 October 1996 was £13,072.51.

Many areas of the Department's business involve negotiation on EU matters. The cost of sending officials to meetings on EU business could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of her Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4953]

Mr. Paice: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Examination Results

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of young people in (a) England and Wales and (b) London gained five or more GCSEs at grade A to C or equivalent in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96. [5276]

Mrs Gillan: The percentage of young people who gained five or more GCSEs at grades A to C or equivalent in England and in Greater London is as follows:

Percentage

	1979–80	1990–91	1995–96
England (all schools)	24.0	37.8	44.5
Greater London (all maintained schools)	19.7	29.7	39.0

The figures for 1979–80 and 1990–91 are based on percentages of school leavers of all ages and those for 1995–96 relate to 15-year-old pupils in schools.

The information for schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

School Attendance (Electronic Monitoring)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what studies her Department has made in conjunction with the National Council for Educational Technology of the possible benefits to secondary schools of electronic registration schemes; [5868]

(2) what is her Department's policy on evaluating the potential of information technology as a means for monitoring pupil attendance; [5869]

(3) what estimate she has made of the amount of teaching time which could be saved in the secondary school timetable by electronic registration systems. [5871]

Mr. Forth: Information technology can play an important part in helping some schools develop more effective means of monitoring attendance patterns, and thereby underpin measures to improve attendance rates. We have encouraged experimentation with school attendance applications of IT through the truancy, disruptive and disaffected pupils component of the grants for education support and training programme. An independent evaluation of this programme found that, if properly introduced, electronic registration systems could help schools to improve the consistency and reliability of attendance information. Further advice and information is available to schools and local education authorities from the National Council for Educational Technology.

Pupil Registration

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received concerning the statutory requirements to register pupils in every lesson, as well as in the morning and afternoon. [5873]

Mr. Forth: By law, schools are required to take attendance registers at the start of both the morning and afternoon sessions. Schools may also call registers at the start of each lesson, but this is not a statutory requirement. My right hon. Friend receives a wide range of representations on the subject of pupil registration and school attendance more generally.

Investors in People

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers and of what size currently hold Investors in People status; and what percentage these constitute of all employers of that size in the area (a) for each of his Department's regions and (b) nationally. [6146]

Mr. Paice: The latest available data is provided in the following table:

Number of organisations recognised as having achieved the investors in people standard and the percentage of these against agreed baselines of organisations with 50 or more employees: by Government office region and nationally

Region	Employer size					Total
	< 50	50–199		200+
	Number	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
North-East	102	67	5	80	16	249

London	127	81	2	96	7	305
Total England	1,545	1,103	4	1,032	14	3,680

The agreed baselines are the numbers of organisations eligible for separate investors in people recognition of the relevant size as counted by English training and enterprise councils in spring this year. There are no equivalent baselines of under 50 employees.

Former Incapacity Benefit Claimants

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how much has been spent by her Department during 1995–96 on placing ex-incapacity benefit claimants who are signed on as unemployed into (a) jobplans, (b) jobclubs, (c) job interview guarantees and (d) referrals to placing, assessment and counselling teams; [6193]

(2) what is her estimate of the expenditure required for 1996–97 to place ex-incapacity benefit claimants who are signed on as unemployed into (a) jobplans, (b) jobclubs, (c) job interview guarantees and (d) referrals to placing, assessment and counselling teams. [6194]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 26 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the expenditure for 1995–96 and 1996–97 on placing ex-Incapacity Benefit clients who are registered unemployed into various Employment Service programmes. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The anticipated number of ex-incapacity benefit (IB) people making a claim to unemployment benefits was 200,000 in 1995–96 and 145,000 in 1996–97. To support the Employment Service (ES) package of help for ex-IB clients resources were allocated through PES as follows:

	1995–96		1996–97
	Expected number of opportunities	Funding (£000)	Expected number of opportunities	Funding (£000)
Jobplan	86,000	9,632	68,150	7,837

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 133, if she will publish the results of the research carried out by the Employment Service occupational psychology division, including its recommendations; and if she will implement those recommendations. [6191]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 26 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about whether the results of the research carried out by the Employment Service Occupational Psychology Division, including its recommendations will be published. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

In my letter of 12 November 1996, Official Report Column 133, I explained that work had been carried out to consider the appropriateness of the package the Employment Service (ES) had put in place to help jobseekers who have previously claimed Incapacity Benefit (IB) to return to employment. Occupational Psychology Division is now considering their findings so that a report can be prepared which will contain a discussion of the implications for the process of helping these jobseekers. Once this report has been published, I will arrange for a copy to be sent to you, and a copy placed in the Library of the House. I will be considering the findings further, with a view to implementing changes where possible to do so.

I hope this is helpful.

European Education Ministers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the outcomes of the Council of EC Education Ministers held on 21 November. [6535]

Mr. Plaice: On 21 November, the Council of EC Education Ministers, at which my noble Friend the Minister of State for Education and Employment represented the UK, adopted a Council decision authorising the EC Education Committee to hold informal meetings with Council of Europe representatives; a Council decision amending decision 93/246/EEC of 29 April 1993 adopting the second phase of the trans-European co-operation scheme for higher education—TEMPUS II; a Council resolution on new political priorities for the information society; and a Council decision on the adoption of a multi-annual programme to promote linguistic diversity in the information society.

The Council adopted conclusions on school effectiveness and held a public debate on this topic. The Council also adopted conclusions on lifelong learning and on local community development through education. Council and Education Ministers meeting within Council adopted a declaration on educational measures to protect children and counter paedophilia.

Council received reports from the European Commission on four thematic conferences associated with the Commission White paper, "Teaching and Learning: Towards the Learning Society"; the Commission's Green Paper on obstacles to mobility, and its action plan on learning in the information society. The Commission gave oral presentations to Council on the budgetary needs of the SOCRATES programmes; a proposed Council recommendation on the transferability of student grants; a proposed Council recommendation on the quality of higher education; and quality assessment of first and second level education systems.

Education Ministers also took part in a meeting with Education Ministers of the countries of central and eastern Europe.

A copy of the official minutes of the Council will be placed in the Library when they become available.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for her Department's expenditure in 1997–98; and if she will make a statement. [6536]

Mrs Gillian Shephard: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced today, the Government intend to provide £13,950 million for the Department's voted expenditure in 1997–98. This will be in addition to expenditure on schools provided through the local authority finance settlement, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will announce tomorrow.

Schools

Provision for schools is to increase by £830 million. The bulk of this will be provided through the local authority finance settlement. Detailed allocations for individual local authorities will be announced by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 27 November. The local authority settlement will allow for an increase of 3.6 per cent. for schools. It is for local authorities to decide how to allocate the available funding, but the Government expect that priority will be given to schools. the total package of funding for schools of all types (including provision for the under 5s) represents an increase over 1996–97 of 4.4 per cent.

Schools capital

In 1997–98, the amount available for school building will be £610 million. In addition local authorities will be able to benefit from the local authority capital challenge fund of £600 million over the plan period, to which my Department is contributing £25 million in 1997–98. Alongside these resources lie the opportunities available from the private finance initiative; the recently acquired right of grant maintained schools to borrow commercially; the full use of proceeds from asset disposals by grant-maintained schools; and the relaxations on the capital controls which apply to disposals of local authority school property. This combination of measures will help to maintain the school building programme at a high level. The results of the local authority capital challenge fund for 1997–98 will be announced in December.

Grant–maintained schools

The Government will continue to ensure that GM schools receive the necessary funding to meet their extra responsibilities and particular circumstances.

The plans provide for special purposes grants to schools to be maintained at broadly current levels. They also allow for the continuing development of existing GM schools, enabling the sector to play a leading role in extending choice and diversity, and in implementing the proposals contained in the June White Paper, "Self–Government for Schools" and in the Education Bill currently before Parliament. The Funding Agency for Schools is considering the balance of provision between the various grants.

Specialist schools

The settlement includes £33 million for 1997–98, £35 million for 1998–99 and £32 million in 1999–00 for our specialist schools programme. Already over 180 schools are operating as technology colleges or language colleges. The settlement, which adds £20 million to provision over the three years, will enable us to expand the network to over 300 schools, achieving increased diversity and opportunity.

Teacher Training Agency

The total grant for the Teacher Training Agency for recurrent and capital expenditure is planned at £210 million, £206 million and £197 million in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–00 respectively. The grant takes account of changes in forecast student numbers which reflect, among other things, reduced targets for intakes into initial teacher training courses, consistent with a reduction in premature retirements from the teaching force. The grant also covers the costs of developing and introducing the new national teacher training curriculum and the graduate teacher programme, as well as funding for continuing work on the Headlamp scheme, and the development and piloting of the national professional qualification for headteachers.

16 to 19-year-olds and FE student numbers

Planned provision will enable the Government to meet their commitments to 16 to 19-year-olds for education and training in schools, colleges and work-based programmes. It will allow for continuing growth in the number of students both in the 16 to 19 age group and adults. Overall numbers of full-time equivalent further education students are set to increase by a further 8 per cent. over the plan period.

Grant to the Further Education Funding Council

The total grant to the FEFC is planned at £3,072 million in 1997–98, £3,053 million in 1998–99 and £3,011 million in 1999–2000. The sector is receiving extra resources totalling £80 million in 1997–98 and 1998–99 to underpin the continuing growth of the sector, including funding for the costs of greater use of the private finance initiative.

Modern apprenticeships and youth training

Government funding for modern apprenticeships, youth training and the development of these initiative flowing from Sir Ron Dearing's review of qualifications for 16 to 19-year-olds is planned to increase by £22 million next year against anticipated expenditure in 1996–97. Plans allow for at least 62,000 entrants to modern apprenticeships next year, rising to 67,000 by the turn of the century.

Employment and training

Employment Service programmes

Unemployment has fallen by 10 per cent. in the last year and has been on a consistently downward path for almost four years. The unemployment rate in the UK is more than two and a half percentage points below the EU average. Against that background the Government's priority is to help unemployed people, and particularly the most disadvantaged, to compete effectively for available jobs and to get back into work as quickly as possible. It is therefore increasing very substantially the resources devoted to employment programmes designed to deliver the more intensive help needed by the longer term unemployed.

In addition to the already announced expansion of project work pilots, which will help up to 100,000 people, the Government will be introducing contract for work pilots to harness the private sector's talent for innovation to help longer-term unemployed people back to work. In addition, from April next year, a new mandatory programme of intensive interviews will be introduced designed to provide those reaching two or more years unemployment with concentrated back to work help from the Employment Service. This approach is expected to help about 250,000 people next year.

For those young people aged under 25 who have been out of work for two years or more, the Government will be making available throughout Britain the successful jobmatch programme. Jobmatch helps longer-term unemployed people to use part time work as a route out of unemployment. It pays a weekly allowance for six months to those who take a part time job, and provides training vouchers which individuals can use to improve their skills and enhance their employability. Some 40,000 people aged under 25 have been unemployed for two years or more. Jobmatch will help to ensure that next year more of them get back into jobs.

With the welcome reductions in unemployment, including long-term unemployment, over the past year, the Government have been able to reduce provision for training for work by £21 million against anticipated expenditure in 1996–97. The planned number of opportunities in training for work will reduce by 9 per cent. to 180,000—less than the 11 per cent. fall over the last year in the number of long-term unemployed people.

As unemployment falls, training for work resources will be focused on the most disadvantaged and harder to help. Building on the experience of the pilots, the Government intend to integrate pre-vocational training into training for work and to triple the numbers helped. In 1997–98, 30,000 people with motivational, attitudinal and basic skill needs will be helped—with more in later years if the demand exists.

Careers Service

The Careers Service budget will rise to £209 million for each year of the period 1997–98 to 1999–2000. This level of funding will secure the entitlement of 3 million young people aged 13 to 18 to careers information and careers guidance. In particular it will allow and increase in the careers guidance available to 16 to 18-year-olds.

Lifetime learning

Following a Government review of services to business, the Department's main employer support budgets—employer investment in people, and skills for small businesses—are being combined to form the local competitiveness budget. This will simplify arrangements and delegate more responsibility to local level for the design and delivery of provision. Two new challenge funds—local and sectoral—will operate alongside the new budget. A small contribution to the new challenge funds from previously planned provision has been transferred to DTI, which will be managing the challenges on behalf of the Government Departments involved.

In their response to the issues raised in the replies to the "Lifetime Learning" consultation document earlier this year, the Government said that they would look into the scope for introducing a national helpline and developing local partnerships to overcome the barriers faced by many people in getting objective information and advice about learning opportunities. The Government intend to introduce such a helpline and £4.4 million has been provided for it in 1997–98.

Jobseeker's allowance

The jobseeker's allowance has been introduced successfully, and is significantly increasing the amount of help and advice the Employment Service is able to provide to individuals. The Government regard JSA as a key step in their wide-ranging programme of labour market reforms.

Disability programmes

The plans announced today provide for disability programmes, including access to work, to be maintained at their current level.

Training and enterprise councils

The Government have re-affirmed their substantial commitment to TECS, and plan to continue to invest over £1.4 billion each year over the next three years on programmes delivered through TECs. In addition, measures both to ease the administrative burden on TECs and to increase their flexibility to tailor programmes to meet local needs will reinforce their role as key players in local economic development.

Higher education

Student numbers

The Government's plans for student numbers in higher education allow for the participation rate for young people to be maintained at over 30 per cent. The Government have asked the Higher Education Funding Council for England to allocate funds to higher education institutions in such a way as to promote the expansion of the numbers of part-time undergraduate students.

Student support

The plans announced today allow for the level of student support through the main rates for grants and loans to be increased next year in line with inflation. In 1997–98 the loan and grant rates will increase by 2.5 per cent. in line with the retail prices index exclusive of mortgage interest payments. Parental contributions will also be increased in line with changes in the retail prices index. Net planned expenditure in England and Wales in the financial year 1997–98 is £802 million on loans and £1,985 million on mandatory awards covering maintenance grants and tuition fees. Access funds for further and higher education will be maintained at £28 million a year.

Tuition fees

The maximum tuition fees reimbursed through mandatory awards in 1997–98 will be the same as for 1996–97: £750 for classroom-based courses; £1,600 for laboratory and workshop-based courses; and, £2,800 for the clinical elements of medical, dental and veterinary courses. The maximum tuition fee paid through post-graduate awards funded by my Department will be increased in line with forecast inflation to £2,540 in 1997–98.

University and college funding

Total provision for universities and colleges in England through HEFCE grant and income from tuition fees paid through mandatory awards is planned to rise from £4,359 million in 1996–97 to £4,407 million in 1997–98 and £4,429 million in 1998–99. The Government have asked the funding council to earmark £20 million in 1997–98 for challenge funding for scientific research equipment.

The Government are also making additional grant available to the funding council in this financial year for challenge funding for scientific research equipment. Taken with the initial allocations from public funds and contributions from private funds, this initiative will be providing nearly £50 million for research equipment in 1996–97.

Further and higher education and capital

The Government believe that colleges in the further education sector and higher education institutions can, and should, make the fullest possible use of private finance through the private finance initiative and other entrepreneurial activity. My Department has asked the funding councils to distribute grant to institutions on the basis that they promote the private finance initiative for capital investment and encourage institutions to make the maximum appropriate use of private finance and associated commercial expertise. Within the provision being made available to the funding councils, the Government are also making available resources to enable them to pay a special VAT-related grant in respect of certain PFI projects. Within this remit, and aside from some minor exceptions, the funding councils are able to distribute grant to institutions as they see fit.

Other initiatives

On top of the increase in general provision for schools, extra funding is also being provided for a range of programmes designed to widen choice, enhance diversity and promote excellence across all educational sectors as follows.

Nursery provision

Nursery vouchers will be extended throughout England on 1 April 1997, following the successful pilots that have been run in 1996–97. Provision for 1997–98 will be £674 million, including the necessary transfer from Education Standard Spending.

Grants for educational support and training

The overall level of funding available for grants for educational support and training—GEST—will increase by some 10 per cent. over the 1996–97 equivalent programme. The new total will support expenditure of £290 million by schools and local education authorities on a wide range of important educational priorities—in particular measures for supporting schools' own development plans and the in-service training of teachers. A new grant will help potential heads develop the skills needed for headship. Other new grants will focus on improving school security and child protection. Another new grant will support the introduction of nation-wide baseline assessment of children entering primary school. Literacy will also receive a boost through the innovative family literacy grant, which will help underachieving parents and their children. Full details of these and all other GEST grants will be announced shortly.

Assisted places scheme

The plans cover the expansion of the assisted places scheme. Provision is made for continued funding of the new places allocated from September 1996 under the first phase of the expansion programme, and for an additional 1,000 entry places from September 1997 under the second phase. Subject to the passage of the Education Bill, most of the places allocated in 1997 will be for children of primary age.

NORTHERN IRELAND

BSE

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what mechanisms his Department is able to identify the cattle assessed as being at risk from BSE which require to be slaughtered under the Florence agreement; how many such cattle there are in Northern Ireland; and what is the minimum practical time scale for completing the accelerated cull in Northern Ireland.[2133]

Mr. Ancram: In the event of a cull based on the original proposals in the Florence agreement, the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, could trace all animals born during the period 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1993 which have been reared on the same farm and in the same season as cattle which have subsequently been confirmed as having developed BSE.

There are at present some 1,766 cattle in Northern Ireland which have been identified for inclusion in any such cull. The number is subject to change depending on the number of identified animals which may be slaughtered under other arrangements and additional animals identified because of any new cases of BSE which arise.

Timescale will be governed by the speed at which the on-farm identification and valuation could be carried out. The time required to slaughter these animals would be minimal.

Arson (Compensation)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Chief Constable's certificates have been issued for isolated acts of arson occurring this year where evidence of criminal involvement is only assumed; what power the Compensation Agency has to agree to compensate where no such certificates are issued; and how many times that power has been used in 1995–96. [4459]

Sir John Wheeler: Information on the number of Chief Constable's certificates issued under article 5(2) of the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 for specific acts is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In the absence of a Chief Constable's certificate, the power to compensate is contained in articles 4, 5(1)(a) and 6 of the order. These provide that the Secretary of State shall pay compensation where damage has been maliciously or wantonly caused to agricultural property, or where damage has been unlawfully, maliciously or wantonly caused to any property by three or more persons unlawfully, riotously or tumultuously assembled, or where three or more persons who are tumultuously and riotously assembled, unlawfully, maliciously or wantonly cause damage to a building or to property within the curtilage of a building and in the course of the riot a person unlawfully removes any property from such a building. In 1995–96, 465 claims for criminal damage compensation were cleared under these provisions.

Terrorism (Compensation)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 280, what steps are taken to ensure that claims or counter-claims are taken against individuals in relation to criminal injury or damage caused by those individuals as a result of their involvement in terrorist acts where the Compensation Agency has not paid out. [4454]

Sir John Wheeler: Government Departments which suffer criminal damage do not recover compensation from the Compensation Agency. If the circumstances were such that it was feasible and practical to do so, Departments would pursue claims in the civil courts for compensation against any person who caused criminal damage to their property. No such claims or counter-claims have been made by Government Departments in Northern Ireland in the past five years.

Briggs Rock Sewage Works

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what environmental protection steps his Department is taking in relation to the proposed extension of the Briggs Rock sewage works in Groomsport. [5122]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Water Service under its chief executive, Mr. H.R.F. Plester. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. R. F. Plester to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 25 November 1996:

Mr Moss has asked me to reply to your parliamentary question asking what environmental protection the Department is taking in relation to the proposed extension of the Briggs Rock sewage works in Groomsport.

The Water Service has recently informed North Down Borough Council of its intention to make applications for planning permission for a "small footprint" waste water treatment works and storm water retention tanks at a site near Briggs Rock. These applications will be subject to all the usual planning and consultative processes including full assessment of the environmental impact. If permission is obtained, the steps which would be required to minimise the effects of the environment will be stipulated in the planning permission. The scheme is part of a Private Finance project and is necessary to achieve compliance with EC waste water and bathing water directives.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for which public sector pension schemes he currently has responsibility; how many members of each of those schemes have switched or transferred out to personal pension providers in the last five years; and which schemes do not allow re-entry. [5116]

Sir John Wheeler: The details requested are not held centrally but the number of members who have opted out of public service occupational pension schemes is somewhere in the region of 2,000 to 2,500. It is not possible to be more specific nor is it possible to identify what proportion of this number switched or transferred out to personal pension providers.

In keeping with Government policy, Departments responsible for public service schemes have introduced, or are in the process of introducing, amendments which allow current employees who were victims of mis-selling to re-enter their occupational pension schemes. The amendments will also facilitates members' restoration to a financial position equivalent to what would have been the case if mis-selling had not occurred.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fair employment and sex discrimination cases have been commenced within the RUC over the last five years; how many officers were involved; and if he will make a statement. [5119]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is set out in the table.

The RUC remains committed to a policy of equality of opportunity for all its members and is in the process of implementing a range of policies and initiatives to this end.

Grammar School Places (North Down)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the number of pupils in North Down likely to become eligible for grammar school places over the next five years broken down by sex and religion. [5120]

Mr. Ancram: There is no definition of a pupil who is eligible for a grammar school place. The number of pupils entering grammar schools is related to the capacity of grammar schools and in the North Down area a number of pupils choose to attend grammar schools in the Belfast area.

Economic Strategy

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for an annual review of economic strategy in Northern Ireland with particular reference to the performance of the Department of Economic Development and its five boards. [5559]

Mr. Ancram: None. The annual reports of the five agencies and the periodic strategy reviews and corporate plans published by the Department and its agencies already provide the material that such a review would elicit.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6032]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Pollution (Fish Kills)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was in each of the last five years and the current year to the latest available date, the number of pollution incidents which resulted in fish kills in Northern Ireland waters; what waters were involved; what fish species were killed and in what approximate numbers; what action was taken to restock and the cost of restocking in each case; how many of the pollution incidents were the result of pollution material emanating from (a) Department of Environment premises, (b) farms, (c) industrial premises and (d) other; what was the number of prosecutions brought; and if he will list the results of the court proceedings. [1966]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 1 November 1996]: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Environment and Heritage Service under its chief executive, Mr. Robert C. Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert C. Martin to Mr. William Ross, dated 22 November 1996:

As Chief Executive of Environment and Heritage Service, I am responsible for all operational aspects of the Department of the Environment's environmental policies.

I am therefore responding to the written Parliamentary Question which you put down in the House of Commons on 30 October 1996 'to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what was in each of the last 5 years and the current year to the latest available date, the number of pollution incidents which resulted in fish kills in Northern Ireland waters, what waters were involved, what fish species were killed and in what approximate numbers; what action was taken to restock and the cost of restocking in each case; how many of the pollution incidents were the result of polluting material emanating from (a) Department of Environment premises, (b) farms, (c) industrial premises and (d) other; what was the number of prosecutions brought; and if he will list the result of the court proceedings'.

The enclosed schedule lists all reported polluted incidents which resulted in a fish kill and included cases where prosecutions have been taken under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1996. Where costs have been obtained towards the cost of restocking this is carried out by either the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland or by the Foyle Fisheries Commission. In cases where private fishery has been affected, we have no record of whether restocking costs have been awarded as a result of any private court action.

I trust that you find this information helpful.

DEFENCE

Defence Helicopter Support Authority

12. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the work of the defence helicopter support authority at Yeovilton since its establishment. [4320]

Mr. Arbuthnot: By general consent among the three services, the defence helicopter support authority has been a great success since its formation in April 1994.

Trident

13. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the total cost of the Trident programme. [4321]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The current estimated cost of the Trident programme is £12.2 billion. This is £3.4 billion less in real terms than the 1982 estimate.

Eurofighter

14. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his German counterpart concerning the Eurofighter project. [4322]

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson).

Army Recruitment

15. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to improve recruitment to the Army. [4323]

Mr. Soames: Vigorous steps are being taken to improve recruitment. In addition to a substantial increase in the recruiting budget, we are advertising armed forces careers in jobcentres, and deferred the previously planned closure of 41 Army careers information offices.

"Striking a Balance"

16. Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken further to improve the environmental management of Ministry of Defence land following his Department's report, "Striking a Balance." [4325]

Mr. Soames: "Striking a Balance" forms a key part of our overall strategy to improve the management of the defence estate as a whole. It sets out in detail the guidelines governing the management of the Army training estate.

Nuclear Defence

17. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the costs of maintaining the United Kingdom's nuclear defence capability including procurement costs in the last available year; and if he will make a statement. [4326]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Royal Navy's Trident missile submarines now provide Britain's independent nuclear deterrent and hence the ultimate guarantee of our security. Trident acquisition costs in 1995–96 amounted to £401 million, from an estimated total for the programme of £12.2 billion. Trident and Polaris running costs in 1995–96 are estimated to have totalled some £215 million. Trident running costs over the lifetime of the programme are estimated to be around £200 million per annum.

22. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about Britain's nuclear deterrent. [4331]

Mr. Soames: We regularly receive representations from hon. Members and the public about our nuclear deterrent.

NATO

18. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his Russian counterpart to discuss the extension of NATO. [4327]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend visited Moscow last week and met the Russian Defence Minister, General Rodionov. They discussed a wide range of subjects of mutual interest, including the accession of new members to NATO.

Royal Navy

19. Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the strength of the Royal Navy in 1990; and what estimate he has made of the strength of the Royal Navy under current plans by the end of the decade. [4328]

Mr. Soames: The strength of the fleet in 1990 is contained in table 1 of annex A to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", Cm 1022, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House. Our current plans are to maintain the fleet broadly at the strength set out in annex B to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1996", Cm 3223.

Royal College of Defence Studies

20. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place between his Department and the royal college of defence studies regarding an application from the Indonesian special forces to attend a course in London. [4329]

Mr. Soames: None.

Iraq

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to visit northern Iraq to discuss the operation of the northern no-fly zone. [4330]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has no plans to visit northern Iraq.

Commission for Racial Equality

23. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policies he has introduced under the programme agreed with the Commission for Racial Equality. [4332]

Mr. Soames: Following my Department's agreement with the Commission for Racial Equality earlier this year, a number of measures concerning racial equality issues in all three services have been introduced. A new system of monitoring the ethnic origin of inquirers and applicants to the armed forces was introduced on 1 June 1996 and a new survey of the ethnic origin of serving personnel has recently been completed. Work is currently in hand to analyse this material and quarterly thereafter. Considerable work has also been undertaken on revising Household Cavalry recruitment literature and all Household Cavalry personnel have been reminded of the Army's policy on racial equality. A vigorous training programme for these personnel is being undertaken and the Army's outreach work in ethnic minority communities continues to be strengthened. The Department continues to work closely with the Commission for Racial Equality in implementing the agreed programme and equal opportunities directives for all three services have now been issued.

Operation Purple Star

24. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British merchant vessels were chartered by Her Majesty's Government for Operation Purple Star; and if he will make a statement. [4333]

Mr. Soames: British registered merchant vessels were chartered by my Department to take part in Operation Purple Star.

Only one British registered merchant vessel was offered. This was declined as it did not meet the requirement, being too small and slow for the task.

Sea Crusader

25. Mr. Brian David Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the current status of the Japanese roll on/roll off vessel. Sea Crusader, chartered by his Department. [4335]

Mr. Soames: On 1 November 1996, RFA Sea Crusader suffered power loss in its starboard engine. The engine fault has now been rectified under guarantee and at no cost to my Department. The vessel is fully operational and has resumed its programme.

Gulf War Syndrome

26. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Gulf war syndrome. [4336]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) on 29 October, Official Report, columns 446–47.

Robert Wilsons Canning Co.

27. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the closure of Robert Wilsons Canning Co. plant at Kilwinning has had on the supply of the company's products to the armed forces. [4337]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The closure of the Wilsons plant at Kilwinning is not expected to affect adversely the supply of food to the armed forces.

The company currently has three contracts, two of which will be fulfilled before the Kilwinning plant closes, whilst the third will be undertaken by HL Foods, a sister company within the Hillsdown HL Group.

Anti-personnel Mines

28. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his French counterpart concerning a ban on the use of anti-personnel land mines. [4338]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs considered this issue with his European Union counterparts on 1 October 1996. Discussions on work towards a total worldwide ban on anti-personnel mines takes place regularly between UK and French officials.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of anti-personnel mines. [4487]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 23 April 1996, Official Report, column 84.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the total number of children benefiting from the boarding school allowance for the past five years, indicating the number of children whose parent is (a) of officer rank or above and (b) of other junior ranks; [5593]

(2) if he will list the total spent on the boarding school allowance in each of the past five years and the total number of children benefiting from the scheme; and if he will estimate the figures for (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [5595]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The total cost to my Department of boarding school allowance for the academic years in question was:

1991–92: £115.35 million

1992–93: £116.72 million

1993–94: £113.61 million

1994–95: £107.24 million

1995–96: £110.60 million

I estimate that the total which will be spent on boarding school allowance in the next two academic years will be approximately the same as for the current year.

The total average number of children for whom boarding school allowance was claimed in the academic years in question was:

1991–92: 16,208

1993–94: 12,567

My Department has kept detailed statistics which analyse only the number of children whose parent is an officer or other rank, for the academic year 1995–96. In that year, the average number of children whose parent is an officer is 7,125 and the average number of children whose parent is another rank is 3,574. Statistics for the previous four academic years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the independent schools on the admissible schools list that received funds from his Department in respect of boarding school allowance, indicating for each (a) the number of pupils benefiting from the scheme and (b) the amount of money received in each of the past five years. [5596]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The current admissible schools list—ASL—a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, gives details of the number of relevant pupils.

The amount of money received over the past five years by schools on successive ASLs is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the net annual and net total savings expected of the defence cost studies carried out by his Department on (a) the Ministry of Defence head office, (b) headquarter-service commands and top-level budget holders, (c) the Ministry of Defence police, (d) research and development, (e) procurement projects and practices, (f) the procurement executive—organisation and functions, (g) the review of market testing and contracting out, (h) financial management, (i) estate-property, (j) repairs-spares-storage and distribution, (k) naval infrastructure, (l) training, (m) recruitment—manning arrangements, (n) medical, (o) non-operational information systems strategies and expenditure, (p) security, (q) defence intelligence, (r) Royal Air Force management structure and manning, (s) Army management structure and manning, (t) Royal Navy management structure and manning, (u) music, (v) animals and vets, (w) catering and messes, (x) chaplaincy services, (y) Ministry of Defence fire services, (z) terminal air traffic control services, (aa) legal services, (bb) travel and subsistence, (cc) cost of regulations, (dd) the Meteorological Office, (ee) radiological protection, policy, advice and audit, (ff) forms and publications and (gg) uniforms, at the time each study was complete; when these savings were expected to commence; what are the actual net annual and total savings so far achieved in each case; and what is the latest estimate of net total savings expected for each of these studies at 1995–96 prices. [5467]

Mr. Soames: The total savings expected of the defence costs study remain as published last year in the MOD's memorandum "Front Line First: a year on": some £720 million in 1996–97 rising to over £1 billion per annum by the end of the decade.

This estimate reflects decisions taken by Ministers on the recommendations made by the various study teams as subsequently ratified during the first stage of the implementation process. That ratification was not carried out on a study-by-study basis but the budget areas tasked with implementing the decisions taken. This involved breaking out the various study team recommendations, many of which crossed budgetary boundaries, and allocating them to the appropriate budget areas. Initial monitoring of progress was done on this basis too.

The savings information is not, therefore, available in the form requested. Nor since the end of 1995 have the savings been monitored centrally or separately; they have been incorporated into the budgets of the areas concerned who are responsible for ensuring they are achieved.

Challenger Tanks (Channel Tunnel)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Challenger tanks can be transported through the channel tunnel. [5709]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Hodson to Dr. David Clark, dated 26 November 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about the transportation of Challenger tanks through the Channel Tunnel, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive Agency.

Challenger tanks could be transported through the Channel Tunnel, as the Tunnel rail loading gauge is large enough to accept all variants. As I pointed out in my reply to your earlier Question on the various methods of moving tanks, the transportation means on either side of the Tunnel would vary. The UK rail loading gauge cannot accommodate Challenger tanks and loading to and from continental rolling stock would need to take place at Cheriton, the tanks having been transported there by road. Dependent on the destination on the continent, on-move on the French side could be either by rail or road.

There are no current intentions to utilize the Tunnel for moving tanks but planning continues, in order that this could be a future option.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects to announce a decision on a replacement for the royal yacht Britannia; [5689]

(2) where the decommissioned royal yacht Britannia is to be located; [5691]

(3) if he will make a statement on his proposals for the decommissioning of the royal yacht Britannia; and when these will be implemented. [5690]

Mr. Soames: Britannia is scheduled to be decommissioned in the second half of 1997; her programme for next year, including decommissioning, is currently under consideration. The Government are considering Britannia's future once decommissioned, including a number of proposals for the future use of the vessel, most of which envisage a permanent mooring as a heritage attraction. The Government are examining the requirement for a replacement royal yacht, and will announce a decision in due course.

Royal Defence Medical School

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been made to him regarding the location of the royal defence medical school. [5567]

Mr. Soames: A number of representations have been received about the proposed transfer of the royal defence medical college from Millbank to HMS Dolphin.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to transfer the royal defence medical school to HMS Dolphin, Gosport. [5565]

Mr. Soames: The royal defence medical college will move from Millbank to HMS Dolphin at Gosport during 1997.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of the royal defence medical school; and if he will make a statement. [5566]

Mr. Soames: The royal defence medical college supervises the basic and higher professional training of all service medical officers, and all training for nurses and medical technicians. In order that the college may fulfil its wider role as the centre of excellence for military medicine, it is planned to relocate it at HMS Dolphin close to the tri-service hospital at Haslar.

The new health studies division of the college is already located at HMS Dolphin in temporary accommodation; it will expand and move into a purpose-built building next year. The remaining college facilities at Millbank, including postgraduate medical education, nurse, laboratory technician and operating department practitioner training, defence medical entomology and the library, will move to HMS Dolphin next year when accommodation becomes available.

Royal Army Medical Corps

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to move the RAMC headquarters mess from its present site; and if he will make a statement. [5581]

Mr. Soames: The future location of the RAMC mess is currently being studied. No decision has yet been made.

Convicted Service Men (Cyprus)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the case of the three British service men convicted in Cyprus of the manslaughter of a Danish tour guide. [5504]

Mr. Soames: The three British service men were tried and convicted in March this year by the Cypriot authorities for the abduction and manslaughter of Miss Jensen. The soldiers were sentenced to life imprisonment and subsequently discharged from the Army as a result of their conviction.

Air Force Crosses

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the criteria for the award of Air Force Crosses were changed; what were the previous criteria; and what are the new criteria. [6246]

Mr. Soames: Prior to 14 February 1994, the Air Force Cross was awarded to commissioned officers and warrant officers of the armed forces in recognition of acts of exceptional valour, courage or devotion to duty while flying, though not in active operations against the enemy. From that date, its award is reserved for acts of exceptional gallantry in the air not in the face of the enemy and, having subsumed the Air Force Medal, is available to all ranks. Devotion to duty while flying is now recognised by a meritorious award, either OBE or MBE, in the half-yearly honours lists.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6021]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 November 1996.]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Kuwait

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service men are currently on active service in Kuwait; what duties they are performing; and if he will make a statement. [4561]

Mr. Soames: There are no UK military personnel on active service as such in Kuwait. However, there are currently 13 UK military personnel serving as military observers with the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait observation mission, UNIKOM. The function of the military observers is to monitor the UN demilitarised zone along the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait in support of UN Security Council resolution 687. In addition to these, there are 57 loan personnel in the British military mission providing training to the Kuwaiti armed forces.

Employment (contracts)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of employment in the defence industry in the United Kingdom is supported by MOD contracts; and if he will make a statement. [4562]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Estimates of UK employment dependent on my Department's expenditure appear in table 1.10 of "UK Defence Statistics 1996", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Ex-service Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ex-service personnel are currently available for call-up in times of national emergency. [5713]

Mr. Soames: The strength of our regular reserves is shown in table 2.13 on page 43 of the 1996 edition of "United Kingdom Defence Statistics", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Female Service Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many female officers there were at 1 October 1991. [5710]

Mr. Soames: At 1 October 1991, there were 2,855 female officers in the armed forces.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 373, if he will provide a breakdown by rank of the female officers in the armed forces at 1 October. [5711]

Mr. Soames: The information is given below in terms of Army equivalent ranks.

There are no female officers above the rank of Brigadier.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5484]

Mr. Soames: My Department's policies which are most likely to impact on women are those related to its role as an employer of service and civilian personnel. Where appropriate, statistical and other forms of monitoring are continually undertaken to assess the effectiveness of such policies. This is part of a range of practical measures included within annual programmes of action, aimed at promoting equal opportunities for female civilian personnel, and women in the armed forces. In addition, my officials are currently preparing guidance for service and civilian policy staffs on appraising policy proposals for equal treatment based on guidance which was circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances.

Publicity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the outturn figure for his Department's expenditure on publicity and promotions in 1995–96. [6138]

Mr. Soames: A breakdown of expenditure on publicity for 1995–96 has been published in the MOD performance report for 1995–96—Cm 3448, page 32—a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The figures now also include expenditure on the recruitment of tri-service reservists.

Gulf War

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his French counterpart concerning the use of organophosphate pesticides during the Gulf war. [4324]

Mr. Soames: My officials are in contact with the French on a variety of Gulf health issues including the use of organophosphate pesticides.

Unexploded Bombs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide precise locations of the sites of unexploded world war two bombs in London. [4334]

Mr. Soames: The most precise information available to my Department on this subject was provided with my letter of 11 November to the hon. Member. A copy was also placed in the Library of the House.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 5 November, Official Report, columns 409–10, if he will make a statement of his Department's latest inquiries into Gulf war syndrome. [4480]

Mr. Soames: My Department continues to operate a medical assessment programme. As at 21 November, 875 people have been seen by the medical assessment programme. We continue to urge all Gulf veterans who believe they are ill as a result of their service to come forward for assessment. We shall shortly announce details of the research into the health problems of Gulf war veterans, recommended by the Medical Research Council.

SOCIAL SECURITY

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4959]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. While some staff in this Department work solely on matters connected with UK membership of the European Union and are identifiable as such, others are engaged in EU-related work only from time to time as part of their normal duties.

Compensation Recovery Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his timetable for the implementation of his amendments to the compensation recovery scheme; and if he will backdate these provisions. [5361]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply, that I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 7 November, Official Report, columns 681–82.

Mental Health Needs

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to undertake research into the take up of incapacity and other disability benefits by persons with mental health needs. [6053]

Mr. Burt: The Department has no plans for research specifically on the take-up of disability or incapacity benefits by persons with mental health needs, but we will be seeking to use data from the disability survey now in progress to estimate take-up of disability living allowance and attendance allowance.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to alter the payment of severe disablement allowance. [5708]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: We are proposing simplifications to the current arrangements which will cut down on the requirement for some claimants to undergo two separate medical tests, and better target resources on the severely disabled. These proposals are currently the subject of a Social Security Advisory Committee consultation exercise.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for constraining growth in his Department's expenditure, simplifying the benefit system and combating fraud; and if he will set out the financial effect of these changes. [6582]

Mr. Lilley: I intend to introduce a range of measures which will:

simplify the administration of the benefit system;

place a greater onus of responsibility on benefit claimants;

equalise the treatment of one and two parent families;

better target the housing benefit and council tax benefit schemes; and continue the drive to combat fraud.

Simplification and increased responsibility

I propose the following measures which will simplify the operation of the benefit system and encourage more responsibility on the part of claimants:

- a rationalisation and simplification of the rules governing backdated claims for benefit and reviews of awards. These changes will be phased in from April 1997;
- an increase in the waiting days which will apply to claims for jobseeker's allowance from three days to seven. This change will take effect from April 1999;
- a simplification of the rules governing claims to war pensions will be referred to the Central Advisory Committee on war pensions on 5 December;
- the establishment of a clearer boundary between the entitlement condition for disability living allowance and attendance allowance, providing that those over 65 should receive support through attendance allowance rather than disability living allowance. This change will take effect from October 1997.

These measures will produce savings of some £260 million a year once fully in place.

Lone parents and families

I propose to take further steps towards making the benefit system fairer to families by bringing the benefits available to lone parents further into line with those available to couples.

From April 1997, the structure of benefits for lone parents will be brought into line with that for couples. The lone parent premium will be combined with the family premium. One-parent benefit will be integrated with child benefit. Existing lone parents will continue to receive the current higher levels of benefit in future. But new lone parents will from April 1998 be paid the same rate of family premium and child benefits as couples.

Housing benefit

I also propose measures which will better target the housing and council tax benefit schemes.

In housing benefit I intend to restrict the amount of benefit that can be paid to private deregulated tenants to the general level of local rents for a suitably sized home. I also intend to limit benefit for single people under 60 living in the private deregulated sector to the average rent for a single, non self-contained room.

These measures will take effect from October 1997 and will save some £130 million per year in the long term.

Under both of these housing benefit changes local authorities will retain the discretion to pay up to the full value of eligible rents to prevent severe hardship, and the discretionary funds available to authorities will be adjusted to take account of the changes.

Council tax benefit

The proposed change to council tax benefit will restrict the amount of benefit payable to claimants living in more expensive properties.

I propose to restrict the maximum amount of council tax benefit payable to the level of a band E property. This change will take effect from April 1998 and will save around £15 million per year in the long term.

Combating fraud

As part of my major drive against fraud I am today announcing additional funding for a new spend-to-save anti-fraud and evasion package. This is in addition to the substantial sums we already spend on anti-fraud activity.

Over the next three years, I shall be investing an extra £470 million, in addition to an existing investment in fraud and security activities of some £900 million. Even excluding the impact of any prevention and deterrence the total investment is expected to save the taxpayer nearly £7 billion by 1999–2000[1]. However I expect the new powers I am taking in the Fraud Bill and the increase in anti-fraud work to produce substantial additional savings as fraud is prevented and deterred.

The new spend-to-save package will pay for: 1.3 million more visits to new benefit claimants than in 1996–97; an additional 300,000 a year checks on existing claimants; continuation of the "Spotlight on Benefit Cheats" campaigns; additional visiting activity in 1997–98 by local authorities, as well as a programme of benefit reviews of housing benefit; the extension of datamatching activities; increased activity on national insurance contribution compliance; and the setting up of the benefit-fraud inspectorate.

The Fraud Bill together with the new spend-to-save package will build upon an already successful counter fraud strategy. The Fraud Bill will provide fraud investigators with the tools they need to do their jobs, and the spend-to-save investment, when added to existing commitments, will mean for every £1 spent, an estimated £5 return in detected fraud. Both aspects of the anti-fraud drive underline the Government's determination to crack down on benefit cheats.

Note:

1. The savings are expected to be £1,900 million in 1997–98, £2,400 million in 1998–99 and £2,500 million in 1999–2000. These are estimates to the nearest £100 million. They include some £300 million, over the three years, in respect of additional revenue from the collection of National Insurance contributions. In addition to excluding any allowance for prevention and deterrence the method of estimating the savings has been changed to align them more closely with the public expenditure process. Previously the savings were accounted for in the year in which the fraud was detected but will now be spread over the average period during which the fraud would otherwise have continued. While this affects the timing of the savings, it does not affect the amount in the long term.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the regulations governing incapacity benefit. [6583]

Mr. Burt: I have laid before Parliament today a package of minor amendments to regulations concerning the application of the all work test for incapacity benefit which will improve the application of the test, drawing on operational experience since the introduction of the benefit in April 1995. The package will also amend the categories under which people who fail the test are treated as incapable of work in prescribed exceptional circumstances, following a recent decision by the High Court that the wording of the current provisions are unlawful.

National Insurance

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has yet completed his review of national insurance contributions for 1997–98. [6584]

Mr. Lilley: I have completed the annual review under section 141 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. My proposals will take effect from 6 April 1997. As I announced last year I intend to reduce the main rate of contributions for employers by 0.2 per cent. This will save employers as a whole over £500 million a year. The additional Treasury grant necessary to make up for the shortfall in income to the national insurance fund will be met from the landfill tax announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in last year's Budget. There will be no change to the standard rate of contributions for employees which will remain at 10 per cent.

Employers and employees

In line with the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions is to be raised to £62 a week. It is set at the level of the basic retirement pension rate for a single person from April 1997, rounded down to the nearest pound.

The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £465 a week which is slightly less than 7½ times the new basic pension rate as provided by the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act. These new earnings limits will replace the current ones of £61 and £455 respectively.

Employees whose earnings reach the lower earnings limit will continue to pay an initial contribution of 2 per cent. of that limit and standard rate contributions of 10 per cent. on that portion of their earnings which exceeds the lower but not the upper earnings limit.

For employers the three lower contribution rates remain unchanged at 3 per cent., 5 per cent. and 7 per cent., respectively. The earnings thresholds for these rates have tended to rise faster than inflation in recent years and will therefore also remain unchanged for the coming year.

Non-contracted-out employees and their employers

Neither employees nor employers will have to pay any contributions if earnings are less than £62 a week. Employees whose earnings do not exceed £455 (the former upper earnings limit) will pay 8p a week less in contributions than at present. This is because a further £1 of their weekly earnings will be subject to the 2 per cent. rate rather than 10 per cent. For employees with earnings above £455, the maximum possible increase will be 92p a week.

All employers will pay less where earnings are £210 a week or more. There will be no change for employers where earnings are between £62 and £210 a week.

Contracted-out employees and their employers

In March this year I announced the new levels for the rebate on class 1 national insurance contributions for people contracted-out of the state earnings-related pension scheme which will take effect from April 1997. The financial effect, combined with changes to the lower and upper earnings limits and the reduction in the main rate of contributions paid by employers, is as follows:

Employees with earnings between £62 and £95 will pay slightly less. Those with earnings between £95 and £455—the former upper earnings limit—will pay between one penny and 72p a week more. For those who earn more than £455 the maximum possible increase will be £1.56 a week.

Employers who operate a contracted-out salary-related scheme

Where earnings are less than £210 most employers will pay 3p week extra. This is due to the increase in the lower earnings limit which means that a further £1 of earnings is not subject to the contracted-out rebate. All employers will pay less where earnings are £210 a week or more.

Employers who operate a contracted-out money purchase scheme

A new system of age-related rebates applies from April 1997. A reduced flat rate rebate will be paid to employers, with a flat rate rebate to employees at the same rate as for COSRS, and a further age related payment made by the Contributions Agency direct to the pension scheme. All employers will pay more, ranging from a few pence where earnings just exceed the lower earnings limit to a maximum of £5.01 a week where earnings reach £455 (the old upper earnings limit), although their statutory requirement to make minimum payments to the pension scheme will be less at all relevant earnings levels.

Self-employed people

The flat rate class 2 contribution will be raised by 10p to £6.15 a week.

There will be no change to the rate of class 4 contributions which will remain at 6 per cent. The annual limits of profits between which class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £7,010 and £24,180 from £6,860 and £23,660 respectively.

Self-employed people who pay only class 2 contributions will pay an extra £5.20 a year in 1997–98.

For people with profits between £7,010 and £23,660—the former upper profits limit—class 4 contributions will be reduced by £9 a year assuming an unaltered level of profits. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the new upper profits limit the annual charge for class 4 contributions will be £22.20 higher.

class 3 (voluntary) contributions

The rate of class 3 contributions will be raised by 10p to £6.05 a week.

National health service allocation

The allocation to the national health service is unchanged at 1.05 per cent. from employees and 0.9 per cent. from employers.

Treasury grant

Although benefit expenditure from the national insurance fund will broadly match income—I need to ensure that the fund maintains a prudent working balance throughout the coming year and—in accordance with section 2(2) of the Social Security Act 1993, I propose to do so by means of a grant from the Treasury. I estimate that the grant required will be approximately £1.4 billion.

As usual, I shall be laying a draft order before Parliament together with a report by the Government Actuary describing the effects of my proposals.

Benefits

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the new rates of benefit proposed from April 1997. [6585]

Mr. Lilley: As usual, the annual uprating of social security benefits will take place in the first full week of the tax year—in 1997 this will be the week beginning 7 April.

I have reviewed social security benefits in accordance with section 150 of the 1992 Administration Act. My proposals, which are set out in the schedule, will increase most of the major benefits in line with inflation. The statutory instruments to implement them will be laid before both Houses for debate. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland proposes to introduce similar changes for Northern Ireland.

All national insurance benefits will be uprated in line with the annual increase in the retail prices index up to September which this year is 2.1 per cent.

Income-related benefits will generally rise by 2.6 per cent. in line with the ROSSI index—RPI less certain housing costs.

In line with my policy, announced last year, of moving towards an even-handed treatment of one and two-parent families the family premium (lone parent) paid with income-related benefits and child benefit (lone parent) will be unchanged in April 1997.

A schedule of the new benefit rates follows.

Some key points of the 1997 increases are:

Retirement pension

The standard rate of retirement pension will be increased by £1.30 per week for a single person to £62.45 and by £2.05 per week for couples to £99.80.

Incapacity benefit

The basic rate of long term incapacity benefit will rise by £1.30 a week to £62.45.

Income support

The level of income support for a pensioner couple aged over 80 will rise from £112.25 to £115.15.

Jobseeker's allowance

Jobseeker's allowance for a single person aged over 25 will rise from £47.90 a week to £49.15.

Child benefit

Child benefit will again be raised in line with prices. For the first or eldest eligible child the weekly rate will increase from £10.80 to £11.05 and for each subsequent child the rate will rise from £8.80 to £9.00.

War pensions

War pensions will, again be uprated fully in line with prices.

Earnings top-up

Benefit rates for the pilot earnings top-up scheme will be increased by the ROSSI index.

Non-dependent deductions

Increases will be made to deductions and the income thresholds, in income support, jobseeker's allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit in respect of non-dependent adults living in the claimant's home. Two new bands of deductions will be introduced in housing benefit and council tax benefit for those non-dependents with earnings over £200 per week. Similar bands will be introduced for income support and income-based jobseeker's allowance from April 1998.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases the Child Support Agency has dealt with, where the alleged absent parent disputes paternity, between January 1996 and October 1996.[4759]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 25 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency paternity disputes.

Between January 1996 and September 1996, the Agency has had 13,863 cases of disputed paternity. In the same period 11,566 cases were cleared. Clearances include cases where the Agency has accepted the AAP's representations; cases cleared through the Courts and cases resolved by DNA Testing.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much in cash terms has been paid out in compensation by the Child Support Agency between April 1993 and October 1996. [4758]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 25 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency compensatory payments.

Between April 1993 and September 1996 the Child Support Agency has made compensatory payments totalling £747,100.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many alleged absent parents used the Child Support Agency's subsidised DNA testing procedure between its introduction and 31 October 1996. [4760]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 25 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency DNA testing.

The Agency introduced its Discounted DNA Scheme in July 1995 to give alleged absent parents (AAPs) a means to resolve paternity disputes quickly and without the need to go to Court. The company contracted to carry out the DNA testing, Cellmark, also carry out DNA tests directed by the courts.

Between July 1995 and March 1996, 1,377 cases were referred for DNA testing. From April 1996 to the end of September 1996, 2,095 cases have been referred.

Cases take an average of three weeks for the results to be produced by Cellmark, once samples have been provided. Of the cases tested between July 1995 and the end of September 1996, 88% were adjudged to be the absent parent.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many individual payments of compensation the Child Support Agency has made to people falsely identified as fathers; and how much in cash terms the total compensation has amounted to between April 1993 and October 1996; [4756]

(2) how many false identifications of fathers the Child Support Agency made during (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) between January 1996 and October 1996. [4755]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 25 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about false identification of fathers and compensatory payments made by the Child Support Agency.

You have asked how many "false identifications" of fathers the Child Support Agency has made during the years 1993 to 1997. The Agency does not collate figures of how many fathers have been falsely identified, but has monitored the numbers of incorrectly issued Maintenance Enquiry Forms (MEFs) since 1994.

A MEF can be issued incorrectly where the parent with care (PWC) has given the Agency incorrect information or where the Agency has incorrectly traced the absent parent from incomplete information provided by the PWC. Where the Agency is at fault, compensation can be considered.

The table attached gives an annual breakdown (financial year-April to March) of the numbers of MEFs that have been incorrectly issued from April 1994 to September 1996 and, to put the numbers in perspective, shows the total number of MEFs issued for each year and expresses the incorrect issue as a percentage.

Since its launch in April 1993 to September 1996, the Agency has made 6 payments amounting to £600 in compensation relating to the incorrect issue of a maintenance enquiry form.

I hope this is helpful.

	Number of maintenance enquiry forms issued	Number of incorrect maintenance enquiry forms issued	Percentage of incorrect maintenance enquiry forms issued
1993–94	466,574	[1]n/a	[1]n/a
1994–95	276,583	115	0.042
1995–96	185,459	45	0.024
1996–97[2]	103,480	9	0.009

[1] Figures have only been collated since April 1994.

[2] Latest available figures are to 30 September 1996.

Highgate and Finsbury Park Benefits Agency Offices

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the average number of daily visitors to the Benefits Agency offices at (a) Highgate and (b) Finsbury Park for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) the current year to date; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of staff numbers to deal with them. [5165]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 25 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the average number of daily visitors to the Benefits Agency offices at (a) Highgate and (b) Finsbury Park for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) the current year to date; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of staff numbers to deal with them.

The average number of daily visitors is shown in the table below:

Branch office	1994 (January–December)	1995 (January–December)	1996 (January–October inclusive)
Highgate	210	271	269
Finsbury Park	290	261	282

Figures are provisional and subject to change. As with other Districts, Euston District, which includes the offices at Highgate and Finsbury Park, is required to review the services it provides to ensure that the most effective service is given within the resources available. Staff resources, forecast projections and actual workloads are monitored throughout the year and if a shortfall in staffing is identified extra staff are drafted in to maintain a good standard of service.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

HEALTH

Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the additional measures necessary to discourage unnecessary dental treatment; [5244]

(2) what measures are in place to monitor the work of NHS dentists and the adequacy and appropriateness of the treatments offered. [5241]

Mr. Malone: It is part of the Dental Practice Board's responsibility to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on aspects of quality in the general dental service in England and Wales, and to identify and act in circumstances where acceptable standards have not been met.

In line with the Department's response to the recommendation by the National Audit Office the Dental Practice Board is expanding the dental reference service.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have been struck off in each year since 1986 for undertaking unnecessary dental treatment. [5243]

Mr. Malone: This information is not collected centrally.

NHS Trust Admissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will collate centrally information on NHS trusts which restrict admissions for financial reasons; and if he will make a statement. [5143]

Mr. Horam: No.

Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Mexborough Montagu NHS Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria were used in the selection of the chairman of the Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Mexborough Montagu NHS trust; and if he will make a statement. [5141]

Mr. Horam: Candidates for the chairmanship of national health service trusts are assessed against the specific job description and the qualities described in the personal specification for NHS trust chairmen, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the revenue implications of raising the threshold for community care residential means tests by (a) £2,000, (b) £5,000 and (c) £10,000. [5440]

Mr. Burns: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

AIDS-HIV

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) United Kingdom and (b) Greater London residents were registered as suffering from (i) AIDS and (ii) HIV as at the latest available date. [5506]

Mr. Horam: The number of AIDS cases and HIV reports received by the end of September 1996 for the United Kingdom and for Greater London residents are shown in the table:

	(a) United Kingdom	(b) reported as Greater London residents
(i) AIDS cases	[1]13,056	[2]7,195
(ii) HIV reports	27,945	16,601

[1] 9,279 known to have died.

[2] 4,809 known to have died.

All the data are subject to reporting delay and under-reporting and thus can change.

The HIV reports underestimate the total number of infections as these reports represent only those individuals who perceive themselves to be at risk and request a confidential named HIV test. HIV/AIDs testing services are traditionally provided on an open access basis and the total number treated in Greater London exceeds those reported as resident in Greater London.

NHS Doctors

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what correlation he has made of statistics relating to the number of doctors needed in the NHS, relative to the number of places available in medical schools over the next 10 years. [5741]

Mr. Malone: The Government are advised by the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee on the balance between future supply and demand for doctors. We have accepted the MWSAC recommendations for an additional 500 medical students by the year 2000 and funds are being provided for this through the higher education funding councils.

North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had with the chairman of the North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS trust concerning the computer control and command system; and if he will make a statement. [5907]

Mr. Horam: In conjunction with the national health service executive, the chairman of North Yorkshire Ambulance Srvice national health service trust has instigated an independent review of a number of matters, including the computer control and communications system.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to enable local social services authorities to meet the costs of the adult asylum seekers whom they are supporting following the High Court judgment on 8 October making them liable to provide such support. [6586]

Mr. Dorrell: I intend to appeal against the judgment, as do the social services authorities who were party to the case.

In the meantime I intend, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary special grant report, to make funds available to meet the reasonable costs incurred by authorities supporting asylum seekers who show entitlement to such support under that judgment. My Department will discuss the detailed arrangements with local authorities. I will lay the special grant report when that has been done.

Bovine Tissue

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which medicinal products for injection or surgical implantation using materials derived from bovine brain or lymphoid tissue were licensed under the Medicines Acts (a) in April 1985, (b) in February 1989 and (c) in November 1996. [5665]

Mr. Malone: No medicinal products for injection or implantation derived from bovine brain were licensed in the United Kingdom in February 1989 or November 1996.

Surgical catgut and some heparin preparations derived from bovine intestine, which contains lymphoid tissue were licensed in February 1989.

All catgut and heparin licensed as at November 1996, and currently marketed in the UK, comply with the European Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products guideline on minimizing the risk of transmission of agents causing spongiform encephalopathies via medicinal products.

No data are available for April 1985.

Notes:

Definition: Catgut consists of strands of tissues prepared from the intestinal membranes of mammals, which when formed into cords, are used in surgery as an absorbable suture.

Definition: Heparin is a preparation containing the salt of a sulphated sugar derivative present in mammalian tissues, including gut lining. It has the characteristic property of delaying the clotting of freshly shed blood. It is used as an injection to prevent blood clots.

MRSA

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the percentage of hospital wards that have adequate isolation facilities for patients suffering from Methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus. [5778]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Secure Units

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places are available in secure units in mental hospitals in (a) the Walsall area, (b) Birmingham, (c) Staffordshire, (d) Warwickshire, (e) Sandwell, (f) Dudley and (g) Worcestershire; what is the current occupancy level; and how many vacancies currently exist. [5858]

Mr. Burns: All west midlands health authorities have access to a range of services from high secure facilities nationally through regional secure provision to more local, low secure and intensive care provision. Medium secure services are currently provided by the South Birmingham Mental Health NHS trust and the Foundation NHS trust in Staffordshire. These units provide 90 and 28 beds respectively. Occupancy levels and numbers of existing vacancies fluctuate regularly according to demand. For further information the hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Anne Hingley and Mr. Roy Trainor, chairmen of the two trusts.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of provision of accommodation in the secure units of mental hospitals. [5857]

Mr. Burns: This is a matter for individual health authorities who are responsible for commissioning both secure and non-secure services for mentally ill people in their area. The national health service executive regional offices recently undertook a review of management performance in purchasing comprehensive mental health services and the results were published in "A Review of Purchasing of Mental Health Services by Health Authorities in England (1996)", copies of which are available in the Library.

Ambulance Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to review the appointment of senior officers of the North Yorkshire ambulance trust criticised by the district auditor's report into financial management in the South East Wales ambulance trust; [6219]

(2) what arrangements he has made for ensuring that (a) ambulance trusts in England are made aware of district auditors' reports in Wales directly affecting senior appointments in England and (b) ambulance trusts in Wales are made aware of such reports in England; and if he will make a statement. [6220]

Mr. Horam: Staff appointments are a matter for national health service trusts. It is the responsibility for the trust to make the necessary inquiries about the employment history of candidates.

Electro-Magnetic Fields

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the established guidelines in relation to the protection of people from the known effects of electric and magnetic fields as recently evaluated by the National Radiological Protection Board. [6263]

Mr. Horam: The National Radiological Protection Board's "Documents of the NRPB—Board Statement on Restrictions on Human Exposure to Static and Time Varying Electromagnetic Fields and Radiation" volume 4 No.5, was published in 1993 and copies were placed in the Library.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the National Radiological Protection Board to report on the research projects into different aspects of the electro-magnetic field and their effects on human health; and if he will make a statement. [6264]

Mr. Horam: The National Radiological Protection Board will publish the report on research projects into electro-magnetic fields and human health following the completion of two substantial epidemiological studies of childhood cancer which are currently under way.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance he offers to hospital trusts who are facing financial problems in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [6265]

Mr. Malone: Hospital trusts receive all their income from contracts with health authorities, general practitioner fundholders and the private sector. They do not receive allocations from the Department of Health.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that there is no manipulation of the funds available to the legal aid scheme by solicitors operating within the scheme. [5272]

Mr. Streeter: Under the Legal Aid Act 1988, the Legal Aid Board is responsible for the administration of the legal aid scheme in England and Wales. All cases of suspected abuse of the scheme are investigated by the Legal Aid Board. Where appropriate, cases are subject to detailed examination by the board's investigation unit. To help in the early detection of irregularities, the Legal Aid Board has introduced a new green form and a new computer system. Consideration is being given to tightening up the green form scheme further by restricting the location where advice can be given to the solicitor's office.

Litter

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were fined under the Litter Act 1983 in 1995; and what proportion of these received the maximum fine. [5890]

Mr. Maclean: Under section 87 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which replaced section 1(3) of the Litter Act 1983 there were 677 offenders fined in 1995 for the offence of depositing litter. No offender received a fine of £2,500, the maximum for this level 4 offence. Five offenders each received the largest fine awarded in 1995 of £1,000.

Police (CS Spray)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police forces currently using (a) CS and (b) pepper sprays; and if he will make a statement. [6107]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from a recent survey conducted by the Association of Chief Police Officers that the following forces in England and Wales have issued, or have decided to issue, CS sprays to officers:

Avon and Somerset
Cambridgeshire
Cleveland
Cumbria
Derbyshire
Devon and Cornwall
Dorset
Durham
Dyfed-Powys
Gloucestershire
Greater Manchester
Gwent
Hampshire
Kent
Leicestershire
Metropolitan
North Wales
North Yorkshire
Northamptonshire
Staffordshire
Surrey
Warwickshire
Wiltshire
West Mercia
West Yorkshire.

I am not aware of any force which has issued, or has decided to issue, pepper sprays.

West Midlands Serious Crimes Squad

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information is collated by his Department in respect of people whose convictions have been quashed because of doubts over police evidence; [6189]

(2) if he will list the names and rank of members of the West Midlands serious crimes squad who gave evidence in the cases of prisoners whose convictions were subsequently overturned, together with the names of the persons they helped to convict; and if he will indicate what disciplinary action was taken against each officer together with the outcome of such actions; [6190]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 633, relating to convictions based on evidence supplied by the West Midlands serious crimes squad, for what reasons the information is not available. [6188]

Mr. Kirkhope: I will write to the hon. Member.

Irish Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Irish republican prisoners have now been transferred from Britain to the Republic of Ireland (i) directly and (ii) via Her Majesty's prisons in Northern Ireland; and how many applications (a) are still outstanding because of lack of response from the Republic of Ireland, (b) are awaiting determination by him and (c) he has refused. [5018]

Miss Widdecombe: Four prisoners have been transferred to the Republic from prisons in England and Wales. One prisoner has been transferred to the Republic from Northern Ireland, having previously been temporarily transferred there. Some 37 repatriation requests are currently under consideration by the Republic of Ireland and 40 are under consideration in England and Wales. One repatriation request has been refused.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allow Irish republican prisoners transferred for a limited period of time to remain in prison in Northern Ireland subject only to the good behaviour of the prisoner. [5019]

Miss Widdecombe: Prisoners temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland must continue to fulfil all the transfer criteria in order to be allowed to remain there for the maximum duration of any period of temporary transfer. At that point, it is open to prisoners to seek a further period of transfer. Such requests are considered in the light of all the relevant circumstances and against the transfer criteria.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for compassionate temporary release have been made by Irish republican prisoners transferred to Northern Ireland; how many have (a) been granted, (b) been refused and (c) are subject to further consideration by him; and if the same criteria for temporary release apply to prisoners convicted in Northern Ireland and England and Wales. [5020]

Miss Widdecombe: Prison Service records show that 10 applications for compassionate temporary release have been received from prisoners who are nationals of the Irish Republic and who are temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland. Of these, three have been granted and seven refused. None are currently being considered by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Prisoners convicted in England and Wales and temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland are considered for temporary release by the Home Secretary with reference to the rules which apply in England and Wales. Prisoners convicted in, or permanently transferred to, Northern Ireland are considered for temporary release by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under the rules which apply in that jurisdiction.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to apply the same criteria for Christmas and summer home leave for Irish republican prisoners transferred to Northern Ireland from England as apply to prisoners convicted in Northern Ireland. [5021]

Miss Widdecombe: No. It would not be right for prisoners temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland and who remain under the jurisdiction of the Home Secretary to be treated differently from other prisoners convicted and held in England and Wales.

Permanently transferred prisoners are subject to the home leave arrangements applying to prisoners convicted and held in Northern Ireland.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his Department's proposals for the future funding of projects currently supported under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966. [6078]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 13 November 1996, Official Report, column 242.

Police Service

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the key objectives and associated performance indicators will be for the police service in 1997–98. [6907]

Mr. Howard: The key objectives for the police service in 1997–98 will be:

(1) To maintain and if possible increase the number of detections for violent crimes;

(2) To increase the number of detections for burglaries of people's homes;

(3) To target and prevent crimes which are a particular local problem, including drug-related criminality, in partnership with the public and local agencies;

(4) To provide high visibility policing so as to reassure the public;

(5) To respond promptly to emergency calls from the public.

The key performance indicators associated with the key objectives are:

(1) The number of violent crimes detected per 100 officers;

(2) The number of burglaries of dwellings detected per 100 officers;

(3) On crime prevention, work remains in hand to develop a performance indicator aimed at reducing repeat victimisation. In 1996–97, the police service was asked to develop strategies to reduce repeat victimisation; in 1997–98 we would look to those forces that have fully developed strategies to implement them and those that are still in the process of developing strategies to ensure that they are ready to be implemented in 1998–99.

On drug-related criminality, work continues to develop a high level PI. Forces and police authorities will continue with the recommendations within the White Paper "Tackling Drugs Together" and progress will be assessed by the measurement of the number of arrests and disposals of offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 per 1,000 population.

(4) Public satisfaction with levels of foot and mobile patrols;

(5) (i) the percentage of 999 calls answered within the local target time;

(ii) the percentage of responses within the local target time to incidents requiring immediate response.

The key objectives for 1997–98 will be the same as those for 1996–97 in order to provide continuity of purpose. The performance indicators are also very largely the same, except for a slight modification to reflect progress made on strategies to reduce repeat victimisation.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new appointments have been made to the Police Complaints Authority. [6908]

Mr. Howard: Mrs. Margaret Scorer and Ms Josephine Dobry have accepted my invitation to serve as members of the Police Complaints Authority. Mrs. Scorer previously served with Her Majesty's magistrates courts inspectorate; Ms Dobry has been in pupilage at the Bar and previously worked as a radio journalist and producer. Mrs. Scorer and Ms Dobry will serve for three years from 21 October and 4 November 1996 respectively.

Police Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the (a) allocations of police grant for individual police authorities in 1997–98 and (b) allocations of the next instalment of funding for 5,000 extra officers; and if he will make a statement on the impact of these allocations on the overall funding of police authorities in that year. [6909]

Mr. Howard: I have today put a copy of my proposals for the allocation of police grant for 1997–98 in the Library. I intend to implement these proposals subject to consideration of any representations I receive about them.

The police service has indicated its support in principle for the continued distribution of police grant in accordance with a needs-based formula, and I am therefore proposing to continue to allocate the greater part of police grant according to the police funding formula.

I am, however, proposing several changes to the formula to reflect the latest data now available, and in response to the representation I have received. The principle changes I propose are:

to adjust the proportion of funding allocated on the basis of each force's expected work load in each of the five key areas of police activity; to introduce a further component of the formula under which funding for patrol work will be allocated; to reduce from 40 per cent. to 30 per cent. the share of funding allocated on the basis of forces' past establishments; to increase from 12.3 per cent. to 12.9 per cent. the proportion of funding allocated on the basis of forces' pensions commitments.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced last year funding for 5,000 extra police officers over the three-year period beginning 1 April 1996. An additional £40 million of police grant has been made available in 1997–98, which is sufficient to enable a further 2,000 officers to be recruited. This is on top of the extra £20 million provided this year. I am proposing to allocate the £40 million according to the daytime and resident populations of each police force area.

I am also concerned to ensure that public confidence in policing is maintained. In particular, I consider it important for public confidence that police authorities should be seen as able to provide a similar level of service as in 1996–97. I am therefore propose to apply additional rules to ensure that every police authority, not including the receiver for the metropolitan police district or the common council of the City of London, can receive at a least 2 per cent. more funding in 1997–98, and is able to budget at a level 3.2 per cent. above its budget requirement for 1996–97. This would enable them to meet increases in pay and other costs. This does not include their share of the £40 million which has been made available for additional officers. The Metropolitan police will be able to increase spending by 3.4 per cent. above its budget requirement in 1996–97. This includes its share of extra funding for additional officers in 1997–98.

Other police funding proposals within the local government finance system are being announced today by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales. These proposals and mine would increase the total spending power of police authorities in England and Wales by 3.7 per cent. or £247 million over 1996–97.

The table shows by police authority the effect of my approvals for 1997–98. It also shows the allocations approved by Parliament for 1996–97.

Forensic Laboratories (Contamination)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the Caddy report on incidences of contamination at Government forensic laboratories; and what estimate he has made of the number of cases affected. [5606]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 26 November 1996]: Professor Caddy's report into the contamination of the centrifuge at the forensic explosive laboratory with RDX, a component of semtex, will be published shortly. The legal representatives of 14 people convicted of criminal offences have been advised that their cases were to be reviewedaspartofProfessorCaddy'sinquiry.

DEFENCE

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4541]

Mr. Soames: My Department has in place a committee and management structure to ensure that environmental issues are managed effectively and that environmental concerns are taken into account in policy decisions at all levels.

My Department has carried out a number of investigations on environmental issues such as hazardous materials, ozone-depleting substances, and waste management, some of which are outlined in successive statements on defence estimates.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many separate computer programmes his Department operates; [5518]

(2) how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5519]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information concerning the number of lines of computer code contained in my Department's computer systems and how many computer programmes are operated is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Airfields (Yorkshire)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of MOD airfields in Yorkshire. [5727]

Mr. Soames: There are eight MOD airfields in Yorkshire. These are RAF Catterick, RAF Church Fenton, RAF Topcliffe, RAF Dishforth, RAF Elvington, RAF Leeming, RAF Linton on Ouse and RAF Finningley. The airfields at Finningley and Elvington are currently in disposal.

Helicopter Flying School

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 521, on the defence helicopter flying school, what arrangements have been made for industrial participation in respect of the purchase of helicopters for this school. [6018]

Mr. Soames: The suppliers of the AS350 and of the Bell 412 for the defence helicopter flying school have both committed to 100 per cent. industrial participation.

Hawk Aircraft (Training)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are made available by his Department for training on Hawk aircraft in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England. [5913]

Mr. Soames: Facilities for training on Hawk aircraft are centred at RAF Valley in north Wales. In addition to the facilities based at the station and its relief landing ground at RAF Mona, the students make use of United Kingdom airspace and may deploy to suitable airfields throughout England, Scotland and Wales. The students also use the weapons range at RAF Pembrey in south Wales.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of cadets in the Sea Cadets in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995; and what is the current number. [6240]

Bosnia

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the United Kingdom has for a contribution to a successor to the implementation force; and if he will make a statement. [6775]

Mr. Portillo: The international community is still developing its political strategy for Bosnia in 1997 and it remains too early to make any final decisions, but it seems increasingly likely that a military presence will be required to support the continuing civilian effort.

The Government have therefore decided that, in principle, the UK is prepared to make a contribution of some 5,000 ground troops to such a force, subject to the outcome of the London conference, to a satisfactory military plan being developed by NATO and to appropriate contributions from our major allies.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Magna Steel Project

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what representations she has received in connection with the Magna Steel heritage project in Templeborough, Rotherham; [3914]

(2) what representations she has received about the Magna Steel heritage project in Templeborough, Rotherham. [4843]

Mr. Sproat: I have received no such representations.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many separate computer programmes her Department operates. [5513]

Mr. Sproat: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer programme. Assuming a programme is a complete application, the Department of National Heritage operates 96 separate computer programmes.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of her Department's policies on women. [5492]

Mr. Sproat: In July of this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differently on women and men, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. My permanent secretary wrote to all senior officials in my Department in July about policy appraisal and the need for the Department and its sponsored bodies to reflect the guidance in future. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to monitor the effect of this guidance.

The recent Government report "One year On" outlines action taken by the Government to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many lines of computer code there are in her Department's computer systems. [5512]

Mr. Sproat: The Department uses a number of proprietary software packages and, for these, information on the number of programmes or lines of source code is known only to the supplier. An inventory is being carried out of that bespoke software which is likely still to be in use in 2000.

Amsterdam Wreck

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the most recent occasion on which her Department discussed the wreck of the Amsterdam with the Dutch Government; what assurances she was then given that the Dutch recognise their responsibility for the protection of the wreck and intend to take appropriate action to that end; and if she will make a statement. [6300]

Mr. Sproat: An official from the Department of National Heritage met an official from the Dutch embassy on 16 October to discuss the Amsterdam. The matter has also been discussed more recently on the telephone. The Amsterdam is the property of the Dutch Government and, therefore, responsibility for decisions about the future of the site rests primarily with them. The Dutch Government are currently considering the most appropriate course of action for the site.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost to her Department of (a) the ceremony and (b) the reception for the switching on of the new lighting in Trafalgar square in 1995; and on how many occasions her officials and their families received hospitality from the sponsors of the new lighting. [6260]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 26 November 1996]: The cost to the Department was £13,463 for the ceremony and £6,839 for the reception which marked the switching on of the new Trafalgar square lighting scheme by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in November 1995. A departmental official had one working lunch with the sponsor beforehand, in order to discuss the project.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress her Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year she expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4988]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The Department of National Heritage has this month introduced a new accounting system which will enable the concurrent production of cash and accruals based information. This new system will give the Department the ability to continue to produce the existing cash information required by Treasury, while at the same time develop the commercial style accounts required from 1998–99. The Department continues to discuss with Treasury the development of appropriate accounting policies, output and performance measures for the new resource accounts, as well as discuss how best to implement a resource based public expenditure survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) her Department and (2) executive agencies of her Department for each year since 1992. [5423]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The numbers of full-time and part-time posts within the Department of National Heritage since 1992 are shown in the table:

Department of National Heritage

	Permanent	Casuals		Fixed term
Year	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time	Appointees

A distinction between temporary and casual posts cannot be made. The Royal Parks, which includes the Royal Parks constabulary, is unable to provide details of staff in post figures for 1992–93 because it did not become an agency until 1993.

ENVIRONMENT

Private Lettings Agencies

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will commission research into the problems caused by the operation of private lettings agencies; [5876]

(2) what plans he has to set up a system whereby private lettings agencies are required to register with local authorities; [5874]

(3) what plans he has to introduce measures to regulate the operation of private lettings agencies. [5875]

Mr. Clappison: We have no plans to regulate the operation of private letting agencies or to require them to register with local authorities. However, we are keen to encourage self-regulation. My right hon. Friend has now approved the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors' code of practice for management of residential property, to be published next March 1997. This is aimed primarily at agents who offer a full management service but also contains much that lettings-only agents can draw on.

Research for the Department in 1995 suggests that, where an agent was used, 88 per cent. of landlords expressed themselves to be very or fairly satisfied with the service provided. We have no plans to commission further research.

Camberwell Jobcentre

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals there are to serve a Crown notice of improvement on the Employment Service, requiring a suitable and sufficient assessment of risks of violence to staff to be carried out at the Camberwell jobcentre; and if he will make a statement. [5888]

Sir Paul Beresford: Enforcement is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive. I am informed that a notice of intention to serve an improvement notice was given to the Employment Service on 16 September 1996, in accordance with HSE procedures.

The response to the notice of intention is still under discussion with the Employment Service and appointed safety representatives.

Planning Appeals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans (a) to complete consultation and (b) to issue a final circular in respect of the role of public inquiries and informal hearings in determining planning appeals; and he will make a statement. [5877]

Sir Paul Beresford: Consultation on the draft circular on planning appeal procedures was completed at the end of April and the final document was published as DOE circular 15/96 on 20 September.

Household Drains (Repairs)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the advantages of changing the rules which make householders responsible for repair of drains up to the junction with the main drain. [6322]

Mr. Clappison: This issue was addressed in a review of water and sewerage law in 1986. The view was taken that, if the responsibility for private drains and sewers was transferred to sewerage undertakers, the cost of maintaining and repairing them could be very high and this could have a significant effect on the charges which have to be met by sewerage undertakers' customers generally. This was not considered to be equitable.

Green Ministers

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often the Green Ministers in each Whitehall Department have met collectively in each year. [6321]

Mr. Clappison: Since their inception in 1992, Green Ministers have met once in 1992, once in 1993, twice in 1994, once in 1995 and twice in 1996.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis of his calculations of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1997–98. [6552]

Mr. Curry: The distributable amount of non-domestic rates in England for 1997–98 will be £12,027 million. This is based on a non-domestic rate multiplier of 0.458 and includes an allowance of £400 million for an Exchequer payment to the non-domestic rates pool, to compensate for the shortfall which would otherwise occur as a result of regulations under section 58 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

The calculation for 1997–98, and the prior-year figures on which this is based, are set out in the table:

Notes:

1. Item 1: The gross calculated rate yield represents the total value of non-domestic hereditaments on local rating lists times the multiplier. For the years to 1995–96 the yield is the amount recorded in the post-end year (NNDR3) returns. For 1996–97 it is the amount underlying authorities' provisional contributions to the non-domestic rating pool including the prescribed amount for Enterprise Zones.

2. Item 1(i)(a): The Transactional decrease adjustment includes the estimated amount of rates that will not be recouped locally due to the revised transitional arrangements under the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Acts 1992, 1993 and 1994.

3. Item 1(i)(b): The empty property relief adjustments include avoids and partially occupied hereditaments. Figures up to 1996–97 are as reported by authorities. The 1997–98 figure includes an allowance for the increase in the gross rates yield.

4. Item 1(i)(c): Charitable rate relief. As for empty property relief.

5. Item 1(i)(d): Discretionary relief granted to charities, non-profit making organisations and for other reasons. As for charitable rate relief.

6. Item 1(ii)(a) and (b): The allowances for the costs and losses incurred by local authorities in collecting non-domestic rates from ratepayers, including the latest estimates of additional billing and software costs arising from the Non-Domestic Rating Acts.

7. Item 1(ii)(c): City Offset—a preliminary estimate for 1997–98 (£6.5 million) of the amount which the City of London will not be required to pay into the non-domestic rating pool on account of the local rate in the City. It is the amount which will be retained by the authority to meet its own expenditure.

8. Item 1(iii)(a): Net adjustment in respect of appeals and other amendments to the rating list affecting liability for previous years rates settled in that year.

9. Item 1(iii)(b): The revisions to contributions line applies only to estimated outturn revisions to the provisional contributions for 1996–97. For earlier years all figures are already based upon the outturn contributions.

10. Item 2: The rateable value of non-domestic hereditaments on the central rating list times the multiplier, and adjusted for appeals and other changes in respect of previous year. The 1997–98 figure is calculated as the estimated Rateable Value times the multiplier, less the effect of the transitional arrangements.

11. Item 3: The 1997–98 figure for Crown properties includes an allowance for the effect of transition.

12. Item 4: The contribution from central Government to offset the amount of the Secretary of State's estimate of income forgone arising from the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Acts 1992, 1993 and 1994.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many lines of computer code there are in her Department's computer systems. [5345]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department uses a number of proprietary software packages and, for these, information on the number of programmes or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

The Department is carrying out an inventory of that bespoke and proprietary software which is likely still to be in use in the year 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many separate computer programmes her Department operates. [5354]

Mr. Squire: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a program; however, the Department is at present responsible for 106 major software systems.

Unemployment-related Benefit Claims

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated annual administrative cost, including staff time, for processing (a) new unemployment-related benefit claims and (b) terminating unemployment-related benefit claims. [5463]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 27 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the estimated annual administrative cost for processing new claims and terminating claims for unemployment benefit. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It may be helpful if I explain that advisers in our Jobcentres take new claims to unemployment benefits in order to check jobseeker's eligibility for benefit, to ensure that they are available and actively seeking employment and to offer help and advice in their search for suitable employment. Claims may be terminated for a variety of reasons. For example, the jobseeker may have found work or started to claim another benefit.

It is important to mention that these processes form only a part of the total process for administering unemployment related benefits claims. Unfortunately the costs of these particular elements of the process are not available because we do not capture expenditure for individual functions.

However, the latest available information for the cost of administering unemployment benefit as published in the Departmental Report for 1995–96 was £577 million. In 1995–96 the planned unit costs for making a claim to benefit as part of the Annual Performance Agreement was £29.14

With the introduction of Jobseeker's Allowance the Employment Service continues to be involved in the public interface of the new claims process through the New Jobseeker Interview. The Benefits Agency are responsible for determining and processing benefit payments. They also have responsibility for claim termination.

I hope this is helpful.

Teachers' Pensions

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what procedures are in place to ensure that fraudulent claims are not made after the death of a person receiving a teacher's pension. [5968]

Mrs. Gillan: Notification of the death of a teacher pensioner can come from a variety of sources. Generally, it comes from the family, but the registrars of births, marriages and deaths also notify public sector pension scheme administrators of the death of one of their members.

This process is backed up by issuing periodic declarations to pensioners to ensure continued entitlement to benefits. The declarations are issues at age 75, then at five—yearly intervals until age 90 when they are issued annually. For those living abroad, regular declarations are required from all pensioners.

Each declaration is required to be signed by the pensioner or declarant and witnessed by a qualified person. the returned declarations are examined on receipt to check signatures and ensure they have been correctly completed and witnessed.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many tenders were received when the Teachers Pensions Agency was market-tested. [5967]

Mrs. Gillan: Four tenders were received for the administration of the teachers superannuation scheme.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations she undertook with organisations representing those receiving teachers' pensions, before market testing for those agencies involved in the administration of teachers' pensions. [5969]

Mrs. Gillan: Management consultants were commissioned to consider the feasibility of letting a contract to the private sector for the administration of teachers' pensions. Their findings were published in January 1995, and formed the basis of an extensive consultation exercise during which we sought the views of a wide audience, including representatives of members of the scheme, their employers and other interested parties. The consultation period ended in April 1995.

Parental Choice

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the number of appeals made by parents on the grounds of non-admission of their child to the school of their choice, in each local education authority, in the latest year for which figures are available. [5899]

Mr. Forth: The information for the academic year 1994–95 is shown in the following table.

Former Incapacity Benefit Claimants

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what monitoring of former invalidity benefit claimants and ex-incapacity benefit claimants who have signed on as unemployed is being undertaken (a) by her Department and (b) on behalf of the Department of Social Security. [6192]

Mr. Forth: The Employment Service records the number of people leaving incapacity benefits due to the all work test who subsequently inquire at jobcentres. Records cover the numbers: who claim unemployment benefits during each month; who start a job with Employment Service help; who take a place on an Employment Service programme or training for work; who Employment Service staff know leave unemployment to claim another benefit, including family credit; who leave unemployment for any other reason known to the Employment Service; and those whose claim is referred to an adjudication officer, with the outcome of that adjudication. The Employment Service also counts the number who are unemployed on one particular day each month and the number each month who inquire about unemployment benefits but do not pursue a claim. No distinction is made in any of these records between former invalidity benefit and ex-incapacity benefit claimants. Summaries of this information at national level are provided to the Department of Social Security and the Benefits Agency each month. The following table sets out the latest information.

ES record of incapacity benefit leavers[1]

Flow figures (since April 1995)	Cumulative since April 1995
Number of IB leavers claiming at ES jobcentres	72,564
Number starting a job[2]:

PWDs on mainstream programmes	989
PWDs on specialist provision	1,359
Adjudication Decisions
Allowed	28
Disallowed	248
Number starting on other benefits (includes family credit)	2,418
Number signing off for other reasons as a result of ES adviser action	1,778
Number enquiring but not pursuing a claim	9,682
Stock information
ES report that on 13 September there were 25,616 IB leavers claiming unemployment benefits (compared with 27,223 on 9 August[3])

[1] Incapacity Benefit Leavers are defined as those disallowed IB by the All Work Test, or for declining to take the AWT, or failing to complete the preliminary questionnaire.

[2] Figures shown are where ES advisers were involved in the placing. They do not include any who found work themselves, who often do not inform ES, or those who found work from Jobcentres vacancies without going through an ES adviser.

[3] The figure for the stock in any month is lower than the cumulative inflow since April 1995 because, in common with all unemployed people, some IB leavers leave unemployment each month. This table shows the destinations of those leaving where it is known to the Employment Service. Again as is the case with all unemployed people many leave unemployment for a job or other destination without informing the Employment Service.

Transsexuals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what (a) legislative changes and (b) other measures she plans to eradicate discrimination against transsexuals in the workplace following the European Court of Justice ruling in the case of P v. S and Cornwall county council. [6141]

Mrs. Gillan: The Government are still considering whether it is necessary to make any changes to UK legislation. Meanwhile the industrial tribunals have interpreted one or two cases under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 consistently with the ruling.

School Budgets (Deficits)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those schools which have a 5 per cent. or more deficit on their school budget for 1996–97. [6385]

Mr. Robin Squire: In respect of schools maintained by local education authorities, the Department does not collect the information requested. The Funding Agency for Schools has responsibility for the financial monitoring of grant-maintained schools and is able to collate the information sought in respect of GM schools for 1996–97. I have written to Sir Christopher Benson, asking him to reply to this question.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list, with dates, those meetings she has personally had with representatives of individual schools from 1 October to 22 November 1996. [6386]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The answer is as follows:

30 October 1996: Cardinal Vaughan Memorial GM School.

12 November 1996: Haywood High School, Hereford.

22 November 1996: Meeting with Staffordshire Headteachers.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list, with dates, those meetings she has personally had with representatives of local education authorities from 1 October to 22 November 1996. [6387]

Mrs. Shephard: I have not had meetings with representatives of local education authorities from 1 October to 22 November 1996. My ministerial colleagues regularly meet delegations from LEAs.

Undergraduate Students (Financial Support)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will give details of the support that will be available to students through mandatory awards and student loans in the academic year 1997–98. [6718]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend announced on 26 November, Official Report, columns 174–79, that the total level of support available to students through the main rates of grant and loan together in 1997–98 will be 2.5 per cent. higher than for 1996–97, in line with forecast price increases. I am placing a memorandum in the Library giving full details of the new grant and fee rates for 1997–98. These rates will be incorporated in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations and the Education (Student Loans) Regulations to be laid before Parliament in due course.

WALES

Disabled People

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the percentage of unemployed people registered disabled as a proportion of the total number of unemployed people in each Employment Service district in Wales. [5131]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of registered disability in Blaenau Gwent. [5917]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: At 31 March 1996, there were 4,553 people on the register of persons with a physical or sensory disability in Blaenau Gwent and 368 on the register of persons with learning disabilities.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the adequacy of provision of extra home heating, special food, appropriate transport, special medical care and additional clothing to those with a registered disability in Wales. [6072]

Mr. Evans: My right hon. Friend and I have made no such assessment. Local authorities are responsible for assessing the community care and public transport needs of their local communities, including people with registered disabilities, and for arranging to meet those needs. Health authorities, NHS trusts and GPs are responsible for health care. Benefits to support people with disabilities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Nurses (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurses were employed in Clwyd in (a) 1992 and (b) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [5555]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the following table.

[1] Staff employed by the former Clwyd Health Authority.
[2] Staff employed by the former Clwyd Health Authority and by NHS Trusts which are situated within the geographical boundaries of the former Authority.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5479]

Mr. Hague: In July this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differently on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. This advice is incorporated in my Department's rules and procedures for handling departmental business.

The recent Government report "One Year On"outlines the action taken by Government to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Day Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average number of day care hours available to day care recipients. [5551]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many day care centres there are in (a) Wales and (b) Flintshire. [5553]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is given in the following table:

Wales	254	118

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Clwyd received day care in 1995–96. [5550]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 1,628 first attendances of patients using NHS day care facilities in Clwyd during 1995–96. Information on the numbers attending local authority day care centres is not available centrally.

Administrative Health Staff

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many administrative health staff there were in Clwyd in (a) 1992 and (b) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [5556]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the following table.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: We are not aware that any poultry meat inspection posts have been created within Welsh local authorities to enforce these regulations. Poultry meat inspectors are appointed by Ministers to assist official veterinary surgeons in carrying out functions specified in the regulations relating to the supervision of licensed premises. Enforcement responsibility in such premises rests with the Meat Hygiene Service and not local authorities.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prosecutions there were for breaches of the Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995. [5502]

Mr. Evans: There have been no prosecutions to date for offences under the Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has that the services for those with learning disability living within the community have increased. [6061]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Progress made under the mental handicap strategy is outlined in the revised Welsh mental handicap strategy guidance issued in 1994, copies of which are in the House Library. The following table shows progress in the provision of services during the first 10 years of the strategy.

	1983	1988	1993
Adults living in their own home in the community	166	614	1,427
Families receiving support in their own homes	41	1,858	4,691
Individuals with especially difficult behaviour receiving support	16	64	610
Individuals receiving new patterns of daytime care	0	193	3,665

Figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Poverty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest assessment of the causes of changes in the level of poverty in Wales since 1979; and what steps he has taken to alleviate it. [5987]

Mr. Hague: Recent work from the Institute for Fiscal Studies and Essex university has shown that the poor are not a constant group and that people tend to move into and out of poverty over time. Recent Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development research strongly suggests that people's earnings mobility, the extent to which, at different stages in their careers, people move into higher or lower income bands is very high; over a five-year period, about half of all workers move into higher or lower brackets.

The single main cause of poverty is not having a job. Unemployment in Wales is falling fast—for the past six months, at an average of 1,000 a month.

Homelessness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of homelessness or insecure housing upon people's health in Wales. [5919]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None, but I have recently issued guidance to local authorities to take into account factors such as a property's physical condition and security of tenure when considering applications from homeless people.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are deemed to be homeless at the latest possible date and by Welsh county or predecessor authorities; and if he will make a statement. [6282]

Mr. Evans: Information on the number of people in households accepted by local authorities as homeless is provided in the following table.

Health Data

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the public availability of the Welsh public health common data set. [6066]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh public health common data set is distributed by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, on an annual basis, to the chief medical officer for Wales, the public health departments of the five health authorities, Health Promotion Wales, and the academic departments within the division of public health of the university of Wales college of medicine.

The majority of the data items comprise aggregated data taken from Office for National Statistics publications—that is, publicly available information. The contents of the data set are a major source of information for the chief medical officer's annual report and also inform those of the directors of public health in Wales, most of which include statistical tables of all or part of the data. In addition to these public documents, all departments of public health in Wales will respond to data inquiries from the public by providing appropriate information from the data set.

Carers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources he has made available to support carers who have accepted a loss of paid employment to look after a disabled relative. [5918]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Carers may apply for the full range of social security benefits. Invalid care allowance is specifically designed for carers who have given up the opportunity of full-time work to provide regular and substantial care. Benefit arrangements are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

General Practitioner Fundholding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with the chairmen of the health authorities concerning the risk to authority budgets arising from GP fundholders' overspends (a) generally and (b) in respect of drug prescription expenditure. [5909]

Mr. Hague: My Department has regular meetings with health authority officials about fundholding matters, including risk management and drug prescription expenditure.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children benefited from the assisted places scheme in Wales in 1995; what was the amount of money involved (a) in total and (b) per school; and if he will make a statement. [6289]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Seven hundred and twenty-six children benefited from the assisted places scheme in Wales in the academic year 1995–96, at an estimated total cost of £2,992,972. Estimated costs, broken down by school, are as follows:

School	Cost £
Monmouth Boys	473,000
Monmouth Girls	226,575
Howell's Cardiff	456,429
Christ College	448,309
Llandovery College	325,298
Howell's, Denbigh	392,422
Rydal School	346,393
Penrhos College	324,546
Total	2,992,972

Flintshire (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage was allowed for sparsity in his first allocations of money to the county of Flintshire. [6283]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Central Government support for local authority revenue expenditure is calculated by reference to standard spending assessments. The formula includes indicators to reflect the additional needs associated with sparsity and these account for 2 per cent. of Flintshire's total assessments for 1996–97.

Support for capital expenditure is provided by way of credit approvals. The distribution of basic credit approvals is made according to a formula that includes an element for high levels of sparsity, but this did not contribute to Flintshire's allocation for 1996–97.

Police

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review the area cost adjustment for police authorities, indicating their net effect on (a) the income and (b) the number of uniformed officers in the Welsh police authorities. [5768]

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced in the House today that the Government have decided not to implement the recommendations of the review of the area cost adjustment for 1997–98. In coming to this decision, he took account of the concerns of local government on aspects of the report's findings.

My right hon. Friend proposes to consult local government on what further work needs to be undertaken to address concerns.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for police authority revenue spending in 1997–98. [6887]

Mr. Hague: I propose to make £340.6 million available from total standard spending in Wales to fund police services in 1997–98. This sum comprises £171 million in cash-limited police grant to be paid by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and £169.6 million in standard spending assessments. It represents an overall increase of £8.9 million, or 2.7 per cent. on 1996–97. The sums for each police authority are set out in the following table:

£ million

	Police grant	Standard spending assessment	Total
Dyfed-Powys	25.2	24.6	49.8
Gwent	32.4	32.1	64.5
North Wales	35.7	35.5	71.2
South Wales	77.7	77.4	155.1

In addition, Dyfed-Powys police authority will receive £0.2 million in reduction grant to damp the effect on council taxpayers in its area of a reduction of over 2 per cent. in its police grant and SSA allocations resulting from methodology changes in the police funding formula. The reduction grant will supplement the authority's revenue support grant and redistributed non-domestic rate entitlement in support of its spending. It does not increase the authority's spending power.

My Department is today writing to each of the police authorities in Wales to consult them on their provisional standard spending assessment for 1997–98. The figures may alter slightly if the balance of the police funding formula as between English and Welsh police authorities changes as a result of consultation.

It is essential that police authorities budget wisely and do not impose an unreasonable burden on council taxpayers. I therefore propose provisional capping principles to inform their budget decisions. Police authorities would not be capped if their budget requirements for 1997–98 were:

less than 12.5 per cent. above the sum of the authority's standard spending assessment and police grant; and did not exceed their 1996–97 budget by more than the greater of the sum of the increases in their standard spending assessment and police grant or 3.2 per cent. excluding the sum of £3.2 million which the Home Secretary is providing through police grant for additional police officers.

I will make my final decisions on capping principles in the light of budgets set by police authorities.

I am still considering my capping proposals for local authorities in Wales. I propose to announce provisional capping principles and standard spending assessments for these authorities in the week commencing 9 December.

Copies of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Incomes and Mortality

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessments have been undertaken by his Department on the relationship between poverty and premature death in Wales. [5951]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My Department has not made any specific assessment on this relationship. There is already a considerable body of scientific evidence to suggest an association between socio-economic classification and mortality, although it is not clear whether it is low income or other associated factors such as smoking, poor housing or poor diet which are more important.

Health authorities are responsible for the health of the populations of their respective areas.

Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) cases of and (b) deaths from the malignant non-Hodgkin's lymphoma have been recorded in Wales in each of the last five years, and if he will make a statement. [6223]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information is given in the following table:

Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma[1]

	Cases registered as newly diagnosed	Deaths

Local Government Finance

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of aggregate external finance towards Welsh local authority revenue spending he proposes to provide for 1997–98. [6886]

Mr. Hague: On 26 November, I announced that I propose to set total standard spending in Wales for 1997–98 at £2,931.1 million; and central Government support for that level of spending through aggregate external finance at £2,577.7 million.

Within aggregate external fiance, I propose to make available £1,749.4 million in revenue support grant and council tax reduction grant; £584 million in distributable non-domestic rates; and £244.3 million in specific grants.

My Department has today written to the Welsh Local Government Association to consult it on my proposals for revenue support grant in 1997–98.

Copies of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Community Alarm Schemes

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the statutory powers available to local authorities to provide community alarm schemes for their residents. [6888]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The benefit that community alarm schemes can bring is clear. The power to summon assistance quickly and easily provides a sense of security. In the light of concerns expressed about the statutory basis on which local authorities may operate such schemes, the Welsh Office today published a consultation paper entitled "Local Authorities and Community Alarm Schemes". The paper seeks views on extending local authorities' powers to enable them to expand the service to any local resident. It examines the present statutory framework and outlines the Government's preliminary view that local authorities' role in the provision of community alarms should be extended to allow them to provide, and charge for, this service to anyone resident in their area.

If the Government were to conclude in the light of comments that this wider role should be given to local authorities, their intention would be to legislate to that effect at the next opportunity.

Copies of the consultation paper will be placed in the Library of the House. Copies are being sent to the Welsh Local Government Association and local authorities which are being invited to respond by 16 January 1997.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Certificates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to announce the outcome of the review of the operation of public interest certificates; and if he will make a statement. [5439]

The Attorney-General: I expect to announce the outcome of the review shortly.

George Finbar Ross

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General if he will recommend to the Gibraltarian Government that proceedings to complete the liquidation of International Investments Ltd. Gibraltar should be deferred until such time as extradition warrants in respect of George Finbar Ross have been executed. [5846]

The Attorney-General: No. I am not aware of any reason for doing so.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) how many separate computer programmes his Department operates; [5352]

(2) how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer system. [5343]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office operates only desktop personal computers, with a range of proprietary software.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Resurfacing Work (Bangor)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department is taking to ensure the early resurfacing of Waverley drive and Godfrey avenue in Bangor. [5117]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 26 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about resurfacing of Waverley Drive and Godfrey Avenue, Bangor.

A scheme to resurface these streets, which would necessitate full carriageway reconstruction with attendant footway works and replacement of various services, would be very costly and could not be justified given the many other demands on the limited funds available for road works. Their maintenance needs will therefore continue to be addressed through the routine road maintenance programme.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

Investment (Belfast, West)

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what incentives for attracting inward investment towards the constituency of Belfast, West have been (a) assessed and (b) granted by his Department. [5126]

Mr. Ancram: Currently the Industrial Development Board may offer an enhanced capital grant of up to 20 per cent. above the Northern Ireland ceiling of 30 per cent. to encourage inward investment projects to locate in areas designated as disadvantaged such as Belfast, West. Combined with the land and factory accommodation which IDB can make available for immediate use, these incentives have attracted investment totalling some £177 million to the area since April 1993, promoting 1,878 new jobs and safeguarding a further 1,599.

Unemployment

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, for each travel-to-work area in Northern Ireland, the number and percentage of persons unemployed for (a) the latest available and (b) the earliest available date before and after the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance. [5493]

Mr. Ancram: The jobseeker's allowance came into effect on 7 October. The first set of unemployment figures after this date, relating to 10 October, is also the most recently available. The information requested is as follows:

Travel-to-work area	Unemployment at 12 September		10 October
	Number	Percentage of workforce	Number	Percentage of workforce
Ballymena	2,528	8.1	2,206	7.1

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5485]

Mr. Ancram: Policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines were issued to the Northern Ireland Office and all Northern Ireland Departments in December 1993. The guidelines require officials, in formulating and reviewing policies, to identify differential impacts on women and men, and on other groups, to assess whether they are justified in policy terms and to adjust the policy if they are not.

The recent Government report "One Year On" outlines actions taken by Government to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Arts Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the people currently sitting on the Arts Council for Northern Ireland. [5838]

Mr. Ancram: The current members of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland are as follows:

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff working for the Arts Council speak Irish Gaelic. [5840]

Mr. Ancram: Two.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) Roman Catholics, (b) Protestants and (c) others are currently on the staff of the Arts Council for Northern Ireland. [5839]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is provided in the sixth monitoring report of the Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland, which was published in March this year. The report includes a breakdown of Arts Council staff by community affiliation, as at December 1995, as follows:

Roman Catholic community: 17
Protestant community: 20
Non-determined: 5

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times the chief executive of the Arts Council for Northern Ireland has met his counterparts in (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) England and (c) Scotland since 1 January. [5843]

Mr. Ancram: The chief executive of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland met his Irish counterpart on four occasions, while he has had three meetings with his English and Scottish counterparts during 1996.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the salaries of the (a) chairman and (b) chief executive of the Arts Council for Northern Ireland. [5841]

Mr. Ancram: The chairman receives an honorarium, currently £12,093 per annum. The chief executive's salary is currently £47,503 per annum.

George Finbar Ross

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to make an application to the department of state of the United States seeking the extradition of George Finbar Ross in respect of matters relating to the collapse of International Investments Ltd. Gibraltar. [5845]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: A set of draft extradition papers in relation to Mr. George Finbar Ross is currently being prepared for submission to the US Department of Justice for approval.

Students (Housing)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 434, what criteria he uses to judge whether the supply of extra housing for students has been adequate; [5766]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 434, what action he proposes to take to ensure that there is an adequate supply of good–quality, affordable housing for students; [5771]

(3) what representations he has received from the Northern Ireland Higher Education Council about the adequacy of housing supply for students. [5767]

Mr. Ancram: None. The provision of accommodation for students is a matter for the Institutions themselves.

Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) cases of and (b) deaths from the malignant non-Hodgkin's lymphoma have been recorded in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [6225]

Mr. Moss: The latest available information on the incidence of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma is for 1991. The number of cases of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in each of the years from 1987 to 1991, together with the number of deaths, is as follows:

Year	Cases	Deaths
1987	134	79
1988	150	83
1989	117	82
1990	139	83
1991	141	95

The number of deaths from malignant non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Deaths
1991	95
1992	110
1993	104
1994	113
1995	101

The incidence of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma is increasing worldwide. There is a clear link between age and incidence. The disease rarely affects people under the age of 40. The peak incidence is in people aged between 60 and 70 years.

TRANSPORT

FV Canadian Park

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the mayday recently issued by the FV Canadian Park was received by coastguard stations other than Clyde. [5650]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 27 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the mayday issued by the fishing vessel CANADIAN PARK at 0027 on 22 October 1996 on 2182 kHz.

No coastguard station other than Clyde received the distress message. Although the casualty was more than 2,400 miles away, and well outside the UK's Search & Rescue Region, it is suspected that anomalous propagation resulted in Clyde receiving the transmission. That is the nature of this particular radio medium: no reliance is placed on such long range reception—we regard the working range of 2182 kHz under normal conditions as 150 miles.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if containers or vehicles carrying nuclear materials are transported on freight trains within the channel tunnel. [5933]

Mr. Watts: No materials for the nuclear fuel cycle, including reprocessed fuels, or materials for weapons production, are permitted through the channel tunnel.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all incidents requiring the attendance of either the Kent or French fire brigades since public services began in the channel tunnel. [5936]

Mr. Watts: Eurotunnel's first line of response teams, which on the UK side include members of Kent fire brigade, routinely attend a wide range of incidents in the channel tunnel. Most of these are minor incidents of a type to be expected in any operational transport system. Until the fire of 18 November 1996, there has been only one significant incident requiring the attendance of externally based firefighters: the car fire of 9 December 1994, which occurred at the Folkestone terminal and was extinguished by a team from the Kent fire brigade.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedures are in place for identifying car and coach passengers who will need special care in the event of an emergency in the channel tunnel; and what assistance is given to them. [5938]

Mr. Watts: Disabled drivers or drivers carrying disabled passengers are asked to identify themselves at the toll booth. They are given a sticker which identifies them to Eurotunnel's shuttle allocation staff who then ensure that they are loaded at the front of the tourist shuttle rake. In this position, the train crew are aware of them and can ensure that they receive priority attention in the event of an emergency. Specially constructed chairs are made available for passengers with physical disabilities and are stored in readily identifiable areas in the loading wagons to the front of the shuttle. Train crew have received training in the movement of disabled persons in an emergency.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the automatic de-coupling devices were last tested on the freight train involved in the recent fire in the channel tunnel. [5940]

Mr. Watts: The Department of Transport has no information on when the automatic de-coupling devices were last tested on the HGV shuttle involved in the recent fire in the channel tunnel. However, Eurotunnel carries out "level 1" maintenance checks every 18 days on the correct functioning of these devices, with more detailed "level 2" and "level 3" checks every three months and six months respectively.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inspections have been undertaken by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority to ensure that leakages between the tunnels are kept to a minimum. [5932]

Mr. Watts: This issue was extensively addressed during construction and commissioning. The safety authority and the Maitre d'Oeuvre witnessed tests to establish that the ventilation operating principles which Eurotunnel produced were sufficient to ensure the positive pressure necessary to maintain the "safe haven" of the service tunnel through any cross-passage doors that may be opened for evacuation or rescue of people in an emergency.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated time delay between an incident occurring in mid-channel tunnel and the arrival of fire fighting teams from outside the tunnel. [5930]

Mr. Watts: The time of arrival of firefighting teams will depend on their location when an alarm is received. Teams are frequently present in the tunnel during the day. If an alarm is received and teams are in the fire equipment management centres at either end of the tunnel, the maximum estimated attendance time is about 20 minutes.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the fire detection systems aboard freight trains operating in the channel tunnel were last inspected by (a) the French or Kent fire brigades or (b) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority. [5934]

Mr. Watts: There are no fire detection systems aboard freight trains. There are detectors in the tunnel structures. On HGV shuttles, fire detection systems are located in the loader wagons. Inspectors from Her Majesty's railway inspectorate and Kent fire brigade review Eurotunnel's maintenance records for these systems regularly.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the correspondence between Eurotunnel and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority relating to the design of semi-open wagons and the changes that were made to satisfy the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority that these wagons were safe for use. [5939]

Mr. Watts: The annual reports of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority for 1992–93 and 1993–94 commented in depth on the discussions of the semi-open heavy goods vehicle shuttle design, and set out the concerns of the safety authority, which Eurotunnel had asked to address. Copies of these reports were placed in the Library of the House on their publication.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if security guards patrolling the channel tunnel site have direct radio links with the railway control centre controlling trains entering or leaving the tunnel. [5931]

Mr. Watts: On the UK side, the security guards patrolling the terminal site are all equipped with radios permitting direct communication with the railway control centre. On the French terminal, the security guards patrolling the site are also equipped with radios, but their usual means of communication is by direct radio link to security control, which in turn has direct telephone access to the railway control centre.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of incident reports received by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority relating to accidents or incidents occurring in the channel tunnel since public services began. [5935]

Mr. Watts: Since public services in the channel tunnel began, Eurotunnel has provided a wide range of reports to the safety authority on incidents and accidents at work, many of which refer to minor incidents of a type to be expected in any operational transport system. Significant incidents are reported to the intergovernmental commission and included in the annual reports of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority, which are placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the details of evacuation tests completed on the channel tunnel to date to demonstrate the likely escape times in the event of any emergency and the results for (a) passengers in private cars and (b) passengers in coaches. [5937]

Mr. Watts: A large number of tests relating to the evacuation of trains in the channel tunnel have been carried out by the operator, Eurotunnel. The methodology and conclusions of these tests were examined and found acceptable by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority. Favourable advice was also received from the Maitre d'Oeuvre, the independent project manager. In addition, as part of routine staff training, Eurotunnel practises evacuation procedures on a regular basis. Publication of test results is a matter for the operator.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if reports have been made to the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority regarding problems experienced with automatic de-coupling devices fitted to channel tunnel trains. [5941]

Mr. Watts: The safety authority has had no specific reports of difficulties with de-coupling devices fitted to channel tunnel trains.

Driver Sleepiness

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated in respect of problems induced by sleepiness in drivers. [6132]

Mr. Bowis: The first phase of our research programme into driver sleepiness was reported in September 1995 and preliminary advice issued to drivers on how to combat sleepiness. Further research is in progress into the relative effectiveness of other possible measures to ensure that the best possible advice is available to drivers on how to minimise the risk of having a sleep-related accident. This phase of the research will report next year.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission research into the extent to which drivers who fall asleep at the wheel are aware of drowsiness prior to their falling asleep. [6136]

Mr. Bowis: Our current research programme into driver sleepiness has shown that drivers are aware of feeling drowsy before falling asleep, although they may not be aware that their driving is seriously impaired.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines his Department issues to police forces in respect of collating data on the causes of road accidents with particular reference to sleepiness in drivers; and if he will provide funding into research relating to the collation of such data. [6133]

Mr. Bowis: Personal injury road accident data are collected by the police and reported nationally using the Stats19 accident report form. These data do not include subjective judgments on the causes of accidents.

At present, each police force has its own method of collating data on the causes of road accidents, including sleepiness; there are no national guidelines. We are midway through a research programme into the causes of accidents. This will report next year.

Bypasses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to ensure that the design, funding and implementation of comprehensive traffic measures in an area to be bypassed proceed on the same timetable, and are given the same priority, as the bypass itself. [5924]

Mr. Watts: It is for local highway authorities to decide the timing and content of proposals for traffic measures in bypassed towns and villages. My Department encourages authorities to take full advantage of the opportunities that new bypasses offer. In recent years, we have funded the bypass demonstration project, dedicated to promoting good practice in this area.

Cycling Safety

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 October, Official Report, column 44, to which group of road users the education, publicity and research programmes will be targeted. [5831]

Mr. Bowis: The Department's education, publicity and research programmes are aimed at all road users, helping to promote road safety by encouraging everyone to adopt the same rules and behave in a responsible manner when using the roads.

Great Eastern Rail Franchises (Performance Bond)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of performance bond will be required of Great Eastern franchises. [6012]

Mr. Watts: This information will be available when the franchise commences.

Road Construction Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all new road construction schemes in the national roads programme which have been allocated for "design, build, finance and operate" funding; and what is the estimated cost of construction in 1995 prices. [5922]

Mr. Watts: Construction schemes included in DBFO projects, and the estimated costs of construction, excluding VAT, are provided. Prices are as estimated for competition. They are necessarily best estimates and adjustment to 1995 prices is therefore not warranted:

Coach and Bus Drivers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation requiring coach and bus drivers to be fit and safe to drive prior to a journey. [6135]

Mr. Bowis: None. No one should drive unless fit and alert. The Highway Code says:

"If you feel tired or ill, do not drive".

Coach and bus drivers are subject to legal limits on their hours and regulations require them to take all reasonable precautions to ensure the safety of their passengers.

Driving Legislation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation relating to the offence of driving without due care and attention. [6134]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Rail Investment

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much was invested in railway infrastructure for each year since 1979; [5750]

(2) how much was invested in railway rolling stock for each year since 1979. [5751]

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent in public money in each year since 1993 on the tendering costs for design, build, finance and operate roads projects, broken down by (a) consultants' and (b) other costs. [5756]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Smith, dated 27 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if he will list how much has been spent in public money in each year since 1993 on the tendering costs for Design, Build, Finance and Operate road projects, broken down by (a) consultants' and (b) other costs.

Because of the nature of the DBFO Programme, we are unable to disaggregate money spent on policy work from money spent on the tendering exercises. The figures given below represent the total costs to the Department and the Highways Agency.

Year	Cost to the Department of DBFO advisors	Department's internal costs
1993–94	£0 million	Less than £0.1 million
1994–95	£3.3 million	£1.4 million
1995–96	£5.2 million	£2.5 million
1996–97 (to date)	£5.0 million	£1.1 million

Please note that the 1996–97 figures are for spend from April to the end of October. The Department's costs are the combined estimated costs of staff wages, ERNIC, superannuation, travel and subsistence and accommodation costs for both the Department of Transport and for the Highways Agency.

National Bus Company Pension Trustees Ltd.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will reply to the National Bus Company Pension Trustees Ltd. on the matter of the recent determination by the pensions ombudsman. [6716]

Sir George Young: Following the determination by the pensions ombudsman on a complaint against the trustees of the Bus Employees Superannuation Trust—BEST—one of the pension funds of the former National Bus Company, the NBC pension trustees wrote to me on 20 September asking for my proposals for repayment by my Department of the surplus of the fund paid to it in 1990 or, if the Department were not prepared to repay the surplus, for financial resources to enable the trustees to seek its recovery through the courts. The pensions ombudsman had ruled that the trustees should take all practicable steps to obtain the return of the moneys from the pension fund received by the Department of Transport on behalf of the National Bus Company. His determination was, however, directed to the trustees, and makes it clear that he has not carried out an investigation, or made a determination, with respect to the National Bus Company, or to my Department.

I have obtained legal advice on the points raised in the trustees' letter. I have considered carefully the background to the events with which the determination is concerned and the legal advice which I have now obtained. It is clear that those involved in the decisions at the time—the trustees, the National Bus Company and the Government—were satisfied, after taking legal and expert advice and after lengthy consideration of the options available, that the agreement reached in 1986 represented a reasonable and balanced solution to the difficult and contentious problem of how to secure, in advance of the company's privatisation, the accrued pension benefits of NBC employees. The arrangements provided the necessary protection for members' accrued benefits, and involved a Government undertaking that funds would be made available to cover any deficiency in the pension fund at wind-up, in return for a change in the fund's rules which provided for any surplus in the fund to be paid to the NBC. There was no certainty at that time whether the fund would be in deficit or surplus at the date of wind-up.

The amount at issue in this matter is substantial, and payment of such a sum would raise serious accounting issues. My Department has been advised that it has good grounds to put these matters before the courts. The Department's accounting officer would need to show conclusive reasons for making the payment and a determination as to its amount. I have therefore concluded that, if the trustees wish to pursue their claim, they must do so through the courts. If a legal action were commenced by the trustees, both parties could present all relevant evidence and legal arguments and the court could make a definitive ruling which would be binding both on the Department and on the trustees.

I have therefore today written to the NBC Pension Trustees Ltd. to say that, if it is minded to commence a legal action against my Department in the High Court, my Department would be prepared to meet its legal costs, given that it has no resources of its own to pursue litigation. I hope that any litigation could be carried out in as co-operative and speedy a manner as possible. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library.

Finally, I should make it clear that the pensions ombudsman's determination and my announcement today address only the BEST pension fund which covered the majority of the NBC's employees. Management staff were covered by a separate pension fund, the National Bus pension fund. I understand that the NBPF is the subject of a separate complaint to the pensions ombudman which he is still considering.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of purchasers, prices paid and dates of sale for those companies previously owned by British Rail which have been sold, pursuant to the Railways Act 1993. [6885]

Mr. Watts: The table summarises sales of those companies previously owned by British Rail which have been sold pursuant to the Railways Act 1993. The table updates all sales announced previously. Where appropriate, gross proceeds are subject to post-completion adjustments.

In addition, the sale of Railtrack plc will realise gross proceeds of £1.93 billion. Including this, and dividends of some £800 million and £50 million paid before the sales of the rolling stock leasing companies and the BR infrastructure service companies respectively, total gross proceeds are £5.28 billion.

PRIME MINISTER

Investors in People

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments (a) have already met the Investors in People standard and (b) are aiming to meet it. [6147]

The Prime Minister: All Departments are meeting, or aiming to meet, the Investors in People standard. The White Paper "Development and Training for Civil Servants: A Framework for Action", Command Paper 3321, issued in July 1996 announced the target that "by the year 2000, all civil servants will be employed in organisations recognised as Investors in People".

As at 31 March this year, 58 Departments and agencies, or parts of them, had achieved the standard. These accounted for 12 per cent. of civil servants. This compared with 5 per cent. of the national work force employed in recognised organisations at that time. Figures for the position at the end of September will be available shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Digital Television

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he intends to take forward the regulation of conditional access for digital television. [6884]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Regulations—1996/2185—were brought into effect on 23 August 1996 governing the licensing of proprietary conditional access technology to manufacturers of consumer equipment—that is, set-top boxes. These provide that licensing of conditional access technology must take place on fair, reasonable and non-discriminatory terms. They also prohibit anyone granting such a licence from discouraging the manufacturer from including, in the same equipment, another conditional access system or a common interface.

I have today published, for a final round of consultation, our proposals covering the provision of conditional access services—that is, the services which allow broadcasters access to the set-top boxes, once they are available in the market. These near-final documents take account of comments we have received during representations on the previous drafts, published in June.

Given the extensive consultation already undertaken, comments are invited within two weeks. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The final draft of the regulations will then be made available to the House for consideration, together with the final text of the Telecommunications Act 1984 licence which will govern service provision.

The basic approach of these regulations is to ensure that all broadcasters can gain access on fair, reasonable and non-discriminatory terms, to any digital set-top boxes which can receive their signal. We have made provision for a range of powers to allow the director general of the Office of Telecommunications to move quickly to firm and effective enforcement action in the event of any anti-competitive behaviour which may significantly distort competition. We have also sought to retain incentives to invest early in the development of new services by making it clear that these powers will be triggered by anti-competitive behaviour. In this way, we aim to strike an appropriate balance in regulation, avoiding over-implementation of the underlying directive, and encouraging the early development of a competitive market in digital television services.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost of the small firms loan guarantee scheme schemes to the Exchequer in 1996–97; what it was in 1994–95 and 1995–96; and what he estimates it will be in 1997–98. [4815]

Mr. Page: Net expenditure in 1994–95 and 1995–96 was £16.2 million and £27.6 million respectively. The forecast net expenditure for 1996–97 is £39.8 million, and for 1997–98 planned net expenditure, based on the 1995 public expenditure survey, is £53.1 million.

Research Establishments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contingency funding has been provided within the science budget to meet the full costs arising from the disposal of public sector research establishments within the current financial year and the next financial year. [4584]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The allocations of the science budget for 1996–97 did not include any specific contingency funds. The cost implications for PSREs are considered on a case-by-case basis of evaluation. My right. hon Friend the President of the Board of Trade expects to announce the allocation of the science budget for 1997–98 early next year.

Arms Exports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure that Government guidance on arms exports is up to date, and that industry is informed of changes immediately. [6000]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 November 1996]: Guidance on the interpretation of arms embargoes and details of the destinations concerned is set out in "A Guide to Export Controls," published by the export control organisation of the Department of Trade and Industry, from which copies are available. The guide is currently being revised and a new edition will be published shortly. When there is a change in policy or in the legislation, every effort is made to notify those affected by, for example, the publication of notices to exporters in Lloyd's List and elsewhere.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those industries in the United Kingdom which make a positive contribution to the balance of payments. [5604]

Mr. Greg Knight [holding answer 26 November 1996]: All industries which export make a positive contribution to the balance of payments.

Aerospace Research and Development

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each of the past three years the amount spent on civil aerospace research and development in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America, (c) France and (d) Germany. [5602]

Mr. Greg Knight [holding answer 26 November 1996]: It is not possible to provide the figures requested as data for total national expenditure in each country are not available.

SCOTLAND

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5350]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer programme. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a programme. The Department is at present responsible for 19 major software systems.

Business Rates

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of excluding from liability for business rates (a) the first £2,500 and (b) the first £5,000 of rateable value for business premises in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [5135]

Mr. Kynoch: The loss to the non-domestic rating pool of excluding from liability for business rates the first £2,500 and first £5,000 of rateable value of business premises is estimated at £140 million and £240 million respectively. The Government have provided support of £137 million for businesses in Scotland since 1995–96, with special protection extended to small businesses, through the transitional arrangements which phase in the effects of the 1995 revaluation. This support will continue until 1999–2000.

Additional support for small rural shops and post offices will be provided by the proposed village shops rate relief scheme proposed in the Local Government and Rating Bill, currently before the House.

Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the impact on the numbers of those employed in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector if clause 45 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill were implemented. [5494]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is anticipated that the Scottish Legal Aid Board will employ six solicitors and 14 administrative staff in the pilot planned under the proposals set out in clause 45.

It is not possible to guage the impact of the pilots on the private sector as the location, volume of business and method of allocating clients have still to be established.

Judicial Process

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics the Government collect on the interval between a report being made to, or received by, the procurator fiscal and a court appearance for offences or groups of offences in Scotland. [6104]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate informs me that the Crown Office collects information in summary proceedings on the average time between (1) receipt of a report and service of a complaint and (2) service of the complaint and the pleading diet. Between April and September 1996 the average time taken to serve a complaint was 5.1 weeks in the sheriff court and five weeks in the district court. Between April and October 1996 the average time between service of the complaint and the pleading diet was four weeks in both the sheriff and district courts.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maximum permissible time between a charge being made by the police, or a report being made to the procurator fiscal on the procedure for a court appearance being otherwise inactivated and the case reaching court for (a) murder, (b) assault, (c) class A drug trafficking, (d) burglary, (e) lesser drug offences and (f) other. [6105]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton : There is no statutory time limit within which proceedings for common law offences such as murder, assault and theft by housebreaking must be taken. A plea in bar of trial may be sustained, however, where there has been undue delay which has caused grave prejudice to the accused. Section 136 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 makes provision for the commencement of proceedings for statutory offences triable only summarily. Proceedings must be commenced within six months after the contravention occurred, unless the enactment fixes a different time limit. Summary proceedings for contraventions of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 must be commenced within 12 months from the time when the offence was committed—section 25(5).

Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) cases of and (b) deaths from the malignant non-Hodgkin's lymphoma have been recorded in Scotland in each of the last five years, and if he will make a statement. [6226]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of cases registered of and deaths from non-Hodgkin's lymphoma recorded in Scotland for each year since 1990 are set out.

Year	Registrations	Deaths
1990	714	377
1991	674	354
1992	717	383
1993	782	395
1994	712	383
1995	715	[1]397

Terrorist Prisoners

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners are serving sentences following conviction for terrorist activities; how many such prisoners have been (a) released from prison, (b) transferred to prisons in Northern Ireland, (c) repatriated to the Republic of Ireland to complete their sentences and (d) granted compassionate leave in Northern Ireland or the Irish Republic since 1983; and if he will make a statement. [4746]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 27 November 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question relating to the number of prisoners serving sentences following conviction for terrorist activities and their release or transfer to Northern Ireland and The Republic of Ireland.

Currently there are no prisoners held in Scottish prisons convicted of offences under the prevention of Terrorism Act. Two prisoners convicted under this legislation were permanently transferred to Northern Ireland, one in 1991 and the other 1993. The question of whether these prisoners were granted compassionate leave following transfer is a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. The information you requested on how many such prisoners have been released from prison is not held centrally.

The Republic of Ireland ratified The Council of Europe Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons on 1 November 1995. Since that time no prisoners convicted under the Prevention of Terrorism Act have been repatriated to that country from Scotland.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the thematic report by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary, Scotland relating to the administration of the firearms licensing system in Scotland in 1995 submitted to the Cullen inquiry. [5533]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The inspectorate of constabulary's report was never completed, although a draft of it was made available to Lord Cullen to help his inquiry. The content of the report, which related to the administrative efficiency of the police operation of the present licensing system, is overtaken by the changes to the licensing system announced by the Government in their response, Cm 3392, to the inquiry.

A1 Dualling

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all dual carriageway schemes approved on the A1 between Edinburgh and the Scottish border since 1992, indicating the location, the estimated start and completion dates and the value of the contract involved. [5539]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 November 1996]: Design work has been authorised on the following dual carriageway schemes:

£ million

Scheme	Estimated start	Estimated completion	Expected value of contract
East Lothian
Haddington to Dunbar	[1]—	[1]—	35
Thistly Cross to Bowerhouse	[1]—	[1]—	1.35
Bowerhouse to Spott Road	[1]—	[1]—	2.8
Spott Road to Oswald Dean	[1]—	[1]—	2.8
Oswald Dean to Innerwick	Early 1997	Late 1997	4.5
Scottish Borders
Lemington to Howburn	Early 1997	Late 1997	2.2
Howburn to Houndwood	[1]—	[1]—	2.8

[1] Construction will depend on progress with statutory procedures and/or the availability of finance.

In addition, construction work has been approved on the following:

Scheme	Estimated actual completion date	Value £ million
East Lothian
Tranent to Haddington	November 1996	30.3
Scottish Borders
Tower Farm to Penmanshiel	Late November 1996	1.5
Marshall Meadows Extension	August 1993	2.0

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his current policy on the proposed upgrading of the A1 to dual carriageway standard between Edinburgh and the Scottish border; when he estimates the work will be completed; and what other improvement schemes are currently under consideration in respect of the A1 between Edinburgh and the Scottish border. [5540]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1996]: The A1 is Scotland's second most important cross-border route. I attach a high priority to upgrading the road and announced in 1992 the desirability to plan in the longer term for dualling. It is not possible to say when this work will be completed. Approximately 15.5 km of new dualling has been completed since 1992 and a further 25 km of dualling is being planned, but progress will depend upon the success of statutory procedures and/or the availability of finance. Scottish borders council has been invited to undertake further analysis of the road to identify the sequencing of design work on further schemes at this time.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the assistance available to beef farms which have been affected by the BSE crisis. [2582]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 16 October 1996, Official Report, columns 934–35.

The Government have also:

- announced that an additional £60 million will be made available to eligible cattle producers under the 1997 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme;
- allocated some £29 million of national funds to a second beef marketing payments scheme, covering cattle sold for slaughter for human consumption during the period 1 July to 30 September 1996. Claim forms and guidance notes will be issued in early December;
- secured a further £50 million of EU funds. It is our intention that as much as possible of this extra assistance will benefit suckler producers. Further details will be announced once a Commission proposal is available and discussions have taken place with the farming unions.

In all, nearly £250 million of additional aid has now been committed for direct support for UK beef producers. This is in addition to the considerable sums spent on market support measures, such as the expanded intervention arrangements and the calf processing scheme, which have protected producers' incomes.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5517]

Mr. Boswell: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer programme. However, my Department is at present responsible for approximately 500 software systems—in core MAFF and its executive agencies—comprising an estimated 30,000 programmes. "Packaged" systems are excluded from these estimates.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5516]

Mr. Boswell: It is estimated that there are approximately 20,000,000 lines of code in the Ministry's computer systems. This excludes "packaged" systems purchased from external suppliers where such information is known only to the supplier.

My Department is carrying out an inventory of systems that are likely to still be in use in 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue.

North Sea Cod

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture,

Fisheries and Food what is his response to the latest advice from the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea on levels of North sea cod; and what action he intends to take to combat the stock depletion. [6326]

Mr. Baldry: The advisory committee on fishery management of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea has recommended a reduction in fishing mortality in order to bring the North sea cod stock within safe biological limits in the medium term. In order to contribute to restoring this stock, the Government will seek a 1997 total allowable catch consistent with advice from the ICES.

Cattle Cull

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are the Government's plans for emergency incineration provision to help clear the backlog of over-30-month cull cattle carcases in each region; and what is the timetable for their implementation; [5763]

(2) what plans he has for considering proposals to construct regional incinerators for the incineration of cattle carcases; [5764]

(3) what progress has been made on the scheme for existing power station furnaces to be utilised for incineration of carcases; and when he expects any such scheme to be in place. [5765]

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no plans for emergency incineration provision for over-30-month scheme cattle carcases. Incineration, however, does have an important part to play in the scheme and the Government are pursuing the prospect of direct carcase incineration with interested companies. A competitive tender exercise was held in June for the provision of incineration services as a means of disposing of some of the carcases of animals slaughtered under the OTMS over and above those services already provided on a limited basis for BSE suspect cases and casualty animals. Following evaluation of all the offers received, the Intervention Board has issued letters of intent to nine companies to provide incineration capacity over the country.

The Government have managed to increase the slaughter rate under the OTMS in recent weeks. It has increased from 23,000 in the third week of August to around 60,000 by the middle of November. The backlog of animals on farms at 2 November has been registered at just under 330,000 animals and, at current disposal rates, the backlog in England and Wales is expected to be cleared by christmas.

There are no proposals to incinerate carcases in power stations. The possibility of burning materials derived from rendered carcases—that is, meat and bonemeal and tallow—in power stations is under consideration and combustion trials have been carried out at a number of facilities. No decision will be made on any option until the test results have been fully evaluated. In considering destruction options, full weight is given to protecting the environment and human health.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many carcases, from the BSE over 30-month and calf slaughter schemes, are currently in refrigerated storage, by location, at the latest available date. [6228]

Mr. Baldry: All calf carcases are consigned direct to rendering. The numbers of carcases of over 30-month cattle held in storage, by location as at 18 November are set out as follows:

Location	Number of carcases
Avonmouth	4,782
Cambridge	3,362
Craven Arms	6,017
Exeter	1,936
Gainsborough	20,724

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what competitive tenders he has obtained for the incineration of carcases, from the BSE over-30-month scheme; and if he will list the successful bidders indicating in each case the numbers involved. [6231]

Mr. Baldry: The Intervention Board received 35 responses from interested parties who were shortlisted to tender for the incineration of carcases from the over-30-month scheme. The nine respondents which were offered a contract, subject to their obtaining all necessary licences and consents, are listed, together with their indicative weekly carcase capacity:

Bronzeoak: 2,800

Canfield: 5,000

Durga: 1,000

Euromet: 570

P. J. Hayman and Sons: 200

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what route for crossing the channel was declared in the journey plan in respect of the consignment of sheep rejected by P and O in the week beginning 4 November; what steps were taken to safeguard the animals' welfare between their being rejected and their eventual export; and if he will make a statement. [6324]

Mrs. Browning: A vehicle was refused passage on a P and O cross-channel ferry at approximately 2300 on 7 November. The vehicle returned to a lairage in the vicinity of Dover where the sheep were unloaded. The incident is under investigation by the enforcement authority and it would be inappropriate to comment further.

Quarantine

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been prosecuted for contravention of the quarantine regulations in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [6312]

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry instituted prosecutions against one individual in 1993, and two individuals—in relation to the same premises—in 1995. The latter case has yet to be tried. The local authorities also have responsibilities in this area and records of their prosecution activity are not readily available to the Ministry. Details could be gathered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals have been seized entering the United Kingdom in contravention of the quarantine regulations in each of the (a) ports, (b) airports and (c) channel tunnel in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [6313]

Mrs. Browning: The information is not held in the exact format requested.

The number of animals that have been seized in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years in contravention of the quarantine regulations is as follows.

Calf Herds (Banned Antibiotics)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy on testing calf herds for banned antibiotics; and if he will make a statement. [6314]

Mrs. Browning: Samples of calf kidney are tested for the presence of residues of the antibiotic chloramphenicol, which is banned under Council regulation 2377/90/EEC, under the Ministry's non-statutory residues surveillance programme. Thirteen samples were tested in 1995 and 14 have been tested to date in 1996. They were all negative. Samples of cattle kidney are also tested and there was no positive among 41 samples tested in 1995 and 22 tested to date in 1996. Samples of cattle kidney are also tested for chloramphenicol under the Ministry's statutory residues programme. None was positive from the 100 tested in 1995 or the 67 tested to date in 1996.

The results of this surveillance are published in the Veterinary Medicine Directorate's annual report on surveillance for veterinary residues and updated quarterly in its Medicines Act veterinary information service newsletter.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments were made in England in 1995–96 under the arable area payments scheme between (a) £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000, (k) £200,001 and £250,000, (l) £250,001 and £300,000, (m) £300,001 and £350,000, (n) £350,001 and £400,000, (o) £400,001 and £450,000, (p) £450,001 and £500,000, (q) £500,000 and £999,999 and (r) £1 million and over. [6316]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following table sets out the number of payments made by the Ministry under the 1995 arable area payments scheme in the bands requested. Some claimants will have received more than one payment.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

South Africa

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the measures she has taken to assist South Africa since its general election. [4613]

Dr. Liam Fox: In 1994, the Prime Minister announced technical assistance worth £60 million over three years. Most of these funds are now committed to projects covering health, education, enterprise development, rural development and good governance, including support for policing. A further £60 million bilateral assistance package was announced during President Mandela's state visit last July. We are providing an advisory team to assist in the integration of South Africa's armed forces. We are also contributing aid worth around £16 million a year through EU channels.

In the long term, the key to South Africa's prosperity is economic growth. We are therefore encouraging trade and investment, through "Opportunity South Africa" launched in 1994. In addition, we are pressing for the greatest possible access to EU markets for South African exports.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Governments of Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi concerning developments in the region. [4614]

Dr. Liam Fox: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given in the House today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary to the hon. Members for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) and for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner).

International Criminal Court

20. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to support the establishment of an international criminal court. [4606]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We support the establishment of an international criminal court to try certain of the most serious crimes of concern to the international community.

30. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues from other member states of the European Union on the creation of a United Nations permanent criminal court. [4617]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has had no recent discussions with ministerial colleagues from other EU member states on the establishment of an international criminal court.

Intergovernmental Conference

21. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which are the principal issues on which Her Majesty's Government are at variance with all other members of the European Union in respect of the intergovernmental conference. [4607]

Mr. David Davis: The intergovernmental conference will continue until mid-1997. Good progress is being made, but it is too soon to draw up the sort of balance sheet sought by the hon. Gentleman.

29. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations his Department is making for the British presidency of the European Union in 1998 in respect of implementing the decisions of the intergovernmental conference. [4616]

Mr. Davis: It is too soon to say what, if any, measures will need to be taken as a result of the intergovernmental conference.

35. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the agenda for the next European Council with particular reference to preparations for the intergovernmental conference. [4622]

Mr. Davis: The December European Council will discuss an outline for a draft revision of the treaties, which the Irish presidency is preparing.

Zambia

24. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Zambian high commissioner regarding potential developments in that country. [4610]

Dr. Liam Fox: None, but my noble Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development keeps in close touch with developments in Zambia and has had frequent contacts with President Chiluba, other Zambian Ministers and the Zambian high commissioner.

Australia

25. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to maintain and improve United Kingdom relations with Australia. [4611]

Mr. Hanley: Our bilateral relations with Australia are excellent. To reinforce the close links between the two countries, we are about to embark on a year-long programme of events under the banner of "New Images". This will run throughout 1997. We hope it will highlight the importance that we attach to a modern and dynamic relationship, and set it on a strong footing into the next century.

Cuba

28. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet representatives of the United States Government to discuss relations with Cuba. [4615]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We regularly discuss relations with Cuba with the United States Government.

China

31. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with China. [4618]

Mr. Hanley: Relations with China have recently shown good progress in many areas. Both countries attach importance to a successful transfer of sovereignty in Hong Kong in 1997, and are continuing their efforts to achieve that end.

East Timor

32. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to support the implementation of the principle of self-determination in East Timor. [4619]

Mr. Hanley: We continue to support the UN Secretary-General's efforts to find a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement to the question of East Timor.

Middle East Peace Process

33. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process. [4620]

Mr. Hanley: We are concerned that no agreement has yet been reached on redeployment of Israeli forces in Hebron, as envisaged under the Israeli-Palestinian interim agreement. We are in close contact with both sides to support an early agreement, and rapid progress towards implementation of other outstanding elements of the interim agreement. We are pressing for an early resumption of negotiations between Israel and Syria.

Ukraine

34. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his counterpart in Ukraine in respect of United Kingdom-Ukraine relations; and if he will make a statement. [4621]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary last met his Ukranian counterpart, Hennady Udovenko, at the United Nations General Assembly in New York on 27 September.

We are committed to helping Ukraine develop as an independent, democratic and prosperous partner in Europe. This commitment is reflected in frequent high-level contacts, an increase in know how fund aid this year and intensive co-operation in many fields.

West Bank (Israeli Settlements)

37. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to recent Israeli pronouncements on additional settlement developments on the west bank. [4624]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary raised this issue with Prime Minister Netanyahu when he called on him on 3 November. We regard Israeli settlements on the west bank to be illegal, to be an obstacle to peace and to contravene the spirit of the Oslo agreements, by pre-empting final status negotiations.

Burma

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments in Burma. [4593]

Mr. Hanley: We are deeply concerned about recent events in Burma. We issued a statement on 11 November condemning the recent attacks on Aung San Suu Kyi and other leaders of the National League for Democracy and urging the Burmese authorities to respond constructively to calls for dialogue and to prevent further deterioration in the situation.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Burma in respect of human rights abuses in that country. [4816]

Mr. Hanley: We have made several representations to the ruling State Law and Order Restoration Council in recent months about human rights violations in Burma. We did so most recently with our EU partners in a demarche to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Rangoon by the acting EU presidency on 16 November. I also raised our concerns with the Burmese ambassador in London on 21 November.

India

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit India to discuss bilateral relations. [4609]

Dr. Liam Fox: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary visited India from 28 to 30 August this year and held wide-ranging discussion with Prime Minister Deve Gowda, Mr. I. K. Gujral, the Indian Minister of External Affairs and others. I visited India on 21 to 26 October to follow up this visit. There are no immediate plans for my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary to visit again.

Arms Exports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to increase international transparency in respect of conventional arms and their technologies and components. [5995]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 26 November 1996]: We continue to play a full and active role in promoting greater transparency in respect of the transfer of conventional arms and their technologies and components. To this end, we continue to support the work and further development of the UN register of conventional arms, which was established in 1991 at the initiative of the Prime Minister. We shall also continue to submit full and timely returns, including information on military holdings and national procurement, to the register and expect to send a national representative to the UN group of governmental experts which is expected to meet in March 1997 to discuss its further development.

We also welcome the formal launch of the Wassenaar arrangement in July 1996. The United Kingdom participated actively in the negotiations to establish this arrangement, which aims to promote transparency and greater responsibility in the transfer of conventional arms and dual-use goods and technologies. We shall continue to work for the future success of the arrangement.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to co-ordinate efforts with members of the EU, the Wassenaar arrangement and the UN Security Council to pursue and prosecute companies and individuals who traffic arms in contravention of internationally agreed embargoes. [6006]

Mr. Davis: It is the responsibility of individual states to ensure that they implement fully all internationally agreed embargoes to which they are committed. The United Kingdom will continue to fulfil its obligations in this regard, in co-operation with other interested parties as appropriate.

An interdepartmental committee established on 19 November 1996 will examine rigorously procedures in relation to the trafficking of arms and determine whether there has been a gap in our controls and if so what action needs to be taken. It will report within one month, and Ministers will report its conclusions to the House.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ensure that there are effective sanctions and monitoring of controls on arms exports to countries violating human rights. [5878]

Mr. Davis: All export licence applications for arms are considered on a case-by-case basis in the light of the established international criteria to which we are committed. These require us, inter alia, to take into account the respect of human rights in the country of final destination. We do not export equipment we consider likely to be used for internal repression.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge those countries that are the source of illegal arms shipments to strengthen and improve their export and customs controls. [6007]

Mr. Davis: We fully support greater responsibility in the transfer of arms and military goods and regularly raise any concerns we might have with the countries concerned. It is the responsibility of the exporting country to introduce and enforce effective controls on the export of arms.

We also have regular exchanges with those countries which are making efforts to improve their export control and enforcement procedures.

We are also active participants in the Wassenaar arrangement—aimed at promoting transparency and greater responsibility—in the transfer of conventional arms and dual-use goods and technologies as well as several supplier regimes—aimed at preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction—and urge other countries to show similar responsibility in their exports of defence equipment.

Churches (China)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government (a) have taken and (b) propose to take to encourage the Government of the People's Republic of China to cease taking measures against churches that are not registered with the official religious organisations. [5722]

Mr. Hanley: Restrictions on religious activity in China and persecution of those who practise outside the official church framework are causes for great concern. We and our EU partners continue to urge the Chinese authorities to regard freedom of worship as fulfilling a basic human need, not as a threat.

Bishop Zeng Jingmu

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to urge the Government of the People's Republic of China to ensure the release of Bishop Zeng Jingmu, currently imprisoned in Jiangxi province, and to ensure that he receives adequate medical treatment. [5726]

Mr. Hanley: We have not raised the specific case of Bishop Zeng Jingmu with the Chinese, but we and our EU partners continue to press the Chinese authorities to respect fundamental rights, such as religious freedom, and to respect international standards on the treatment of prisoners.

Churches (Egypt)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the Government of Egypt to repeal laws that require presidential permission for the building, repair and maintenance of churches. [5724]

Mr. Hanley: While the laws in question can cause problems for Christians, our contacts with Christians in Egypt show that they would not welcome outside intervention on their behalf.

Human Rights (Iran)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to urge the Government of Iran to allow independent human rights monitors to visit that country to investigate the deaths of the Rev. Mohammad Bagher Yusefi, the Rev. Haik Hovsepian Mehr, the Rev. Tateos Michaelian and the Rev. Mehdi Dibaj; and if he will make a statement. [5725]

Mr. Hanley: We have protested about the deaths of the Rev. Haik Hovsepian Mehr, the Rev. Tateos Michaelin and the Rev. Mehdi Dibaj. Through the EU, we pressed for thorough and impartial investigations into their deaths and, as a result, a public trial was subsequently held in 1995. We were concerned about certain aspects of the trial, but a public trial in Iran was, none the less, a welcome development in itself. We were also deeply disturbed by the death of the Rev. Mohammad Bagher Yusefi and we have raised his case with our EU partners for further action. We fully support the involvement of UN special rapporteurs in Iran.

Indigenous People (Rights)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the United Nations draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples; what discussions his Department are currently involved in on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [5894]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We attach importance to the early adoption by the United Nations of an effective declaration to help protect the rights of indigenous people worldwide. We participate in the UN's working group tasked with producing a declaration and are contributing to the drafting of a suitable text.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of when the United Nations draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples will be adopted. [5896]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: A UN working group on indigenous populations is still working on the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people. The latest draft has been sent to Governments and others for comment. We hope that the declaration can be completed and agreed by the end of 2004 at the very latest.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards a United Nations draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples; and if he will make a statement. [5895]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Last year, the UN Commission on Human Rights referred a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people to a working group for further work. The working group has met twice, but progress has been slow. Once agreed, the text will be submitted to the Commission for Human Rights, then to the Economic and Social Council and finally to the UN General Assembly. We hope the declaration can be completed and agreed by the end of 2004.

Human Rights Policy Department

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the budget for his Department's human rights policy department for each financial year since 1979; and if he will publish details of its annual staffing levels over this period. [6070]

Mr. Hanley: The human rights policy department has existed as a separate entity since 1991–92. The total operating costs and staffing level are as follows:

Years	£	Staff numbers
1991–92	290,370	12
1992–93	390,826	11
1993–94	496,740	11
1994–95	621,679	10
1995–96	596,958	10

Previous work was carried out within the United Nations department and it is not possible to isolate the cost.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protection a United Kingdom resident has under criminal injuries compensation schemes if he or she becomes a victim of crime while working in Germany. [6143]

Dr. Liam Fox: British nationals resident in Germany have the same rights to compensation from the German criminal injuries compensation scheme as any German or other EU national.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from Arab countries about the humanitarian situation in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates and the desirability of a Government initiative to lift sanctions on Iraq at the United Nations. [4710]

Mr. Hanley: We share the concerns of Arab countries at the humanitarian situation in Iraq and at Saddam Hussein's indifference to the suffering of the Iraqi people. Sanctions cannot be relaxed while Saddam Hussein continues to refuse to comply with Iraq's obligations under the relevant UN Security Council resolutions. The UK co-sponsored Security Council resolution 986 to help alleviate the suffering in Iraq caused by Saddam Hussein's policies. We look forward to early implementation following the delay caused by Iraqi obstruction.

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on discussions he has had with the Legislative Council deputation from Hong Kong about the future of Hong Kong. [4589]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I held separate meetings with LegCo delegation on 12 November. We discussed a range of current issues, including: immigration and nationality questions, notably British citizenship for Hong Kong dependent territory citizens and the ethnic minorities; visa-free travel for holders of the passport of the Hong Kong special aministrative region; the future application to Hong Kong of the UN human rights covenants; Vietnamese migrants; and the work of the Sino-British joint liaison group after 30 June 1997.

EU Economic and Social Committee

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) names, (b) substitutes, and (c) sponsoring organisations of each of the present United Kingdom members of the Economic and Social Committee of the EU. [5508]

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom members of the Economic and Social Committee are:

Mr. Neville Beale
Mr. Kenneth Gardner, MA FRSC
Mr. Malcolm Levitt
Mr. John Little
Mr. Michael Mobbs
Mr. Peter Morgan
Mr. Kenneth Walker
Mr. John Whitworth OBE
Mr. John Andrews
Mr. Campbell Christie
Mr. Tom Jenkins
Mr. John Lyons CBE
Miss Ada Maddocks OBE
Mr. Roy Sanderson OBE
Mr. George Wright
Mr. Wilfred Aspinall
Dame Jocelyn Barrow DBE
Ms Beta Brookes
Mrs. Ann Davidson
Mrs. Angela Guillaume
Mr. Robert Moreland
Mr. John Simpson
Mr. Michael Strauss

One seat is vacant. There are no substitute members. Members are nominated by the Government. They are not sponsored as such but some are supported by their employers or unions in so far as they are given time off to attend ESC meetings. Other members are retired or self-employed.

HEALTH

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5349]

Mr. Horam: The Department uses a number of proprietary software packages. For these, information on the number of programs or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

The Department is carrying out an inventory of those bespoke information technology systems that will still be in use in 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issues, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5358]

Mr. Horam: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program; a formula on a single line of code could be said to be a program. However, the Department, excluding next steps agencies, is currently responsible for 140 major software systems.

CAMS Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the contract between the NHS centre for coding and classification and CAMS Ltd.; and on what date any changes will take effect. [5908]

Mr. Horam: The contract with CAMS Ltd. on Read code licensing and support is with the Department of Health, and not with the national health service centre for coding and classification. Its operation is managed and audited annually by a civil service branch of the NHS executive.

That contract takes the form of an NHS agreement and a non-NHS agreement. Their effect is to grant to CAMS Ltd. exclusive rights for the licensing and support of Read codes worldwide. The earliest termination dates are 20 March 1999, and 20 September 1999 respectively.

Following recent publication of the Silicon Bridge Research report on Read code licensing and support arrangements, the NHS executive has accepted the recommendation that the exclusive agreements should not be continued beyond the earliest termination dates. The executive will be negotiating changes in the manner in which the existing contract is executed—dates for implementation of any changes have not been determined.

Personal Social Services

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what money is being provided through the standard spending assessment for personal social services for 1997–98. [6776]

Mr. Dorrell: A sum of £7,392.1 million will be distributed by personal social services standard spending assessments in 1997–98, compared with £6,908.6 million in 1996–97. Total standard spending on social services, including specific and special grants, will be £7,846 million in 1997–98, compared with £7,511 million in 1996–97 plans, an increase of 4.5 per cent.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific and special grants and what capital resources he is making available to local authorities for personal social services for 1997–98. [6777]

Mr. Dorrell: Specific grants will be available in 1997–98 for:

AIDS and HIV services: £13.7 million

Services for alcohol and drugs misusers: £2.5 million

Guardians ad litem and reporting officers: £6.3 million

Mental illness services: £67.3 million

Social services training: £35.5 million.

A special grant will be available in 1997–98 for:

Services for unaccompanied asylum seeking children: £3 million.

The capital grant for the secure accommodation for young people development programme will be £13.2 million in 1997–98.

Annual capital guidelines of £60.5 million will be notified to local authorities. Supplementary credit approvals will again be available for AIDS/HIV services, £3.1 million, and mental illness services, £11.6 million.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the special transitional grant in 1997–98. [6778]

Mr. Dorrell: There will be a special transitional grant of £325 million in 1997–98. It will have attached a condition which requires local authorities to spend 85 per cent. of this sum in the independent sector.

Mixed and Same-sex Wards

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what instructions or guidance have been issued to health authorities with regard to requirements for same-sex wards to be included in their purchasing policies or plans; [6079]

(2) what instructions or guidance have been issued to hospital trusts over the phasing out of mixed-sex wards; and what target dates have been set; [6077]

(3) what instructions or guidance have been issued to fundholding general practitioners with regard to requirements for same-sex wards to be included in the purchasing policies or plans. [6076]

Mr. Horam: It is for trusts, health authorities and fundholding general practitioners to manage their local priorities within the overall context for the planning and delivery of health services set out in the planning and priorities guidance for the national health service. A baseline requirement and objective is to deliver the rights and standards set out in the patients charter.

Social Services Departments

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what submissions he has had from local government associations in relation to the funding deficit faced by social services departments in seeking to fulfil their statutory duties; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement. [5822]

Mr. Burns: We are in regular touch with the local government associations, both through formally constituted channels and informally. In such discussions, the associations raise a wide range of issues concerning the funding of personal social services, and the discharge of their statutory duties.

Community Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy on the long-term funding of community care, with special reference to disabled people. [5950]

Mr. Burns: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be announcing the provisional financial allocations to local government for 1997–98 this afternoon. This will include details of funding for community care.

Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the connection between the consumption of over-cooked red meat and malignant non-Hodgkin's lymphoma; and if he will make a statement. [6227]

Mr. Horam: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

The relationship between nutritional aspects of the diet and the development of cancer is presently being reviewed by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy. Its report is expected in 1997.

RHAs (Management Spending)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the level of management spending in each of the regional health authorities; and if he will make a statement. [6318]

Mr. Malone: Regional health authorities were abolished on 31 March 1996, with an expected saving of about £100 million by the end of 1997–98.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average time taken between a patient (a) being referred to and (b) seeing a specialist (i) for the United Kingdom, (ii) England, (iii) Scotland, (iv) Wales and (v) each regional health authority; and if he will make a statement. [6317]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally. Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, respectively.

Blood Donations (Mandatory Testing)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date mandatory testing of blood donations for Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease was introduced in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [6311]

Mr. Horam: There is no test available to detect any transmissible agent which may cause Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in the blood of living persons. There is no evidence of any risk of transmission of CJD through blood or blood products. However, as a precautionary measure, national blood service guidelines exclude from giving blood individuals with central nervous system diseases, or who have received human pituitary growth hormone or human gonadotrophin of pituitary origin, and people with a family history of CJD.

Cottage Hospitals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cottage hospitals (a) opened and (b) closed in each health authority area, in each year since 1979. [6315]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally.

NHS Drugs Bill

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS drugs bill in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [6319]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is shown in the table.

TREASURY

Euro

Mr. Renton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom banking system of the TARGET clearing system proposed for the euro. [3095]

Mrs. Angela Knight: TARGET—trans-European automated real-time gross settlement express transfer — will be a payment system to allow high-value euro payments to be settled in real time rather than at the end of the trading day in the European Community. Real-time gross settlement systems in member states which participate in the single currency will be interconnected. Real-time gross settlement systems of member states which do not adopt the single currency will be able to connect to TARGET to process the euro as a foreign currency. It is not yet apparent to what extent TARGET will be used in preference to other payments systems by banks in the United Kingdom, whether or not the United Kingdom adopts the single currency.

The European Monetary Institute has responsibility for developing TARGET and work is continuing on many of its operational details. The final decisions on TARGET will be for the governing council of the European central bank. The Bank of England is fully involved in preparatory work in the EMI and the Governor of the Bank of England is a member of the council of the EMI.

Information and Publicity (Staff)

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost for staff employed full-time or part-time by his Department, to provide information and publicity in 1996–97. [3572]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The budgeted cost is £139,309.

Public Relations

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost assumed in his Department's budget for people employed full-time or part-time to work on the press and the media in 1996–97. [3576]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The budgeted cost of staff employed full time or part time in the press office to work on press and media in 1996–97 is £418,916.

Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of recital 13 of the draft negotiation on surveillance and co-ordination of budgetary positions. [5030]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Recital 13 merely refers to a regulation yet to be tabled by the Commission for stability programmed for member states with a derogation including for this purpose the United Kingdom. The Commission's thinking so far on these programmes is set out in the Commission communication "Reinforced economic convergence procedures and the new Exchange Rate Mechanism" of 16 October 1996 (COM(96) 498). This was submitted to Parliament with an explanatory memorandum on 31 October. No formal proposal has yet been made by the Commission and these procedures all remain to be negotiated and settled by the Council of Ministers in due course.

National Lottery and Pools (Taxation)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlie the taxation rates relating to (a) the national lottery and (b) football pools. [5247]

Mr. Oppenheim: The rate of lottery duty was set at 12 per cent. taking into account the extent to which spending was likely to be diverted from other taxed activities, including other forms of betting and gaming. The rate was set with the intention of being broadly revenue neutral.

The rates for the other betting and gaming duties have been set taking into account, among other things, the rates their markets could bear. The reductions in the rate of pool betting duty over recent years have been made to take into account pressure on the pool betting industry.

Employment (Young People)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proportion of young people aged 18 to 24 years were in temporary employment in (a) England and Wales and (b) London in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96; and what was the proportion in the work force as a whole; [5280]

(2) what was the unemployment rate for 16 to 24-year-olds in (a) England and Wales and (b) London in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96; and what was the national average; [5281]

(3) what proportion of the work force was aged 18 to 24 years in (a) England and Wales and (b) London in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96. [5279]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Don Foster, dated 27 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your recent questions asking about 16–24 year olds in temporary employment, unemployment and the proportion of the workforce they constitute.

The information available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) is shown in the attached tables.

The first year for which consistent data is available for all the tables is 1984. The available figures are for spring quarters from the LFS, i.e. March to May of each year. Claimant unemployment rates by age are only available for the UK as a whole and are published quarterly in table 2.15 of Labour Market Trends, available in the House of Commons Library. Information for England and Wales and London is only available from the LFS which uses the internationally standard International Labour Organisation (ILO) definition of unemployment. This is people without a job who were available to start work in the two weeks following their LFS interview and who had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to the interview or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained. The ILO unemployment rate is all those ILO unemployed as a percentage of the economically active (i.e. those who are either in employment or are ILO unemployed).

I hope this is helpful.

Abortions

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the figures for the number of terminations of pregnancy carried out in the first quarter of 1996; and if he will set out with them the equivalent figures for the same period in 1995. [5432]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 27 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the publication of the latest abortion statistics.

Provisional figures relating to notifications of terminations performed under the Abortion Act 1967 during the March quarter of 1996 will be published on 21 November 1996. Equivalent figures for the same period in 1995 are available in 'Legal abortions March quarter 1995' ONS (formerly OPCS) Monitor series AB 96/1 which was published on 30 January 1996.

Unemployment-related Benefit Claims

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people have made an unemployment-related benefit claim since September 1990 (a) in Great Britain as a wholes, (b) by standard English region, (c) in Scotland and (d) in Wales; [5461]

(2) how many people have made between one and five unemployment-related benefit claims since September 1990 (a) for Great Britain as a whole and (b) by (i) standard English region, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales. [5462]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on how many people have experienced at least one spell of unemployment since September 1990, by number of spells and region.

Rwanda Inquiry

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contents of the letters from the chairman of the international commission of inquiry on Rwanda dated 30 November 1995, 18 December 1995 and 26 August 1996; and when he responded to those letters. [5497]

Mr. Oppenheim: The letters of 30 November 1995, 18 December 1995 and 26 August 1996 were not received by Customs and Excise. Customs was, therefore, originally unable to respond but has recently obtained copies of the letters of 30 November 1995 and 18 December 1995 and has found that they were requests relating to customs investigations which had already been the subject of discussion between customs investigators and Commission officials on 10 January 1996. The letter of 26 August recalled the two earlier letters.

The Commission has expressed complete satisfaction with the co-operation received from the UK Government.

Arms Sales (Prosecutions)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what investigations have taken place into the role of Mil-Tec in supplying arms to the former Rwandan Government; and if he will make a statement; [5993]

(2) if he will prosecute any individual involved in breaking the UN embargo on the supply of arms to Rwanda. [5994]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The investigation and prosecution of any alleged breaches of UK legislation implementing arms embargoes is a matter for the commissioners of Customs and Excise. Anyone in possession of information which might suggest that offences have been committed should make that material available to the commissioners.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what prosecutions have been pursued against British companies in breach of UN arms embargoes or in breach of EU arms embargoes; and what was the relevant export destination. [5777]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 25 November 1996]: There have been a number of UN and EU arms embargoes stretching back over many years. Prosecutions undertaken have been made under UK general export control legislation and do not necessarily identify the embargoes which underlay the prosecutions. Identification of the underlying embargo, to the extent that it would now be possible, would be at disproportionate cost.

Yorkshire Electricity

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total amount received by the Exchequer from Yorkshire Electricity for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [6108]

Mr. Jack: Details of the tax affairs of identified taxpayers are confidential.

Taxation Offices (Stoke-on-Trent)

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what catchment areas are served by (a) the Leek tax district office and (b) the Stoke tax district office. [6294]

Mr. Jack: The catchment area of Leek tax district extends from just south of Biddulph in the west skirting Stoke-on-Trent to just north of Uttoxeter at is most southerly point. It then follows the Derbyshire/Staffordshire boundary northwards extending further north to include Buxton.

The catchment area of the Stoke tax districts includes the Stoke-on-Trent and Newcastle-under-Lyme conurbation, together with an area to the south and west broadly bounded by the M6 to the east, Eccleshall to the south, and Woore to the west.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for consultation in respect of the proposals set out in phase 3 of the new office structure programme of the Inland Revenue as regards Leek and Stoke offices; and if he will make a statement. [6293]

Mr. Jack: Early planning for the final stage—stage 3—of the Inland Revenue's office restructuring programme, covering the years 1998 to 2002, is under way. Consultation has been taking place with Inland Revenue staff and trade unions in Stoke and Leek to examine the options for each office.

VAT Overpayments

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to meet representatives of industry to discuss the implications of the High Court decision that Customs and Excise has been acting illegally in deferring payment on legitimate claims for backdate VAT; what alternative proposals he is considering to ensure that measures announced on 18 July meet the requirements of EU law; and if he will make a statement. [6074]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 26 November 1996]: Customs and Excise has issued a business brief outlining its responses to the High Court's decision of 19 November on the judicial review cases. More generally, the House will soon have an opportunity of debating our proposals for the capping of refund claims. I am confident that the proposals that the House will consider meet the requirements of EU law.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many out of court settlements have been reached by HM Customs and Excise in cases involving the repayment of overpaid VAT since 18 July; and if he will make a statement. [5943]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 26 November 1996]: A number of settlements have been reached where refund claims made before 18 July have been paid in full owing to undue delay on the part of Customs and Excise in dealing with such claims at the time. Figures are not held centrally of the number involved.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, following the decision by the High Court regarding backdated VAT, he will refund overpaid VAT to those not directly involved in the judgments for the period since 18 July; and if he will make a statement. [6075]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 26 November 1996]: Arrangements have been put to make repayments, including to those who were not directly involved in the judgments. Local VAT offices have been given guidance about the order in which agreed claims are to be dealt with. Businesses to whom payments are made are being told that the amounts may be recovered if Parliament approves the necessary provisions in the course of the Budget debate.

Ministry of Defence Property Sales

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if receipts from the sale of Ministry of Defence homes will be treated as a capital inflow in respect of the balance of payments in statistics produced by the Central Statistical Office. [6217]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 26 November 1996]: The sale of Ministry of Defence homes, for which contracts were exchanged on 24 September 1996, was to Annington Homes. This is a UK-registered company, so no capital inflows will be recorded in the balance of payments statistics.

Personal Investment Schemes (Tax Relief)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of pension equity plans schemes to the Exchequer in the current financial year; what it was in 1994–95 and 1995–96; and what he estimates it will be in 1997–98; [4812]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of venture capital trust schemes from the inception of VCT until the end of the current financial year; and what he estimates it will be in 1997–98; [4813]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost of Tax-exempt special savings account schemes to the Exchequer in the current financial year; what it was in 1994–95 and 1995–96; and what he estimates it will be in 1997–98. [4814]

Mr. Jack: The available information is in the table:

Estimated cost of tax relief[1]

£ million

	1994–95	1995–96[2]	1996–97[2]
PEPs[3]	325	450	600
TESSAs[4]	350	450	350
VCTs[5]	—	50	80

[1] These estimates give the cost of tax relief on an accruals basis. The figures are tentative and subject to a wide margin of error.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Including the CGT cost of capital gains with PEPs.
[4] The cost of TESSAs falls for 1996–97 due to the reduction in tax charge on savings income from the basic rate to the lower rate and the introduction of follow-up accounts starting with only the capital (but none of the interest or bonuses) from the first TESSA.
[5] Including the CGT costs of deferral reliefs and exempting gains from tax.

The costs for 1997–98 will depend on future levels of take-up and rates of investment return.

Private Finance Panel

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the extended life of the private finance panel and the provision of grant in aid. [6717]

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has agreed that the life of the private finance panel be extended to 31 March 1998. Grant in aid to meet the running costs of the private finance panel executive, which provides administrative and other assistance to the panel, will be sought in estimates for HM Treasury's vote, class XVI, vote 1.

Gold Reserves (Hong Kong)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his plans in respect of the gold reserves currently held by the Hong Kong Government. [6197]

Mr. Hanley: I have been asked to reply.

The Hong Kong Government's gold reserves, and the other assets of the exchange fund, will be transferred to the Hong Kong special administrative region government on 1 July 1997. The fund will be managed by the HKSARG in accordance with the laws of the Hong Kong special administrative region.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of gold held by the Hong Kong government. [6195]

Mr. Hanley: I have been asked to reply.

The Hong Kong Government hold, through the exchange fund, about 2 tons of gold. This represents less than 0.05 per cent. of the fund's total assets.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5355]

Mr. Willetts: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer programme. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a programme.

The Cabinet Office, Office of Public Services and its agencies are at present responsible for 12 major software systems. In addition, the Department uses proprietary operating and applications software products in support of office administration.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5346]

Mr. Willetts: The Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and its agencies use a number of proprietary software packages and for these information on the number of programmes or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

The Department is carrying out an inventory of that bespoke software which is likely to still be in use in 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Official Report (Internet)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Official Report became fully available on the Internet; and what is its address. [5655]

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for publication of the Official Report rests with the House of Commons Commission. I can, however, confirm that the Official Report became fully available on the Internet on 24 October with publication of the proceedings for the first day of the new Session. The Internet address is http://www.parliament.the—stationery—office.co.uk/pa/cm/cmhansrd.htm.

The Deputy Prime Minister [holding answer 25 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term-contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual, there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the recent findings contained in the fourth report (HC 380, Session 1995–96) of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in respect of the adequacy of the £100 compensation payment offered by the Child Support Agency for distress and inconvenience caused to alleged absent parents who have been erroneously identified; and what plans he has to raise the level of compensation. [4757]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The Government are currently considering the report by the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration which was published on 29 October 1996, and their response will be published in due course.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tony Benn, dated 26 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will provide data on the number of claims for Disablement Benefit which are adjudicated upon within 33 days and 66 days in respect of (a) industrial accident claims, (b) prescribed diseases and (c) respiratory diseases, (i) nationally, (ii) for the East Midlands Region, (iii) for (1) North Derbyshire, (2) North Nottinghamshire, (3) Mid Derbyshire and (4) South Derbyshire benefit offices; and if he will list the waiting times in respect of assessments for Disablement Benefit for each of the above categories.

The information is not available in the format requested. The current targets for clearance of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit claims are 60% within 85 days and 90% within 175 days. Statistics are kept for Benefits Agency Districts, not by geographical regions. Information on respiratory diseases and waiting times in respect of assessments is not available separately.

Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the current value of each benefit and capital or income limit which was not increased in April, indicating the date from which that value applied and the value which would result from increasing it in April 1997 in line with prices and average earnings since it was last increased or introduced; [6308]

(2) if he will list for each benefit and each capital or income limit which is not to be increased in April 1997, the reasons for not doing so and the current value of each such benefit or limit; from what date that value applied; and what value would have resulted from increasing it in line with prices and average earnings since it was last increased or since it was introduced. [6307]

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 18 December 1995, Official Report, columns 887–90.

Mr. Burt: The information is contained in "Social protection in the Member States of the European Union"—(the Missoc tables 1995—published by the European Commission, a copy of which is in the Library. Because of differences in the social security systems of the member states, many of which have earnings-related benefits, straightforward comparisons of benefit rates are not possible.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases directions were issued by the clerk to the social security appeal tribunal covering the Newport, Gwent, area in each week up to 8 November under regulation 22(1) of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1995 as amended with effect from 21 October; and how many (a) appellants and (b) adjudication officers have requested oral hearings in response to those directions. [6309]

HOME DEPARTMENT

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5515]

Mr. Howard: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a program. Most of my Department's information technology systems are supported by outside suppliers, so this information is known only to them. The major applications which are supported in-house are those of the police national computer, which has some 10,000 programs.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5514]

Mr. Howard: Most of my Department's information technology systems are supported by outside suppliers, so this information is known only to them. The major applications which are supported in-house are those of the police national computer, which have some 1.5 million lines of code.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5490]

Mr. Howard: Policy appraisal guidance covering consideration of equal opportunities and equal treatment issues has been in place in the Home Office since 1989. The guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. The Department received revised guidance from the Department for Education and Employment in July this year and is currently considering how best to update existing guidance in line with this.

The recent Government report "One Year On" outlines action taken by Government, including my Department, to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6446]

Mr. Howard: The following table shows the number of women currently employed by the Home Office at each civil service grade. The statistical information has been supplied from databases, which are currently being updated, held by the information technology unit of the central personnel management unit, the Directors General of Her Majesty's Prison Service and of the Forensic Science Service, and the chief executives of the United Kingdom Passport Agency and of the Fire Service College.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6475]

Mr. Howard: In September 1992—when annual monitoring data for 1992–93 were collected—of the total staff employed by the Home Office and its agencies, 26.2 per cent. were women. However, this figure rises to 50 per cent. if the Prison Service is excluded.

Casinos

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he had had with the chairman of the Wales tourist board concerning the relaxation of the casino regulations in Welsh resorts and cities under the pilot scheme. [5906]

Mr. Kirkhope: In July 1996, the Wales tourist board proposed that we should add Llandudno to the list of new permitted areas for casinos. We carefully considered this, but concluded that it would fall outside the criteria proposed by the Government.

We have sent our 12 November consultation paper to the chairman of the Wales tourist board. Comments are invited by 31 January, and we will take these into account when we make final decisions.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the new measures announced on 9 December 1994 for the admission of overseas domestic workers will make the written agreement between employer and employee enforceable as a contract in the British courts. [5882]

Mr. Kirkhope: The position of overseas domestic workers is no different from that of other employees in this respect. Contractual terms are matters for employers and employees to agree. Once agreed, they are legally binding and, in cases on non-compliance, employees can take action for breach of contract through the civil courts or, in certain circumstances, through industrial tribunals.

Miss Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions his Department has had with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for Education and Employment regarding monitoring alleged abuse and exploitation of overseas domestic workers in the United Kingdom. [5883]

Mr. Kirkhope: Domestic workers who are abused by their employers are advised to contact the police. Information about this is set out in the leaflet issued to domestic workers before arrival in the United Kingdom. These arrangements are kept under general review by the Government Departments concerned.

Miss Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had as to the feasibility of allowing overseas domestic workers in the United Kingdom to change employers. [5881]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have received a number of representations in support of allowing overseas domestic workers to change employers, but we consider that this would be contrary to the purpose of the scheme, inconsistent with our immigration controls and against the interest of the resident labour force. Each case involving a domestic worker who wishes to remain in the United Kingdom after having left his or her employer is carefully considered and account is taken of any compassionate circumstances.

Sexually Explicit Material

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the outcome of recent negotiations with the National Federation of Retail Newsagents on the subject of the display of sexually explicit material appearing in newspapers such as Sunday Sport. [5776]

Mr. Sackville: The Government share public concern about the manner in which the Sunday Sport is displayed in many newsagents. I regret that the National Federation of Retail Newsagents has not accepted that its members should display the Sunday Sport on the top shelf only. We are now considering what further action is open to us.

Knives

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued under the offensive weapons legislation in respect of the right of those selling (a) fish, (b) meat and (c) other foodstuffs from vehicles to carry in the vehicle suitable knives; and if he will make a statement. [5856]

Mr. Maclean: None. Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 makes it an offence to carry a knife in public, but provides that it is a defence for a person to prove that he had good reason or lawful authority for having the knife with him, or that he had it with him for use at work, for religious reasons, or as part of any national costume.

Pupils (Drugs)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures police forces are taking in conjunction with local education authorities to warn pupils of the dangers of drug taking. [5891]

Mr. Maclean: As part of the Government's strategy "Tackling Drugs Together", each force has developed its own drugs strategy. One aspect of this is that police forces will continue to assess their role in drug prevention work in schools in close liaison with the local education authorities and school governing bodies over the three years of the strategy. Each force is taking measures which it considers would best fit in with local arrangements and priorities. For example, Greater Manchester police has appointed schools liaison officers on each division to work with schools on designing and delivering lessons on drug misuse.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of violent offences against the person consist of incidents of domestic violence. [5893]

Mr. Maclean: No information regarding the relationship of victim and suspect for offences of violence against the person recorded by the police is routinely collected by the Home Office. However, the 1996 British crime survey estimates that 27 per cent. of incidents of wounding and common assault in 1995 were defined as domestic violence, which includes incidents involving partners, ex-partners, household members and other relatives, irrespective of location, and covers both male and female victims.

Seals

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide continuing protection for seals under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, following the expiry of the order laid under section 3 (i) in 1990. [7031]

Mr. Sackville: I have now laid before Parliament the Conservation of Seals (England) Order 1996, which provides permanent close season protection for common seals and grey seals for three years in an area stretching along the North sea coast from the border between England and Scotland to Newhaven on the south coast. The order will come into force on 19 December, to coincide with the expiry of the order laid in 1993.

Gender Indemnity Legislation

Dr. Lynn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in producing a paper giving the range of policy options for Ministers on the issues raised by the Gender Identity (Registration and Civil Status) Bill introduced by the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile). [6269]

Mr. Sackville: These issues are kept under continual review.

Wheelclamping

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library his proposals for the codes of practice on wheelclamping. [6123]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no proposals for code of practice to regulate wheelclamping on private land. We are still considering what action, if any, should be taken to regulate wheelclamping, including proposals for codes of practice which we have received. We shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Detainees (Case Reviews)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a person detained in prison for an immigration offence is kept informed of reviews of their case by the immigration services. [6212]

Mr. Kirkhope: Those detained in a prison or a detention centre under the powers contained in the immigration Act 1971 are advised in writing by the immigration service on a monthly basis of developments in their case. Detained asylum claimants receive separate monthly progress reports on their applications from the asylum directorate.

Mr. Raghbir Singh

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 636, concerning Raghbir Singh, when he expects to give a substantive reply. [6575]

Mr. Howard: Shortly.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 644 on IT projects, what is his Department's definition of disproportionate cost. [6703]

Mr. Howard: When it is estimated that the cost of providing the information requested would exceed £450.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6457]

Mr. Howard: The Department currently makes available 167 subsidised nursery places for children under five at 13 different locations. Emergency nursery care is usually available at these locations for employees whose normal child care provision breaks down. There are also subsidised holiday playscheme places at four different locations for children who are between five and 12 years old.

In 1992, there were 91 subsidised nursery places available at six locations and holiday playschemes were provided at three locations.

The number of employees who have used the nurseries and playschemes since 1992 are shown in the following table:

Number of employees who have used child care facilities since 1992

Year	Nursery users	Playscheme users
1992	130	67
1993	127	84
1994	174	110
1995	183	123
1996	184	140

Police Assistance

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that special constables, lay visitors and other volunteers providing assistance to the police are properly insured against personal accident risks; and if he will make a statement. [4648]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The Government recognise the valuable contribution of volunteers who assist the police and agree that police authorities should have powers to enable them to provide personal accident insurance for voluntary assistance. We are considering changes to police regulations to improve the provision of compensation for injury to special constables. The Government are looking to support primary legislation on police authorities and the power to hold personal accident insurance for other voluntary assistants in the current Session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

New Members (Induction Courses)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what plans the House authorities have for induction courses for new hon. Members. [6619]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 17 July to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle), Official Report, columns 522–23.

In addition to the measures listed in my earlier reply, a card, of credit card size, is being printed to provide hon. Members with the extension numbers of key administrative offices and services within the House.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many contracts his department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3819]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has had no contracts with EDS Scicon. I am not responsible for any agencies.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6479]

Mr. Streeter: As at 31 December 1992, 63.55 per cent. of staff in the Lord Chancellor's Department were women. As at 31 December 1993 that proportion had risen to 64.18 per cent.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6447]

Mr. Streeter: For the Lord Chancellor's Department headquarters and associated offices, the Court Service and the Public Trust Office, the information is set out in the table.

Civil Service grade	Number of women
Grade 1	0
Grade 2	0
Grade 3	1
Grade 4	1
Grade 5	10
Grade 6	21
Grade 7	94

HEO	582
EO	1,510
AO	3,555
AA	308
Support Grade	1,463

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5477]

Mr. Streeter: In July of this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. The guidance has been issued to senior officials in the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6458]

Mr. Streeter: At present, subsidised child care in 13 nurseries and 18 holiday playschemes is provided to employees in the Lord Chancellor's Department, including the Court Service and Public Trust Office. In 1992, three nurseries and nine playschemes were in operation. For the years 1992 to 1995 inclusive, information on the number of employees using child care facilities is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, since 1 January 1996 to date, 54 employees used Departmental nurseries and 66 employees used Departmental playscheme places.

Family Law

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those prescribed circumstances which he proposes should apply in order for a party not to be required to attend an information meeting under section 8(2) of the Family Law Act 1996 indicating the qualifications necessary to be an information provider and the probable locations of information meetings. [5683]

Mr. Streeter: In accordance with section 8(10) of the Act, the Department is currently consulting on the provision of information.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what conditions are to be applied by the Department in exercising the power to make grants under section 22(1)(a) of the Family Law Act 1996; if marriage support organisations with a Christian ethos are able to secure grants under this section; and what arrangements have been made for organisations to make applications for funding under this section. [5682]

Mr. Streeter: The Lord Chancellor announced on 6 November that he was inviting tenders for a programme of pilot projects in order to identify types of service with particular potential for reducing the incidence of marriage breakdown and its consequent cost. The Department's standard conditions of contract will apply to the programme. All bids which meet the contract conditions will be evaluated on merit. Marriage support organisations of any religious affiliation, or none, will be eligible for funding. The closing date for submission of bids is 17 January 1997.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made on the drafting of rules, orders or regulations to accompany the Family Law Act 1996; what consultation he proposes and with which organisations; and what is the proposed timetable for the laying of the relevant statutory instruments before the House. [5681]

Mr. Streeter: It is the Government's intention to implement part IV of the Family Law Act 1996 in October 1997; work has begun towards implementation of all other parts of the Act. Preliminary consultation on the court structure for part IV has already taken place with a range of interested organisations and further consultation is scheduled over the next few months. It is too early to compile a proposed timetable for laying the relevant instruments before the House.

Marriage Counselling

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he has taken to place contracts for the promotion of marriage counselling under section 23 of the Family Law Act 1996. [5679]

Mr. Streeter: Consultation on, and consideration of, the necessary arrangements for funding marriage counselling under section 23 will be carried forward early in 1997.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for the last and current financial year, the organisations and bodies funded by his Department for the provisions of (a) marriage counselling, (b) research into the causes of marital breakdown and (c) research into the ways of preventing breakdown, indicating the amount of such funding in each case. [5680]

Mr. Streeter: My Department's provision of funding by way of grant in aid in the last and current financial years to marriage support and research organisations is set out in the table. The figures in the table show funding for the complete financial years 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5525]

Mr. Streeter: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a program. However, the Department is at present responsible for 16 major software systems.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5524]

Mr. Streeter: The Department is building an inventory of systems and software likely to still be in use in 2000 as part of its strategy for dealing with the 2000 date change issue, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete. However, the Department has approximately 3.75 million lines of computer code in its major in-house systems which are currently in use.

The Department also uses a number of proprietary software packages and for these, information on the number of programmes or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

ENVIRONMENT

Construction Regulations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by the Health and Safety Executive in its implementation project for the Construction (Design and Management) Regulations 1994; how many visits have been made by Health and Safety Executive inspectors between 1 April 1995 and 30 September 1996 to (a) clients, (b) planning supervisors, (c) designers and (d) contractors; and how many such visits (i) have been undertaken and (ii) are planned for the period 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997. [6215]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive provisional numbers of head office visits between 1 April 1995 and 30 September 1996 to the various categories were: (a) clients—559; (b) planning supervisors—586; (c) designers—457; (d) principal contractors—542. The number of visits completed since 1 October 1996 is not available centrally. In order to meet the minimum project targets, the outstanding numbers of visits are: clients—286; planning supervisors—96; designers—130; principal contractors—0. Due to the extension of the project period, these visits will be completed by 30 September 1997.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors have been specifically allocated by the Health and Safety Executive to work on the Construction (Design and Management) Regulations 1994 implementation project; and for what period. [6198]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive has allocated 20 extra inspectors to the normal construction allocation to enable 40 inspector years to be spent on the Construction (Design and Management) Regulations 1994 implementation project. The project period was to be 24 months from April 1995. Following a review, the project has now been extended until the end of September 1997. The 40 inspector years will be spread over this extended period.

Mine Water Pollution

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase monitoring of mine water pollution in the north-east; and if he will make a statement. [6203]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Agency is responsible for monitoring the water environment in England and Wales, and carries out regular surveys of river quality as part of its general quality assessment programme. It also monitors rivers at potable water abstraction points as well as individual discharges, including those from abandoned mines. The parameters measured include those metals, such as iron, which are found in mine waters.

Over the past two years, the agency has increased the monitoring of gravitational discharges from abandoned mines in the north-east in order to obtain more information on the impact of such discharges on surface waters. The individual sample results from all these surveys are publicly available.

The scale and type of mine water monitoring in the future will continue to be determined by the agency and will reflect its need for the information.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the sums devoted from public funds to the Energy Saving Trust; and what was the pay of the chairman for the last available year. [4855]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I am pleased to be able to announce an increase in the funding for the Energy Saving Trust. Planned funding for the years 1997–98 to 1999–2000 has been increased by a total of £21.5 million. This means that our public expenditure plans now incorporate funding of £14 million for the trust in 1999–2000 and increased funding of £32.5 million over the years 1997–98 and 1998–99. In addition, grants of up to £25 million have been made available to the Energy Saving Trust in 1996–97. The pay of its chairman is a matter for the Energy Saving Trust, which is an independent private company.

Sheffield Development Corporation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the jobs created in the Sheffield development corporation area, as part of developments which originated after the SDC came into existence as the planning authority for its area, were relocations of jobs from (a) within the SDC area and (b) outside the SDC area; [6080]

(2) how many jobs have been created in the Sheffield development corporation area as part of developments which originated after the SDC came into existence as the planning authority for its area. [6081]

Sir Paul Beresford: By 31 March 1997, when Sheffield development corporation comes to the end of its lifetime, over 11,000 jobs will have been created in developments originating since the SDC became the planning authority.

Of these, some 300 result from relocations within the SDC area and over 8,000 are in businesses new to the area.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he collates on the effect of development in the Sheffield development corporation area since its inception on existing development and jobs outside the SDC area. [6082]

Sir Paul Beresford: The wider impact of Sheffield development corporation's activities on the local economy will be evaluated by consultants as part of a planned evaluation of the SDC and other urban development corporations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the criteria and basis of the calculations for the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1997–98. [6086]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, East (Mr. Congdon) on 27 November, Official Report, columns 242–44.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6434]

Sir Paul Beresford: In September 1992, the proportion of women employed by my Department was 41 per cent.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6464]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department currently provides workplace nursery places for its employees in Westminster, Bristol and at the Building Research Establishment. It provides holiday playscheme places in Westminster, Birmingham, Bristol, Bedford and at BRE. In 1992, it provided nursery places in Westminster and at BRE and holiday playscheme places in Westminster, Birmingham, Bristol, Bedford and at BRE. The number of employees using the facilities exceeded:

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6438]

Sir Paul Beresford: The number of women currently employed by my Department and its executive agencies, the Building Research Establishment, the Planning Inspectorate and the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre, at each civil service grade is as follows:

Purchase Grant Scheme

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the outcome of the consultation exercise on proposed rural exemptions from the purchase grant scheme for housing association tenants is; and if he will make a statement. [7028]

Mr. Curry: In last year's rural White Paper, we announced plans to exclude small rural villages from the new purchase grant scheme for housing association tenants, using a population guideline of 3,000 people. This intention was confirmed in the debates on the Housing Bill. Some 20,000 settlements meeting this criterion were identified and, since June, we have been consulting local authorities, housing associations, rural groups and others on detailed proposed designations for every county and area of England. We indicated that we would also be prepared to consider special cases for the exclusion of other settlements above the guideline population.

We have had over 350 replies raising over 800 queries about the detail of the designations. Each query has been carefully considered. As a result, over 270 settlements with a population of under 3,000 have been added to the proposed exclusions, and my Department has replied to each such query individually.

In addition, around 200 of the queries concerned settlements where the population exceeded 3,000 but where a special case was made about the settlement concerned. I have accepted the cases made for Benson in Oxfordshire, and Bassingbourne cum Kneesworth and Waterbeach in Cambridgeshire where the villages are adjacent to military bases, and their combined population figures are misleading. Each special case was considered carefully, and my Department also gave a group of settlements with populations close to the 3,000 guideline a further opportunity to make a fuller case for exemption. Of these, I have accepted that Porthleven in Cornwall and Bromyard in Hereford and Worcester should be exempted because they have identified that there would be particular difficulty in providing replacement properties in these settlements.

I hope to be able to lay the orders making rural designations before both Houses in the new year.

My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for housing in Wales has also consulted on a different approach to be used in Wales, and announced the outcome on 24 July 1996.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made on the financial management and policy review of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. [7030]

Mr. Gummer: The prior options stage of the financial management and policy review of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee has now been completed. Following consideration of the need for independent advice on radioactive waste management issues, and the appropriate mechanism for its provision, I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales are agreed that the committee should continue to operate at least for another five years.

The Government remain committed to a policy of radioactive waste disposal, based on sound science, and taking into account costs and benefits. There remains a need for Government action to be guided by independent expert advice, specifically relating to radioactive waste management, that complements advice from other bodies, including the Environment Agencies.

The structure and method of operation of the committee will now be considered. The review should be completed early next year, at which stage its conclusions will be published.

Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the Government have made to fund the leasehold enfranchisement advisory service after the present grant ceases in December. [7032]

Mr. Clappison: I am pleased to be able to announce that my Department has today written to the chief executive of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service with an offer of Government support for the next three years.

During the passage of the Housing Bill earlier this year, there was general agreement on both sides of the House that LEAS has provided an extremely valuable service over the last three years in guiding both landlords and tenants through the complexities of the leasehold enfranchisement procedures.

The offer of further grant is conditional on LEAS expanding its role beyond providing free initial advice to landlords and tenants on leasehold enfranchisement procedures, including the amendments to that legislation set out in the Housing Act 1996. In addition, LEAS will provide advice on the new measures in the Act aimed at resolving leasehold management disputes. I envisage that, in this respect, its most important task will be to help landlords and tenants make use of the new procedures allowing leasehold valuation tribunals to resolve such disputes.

LEAS is being offered a grant of £259,900 for the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 March 1998. In addition, LEAS has received offers of support from private sector organisations worth £32,250 over the same period. Subject to a satisfactory review of performance and continuing private sector support, I expect that further Government grant will be offered for the two subsequent financial years.

Local Government Ombudsman Service

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions have been reached on the review of the local government ombudsman service in England; and if he will make a statement. [7033]

Mr. Curry: In February 1996, I announced to the House, Official Report, column 402, that we were proceeding with the second stage of the review—focusing on the efficiency and effectiveness of the Commission for Local Administration in England as an investigatory body—in parallel with consulting interested parties on the wider issues raised about the CLA's future in the review's first stage. In August 1996, the second stage reviewer presented his report to my right hon. Friend and to the chairman of the CLA, and we concluded our consultation.

We have now carefully considered all the recommendations of both stages 1 and 2 of the review, together with all the comments that we received from our consultation. The CLA has also considered carefully those recommendations directed to it. I have today arranged for copies of a paper setting out our response to these recommendations to be placed in the Library of the House. I have also arranged for copies of the Review's second stage report to be placed in the Library.

On the issues raised by the review's first stage, we have concluded that there needs to be a wholly independent body—an ombudsman—to which citizens who are aggrieved in their dealings with public bodies can turn, if there is to be a guarantee that complaints of maladministration will be fully and equitably investigated. Accordingly, we confirm our earlier provisional view, which I told the House on 12 February, that the CLA's principal role should continue to be as a wholly independent, investigatory body for complaints of maladministration relating to local government in England. We also confirm our earlier view that there should in general continue to be a voluntary approach to the provision of local complaints systems in local government.

The review's second stage concludes that the cost of the CLA is a fraction of the cost of resolving a similar number of complaints through legal processes, and makes a range of recommendations for performance improvements covering issues of accountability, jurisdiction, powers, management systems and financial accountability, and quality of service. We believe that overall these recommendations provide a package of measures for significantly modernising and improving the local government ombudsman service in England, and we intend to take them forward as set out in the paper which I have today placed in the Library.

Housing Associations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to the recommendations relating to registered housing associations in the second report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life; and if he will make a statement. [7197]

Mr. Gummer: Copies of my response have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. I welcome the broad thrust of the recommendations as they affect the Housing Corporation and housing associations, and in future other social landlords registered with the Housing Corporation. In general, they reflect current Government policy.

SCOTLAND

Criminal Convictions

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland have a schedule of previous convictions which includes a qualifying offence as defined under clause 1 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill. [5129]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information supplied by the Scottish Criminal Records Office shows that currently there are some 12,700 people for whom the SCRO has a schedule of previous convictions which includes a qualifying offence as defined under clause 1 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill. It is not known which of these people are currently resident in Scotland. Of these 12,700 people convicted of qualifying offences, 3,300 were convicted in the High Court.

The information held by the SCRO does not identify whether a conviction for robbery involved a firearm. However, many of those convicted of robbery with a firearm are also convicted under one of sections 16 to 18 of the Firearms Act 1968 which counts as a qualifying offence.

Salmon

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Her Majesty's Government will make urgent representations to the EU Commission for measures to be put in place to safeguard the United Kingdom salmon industry through a minimum import price for salmon entering the United Kingdom market. [5819]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In view of the continued depressed state of the European market for farmed salmon, my right hon. Friend wrote to Commissioner Bonino on 22 November asking for the reintroduction of minimum import prices.

I trust that the Commission will respond quickly and positively to this request.

Legal Aid

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of legal aid applications in Scotland in (a) civil and (b) criminal cases are currently decided within six weeks. [6102]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1995–96, the percentage of civil legal aid applications which were decided within six weeks was 89 per cent. The equivalent figure for criminal legal aid applications was 100 per cent.

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report made to him by the Scottish Legal Aid Board following visits in 1995 to the USA and Canada in connection with the proposals contained in part V of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill; [6130]

(2) how many members and staff of the Scottish Legal Aid Board visited the USA and Canada in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and what was the cost of these visits. [6131]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No members of staff of the Scottish Legal Aid Board paid official visits to the USA and Canada in 1994–95 or 1995–96. One member of the board's senior staff holidayed in Canada in 1994–95 and took the opportunity of visiting the Public Defender's Office in Manitoba. The cost of this visit was met personally by the individual concerned. Although outwith the specified dates, in June 1996, a member of staff attended an international audit conference and took the opportunity to visit the Los Angeles county public defender. The cost of attending the conference was £1,720.

No report of either visit has been sent to me.

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the advantages of applying the provisions of part V of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill to advocates; and if he will make a statement. [6121]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As we estimate that only 6 per cent. of expenditure on criminal legal assistance involves advocates. It is not proposed to extend part V to them.

Methylated Spirits Abuse

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have taken place in each year under the terms of the Methylated Spirits (Sale by Retail) (Scotland) Act 1937 since 1966. [6361]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information required is not separately identifiable within the Scottish Office Home Department classification of crimes and offences.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has carried out in relation to the continuing abuse and misuse of methylated and surgical spirits. [6362]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No assessment has been carried out by the Scottish Office in relation to the abuse and misuse of methylated and surgical spirits.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Offences)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria the procurators fiscal take into account when deciding what action to take in relation to the prosecution of HGV offences reported to them by the Vehicle Inspectorate; and if he will make it his policy to ensure the percentage of prosecutions of HGV offences reported to procurators fiscal by the Vehicle Inspectorate is comparable to the percentage of prosecutions in England and Wales. [6365]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is responsible for prosecution policy in Scotland. Procurators fiscal have a discretion as to whether to take proceedings against persons reported to them by the Vehicle Inspectorate. Procurators fiscal also have available to them a number of alternatives to prosecution. They have to decide whether it is in the public interest to initiative proceedings. In doing so, procurators fiscal will have regard to a number of factors including whether there is sufficient evidence, the seriousness of the offence and any road safety implications, the age of the offence and whether there are any mitigating circumstances. The Lord Advocate does not consider comparability with the level of prosecutions in England to be a relevant criterion for determining prosecution policy in Scotland. There are significant differences between Scotland and England both as regards the evidential requirements and the availability of alternatives to prosecution, such as conditional offers under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 which applies only to Scotland.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes have taken place in the arrangements for utilising intensive care beds across Scotland since March 1995 with reference to procedure for the admission of patients to intensive care units. [6482]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Health boards in Scotland monitor closely the availability of intensive care and high dependency facilities for their residents and make any changes to the arrangements necessary. It is important for anyone who requires emergency access to an intensive care bed to be admitted as quickly and straightforwardly as possible. The NHS in Scotland will continue to build on the valuable information being collected already by the staff working in intensive care facilities in Scotland and to develop better means of sharing that information.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each financial year since 1 October 1990 the estimated savings in expenditure to dentists for NHS treatment of patients resulting from the introduction of the new payment scale for NHS dentistry. [6491]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available. Gross expenditure on NHS general dental services for the financial years since 1 October 1990 is contained in the table.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each financial year since 1989–90 (a) the number of courses of NHS dental treatment for each health board area in Scotland and (b) the total number of courses of NHS dental treatment in Scotland. [6490]

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, columns 655–56, what were the proposed annual savings for the 14 IT projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million, undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6701]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Of the 14 projects, eight have been commissioned and are in active use; six are still under development.

Six of the projects were necessary to fulfil statutory responsibilities under the common agricultural policy. The responsibilities were new ones, and consequently no savings were forecast or made.

One project was implemented to enable the Department to discharge its responsibility to provide resource accounts; in addition, savings are expected.

Three of the projects were necessary to replace systems over 10 years old running on the Department's obsolete mainframe computer. Savings will be made when the mainframe computer is decommissioned in 1997.

Two of the projects provided infrastructure for office automation across the Department, making an important contribution to overall running cost reductions.

Of the two remaining projects, one will improve services and increase efficiency, and the other is supporting the operations of the Scottish Prison Service.

Total estimated annual savings of up to £2.4 million are expected when all the projects are complete and fully operational.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6473]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 1 April 1992, women—working on either a full-time or part-time basis—accounted for 42 per cent. of employees in the Scottish Office core and its executive agencies, excluding the Scottish Prison Service. In the Scottish Prison Service, women accounted for 7 per cent. of employees at that date.

NHS Property Sales

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much revenue has been raised by (a) NHS trusts and (b) health boards through the disposal of surplus property for each of the last three years; and which bodies received this revenue. [6488]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total amount raised from the disposal of surplus property by NHS trusts and health boards for the last three years is as follows:

Health boards	£
1993–94	12,604,800
1994–95	16,513,100
1995–96[1]	12,893,600
NHS Trusts
1993–94	3,770,000
1994–95	2,880,000
1995–96[1]	5,549,000

[1] The figures for 1995–96 are provisional.

Trusts are permitted to retain a proportion of capital receipts. The remainder are remitted to the centre and used to fund the NHS capital programme.

Gas-fired Power Station, Gartcosh

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the reporter of the inquiry into the proposal for a gas-fired power station at Gartcosh to take account of evidence for the economic and social impact of that proposal in other parts of Scotland. [6681]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Office has written to the reporter outlining those matters of Government policy which my right hon. Friend considers to be most relevant to his decision upon the application to build a power station at Gartcosh. It has been made clear that decisions on the scope of the inquiry into the application are entirely for the reporter. It is therefore for the reporter to decide what evidence is relevant when conducting the inquiry and drawing up his recommendations.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the number of intensive care beds for each health board area in Scotland and the total population served and (b) the total number of intensive care beds in Scotland for each financial year since 1979. [6492]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the tables.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6455]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office provides child care facilities for its employees in two workplace nurseries. The first nursery opened in 1992 and 12 full-time places were made available. In 1995 we opened the second, which offers an additional 36 full-time places. At present, 63 employees use these facilities on a full and part-time basis. We do not hold statistics about the cumulative number of staff using the facilities each year.

Mental Health Guidance

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to issue the revised code of practice for the guidance of medical practitioners and others in accordance with the requirements of the Mental Health Act (Scotland) 1984, referred to in his answer of 24 May 1995, Official Report, column 638; and which persons and organisations are being consulted. [6660]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A revision of the current code of practice is now about to begin. This will take account of experience of recent legislation, including the new provisions relating to community care orders introduced by the Mental Health (Patients in the Community) Act 1995. There will be wide consultations with all relevant interests, including voluntary and professional organisations, before the new code is laid before Parliament.

Beaufort's Dyke

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the outcome of the recent survey work at Beaufort's dyke. [7162]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Copies of the final survey report produced by the Scottish Office marine laboratory at Aberdeen have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses today. The report confirms that there is no evidence of munitions having an adverse effect on the quality of the marine environment, or the living resources that it supports. It also confirms the results of the earlier survey which found that concentrations of munitions had been deposited outwith the Beaufort's dyke munitions disposal area. The main results of the survey are as follows:

- The levels of heavy metals throughout the survey area were within the ranges reported in sea bed sediments from other Scottish coastal areas, and similar to the levels previously reported in sediments from the Irish sea.
- There was no evidence of the chemical warfare agents phosgene or mustard gas. Analysis for munition-related determinands confirmed that the samples did not contain nitroglycerine, 2,4,6 trinitrotoluene, RDX or tetryl.
- Analysis of the edible flesh of commercially exploited fish and shellfish samples confirmed that the levels of heavy metals were within prescribed public health standards.
- Analysis of the edible flesh of commercially exploited fish and shellfish species collected from the northern end of the Beaufort's dyke trench confirmed that the samples did not contain nitroglycerine, 2,4,6, trinitrotoluene, RDX or tetryl.

Side-scan sonar, underwater television and pulse induction surveys confirmed that the centre of distribution of dumped munitions and munitions-related materials is located within, and immediately adjacent to, the north-east sector of the Beaufort's dyke explosives disposal site.

Low to high densities of dumped munitions, munitions-related materials and unidentified man-made debris were found in areas outside the charted explosives disposal ground.

The presence of low to high densities of dumped munitions, munitions-related materials and unidentified man-made debris at a number of discrete points in the area crossed by the proposed routing corridor for submarine electricity cables linking Scotland and Northern Ireland was confirmed.

Dumped munitions and munitions-related materials were not found in the area crossed by the submarine gas pipeline installed between Wigtown bay and the Republic of Ireland.

The hydrographer of the Navy will arrange for the relevant Admiralty charts to be updated as appropriate. Government Departments with regulatory responsibilities for marine engineering works will take full account of the survey's findings.

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will respond to the recommendations of the joint study group report which examined Scottish Natural Heritage; and if he will make a statement. [7163]

Mr. Kynoch: The report of the joint study group which examined Scottish Natural Heritage made a number of recommendations relating to its remit and operation. The most significant of these was that a revised statement of aims and objectives should be prepared for SNH. The statement, "Natural Priorities", has been published today. Copies are available in the Library of the House. A number of other recommendations were also made and have been considered. Those recommendations concerned with SNH's expenditure commitments and priorities will be taken into account during the Government's annual public expenditure survey. The recommendation that the joint study report should be the starting point for part 2 of the quinquennial review of SNH in 1997 will be addressed nearer the time of the quinquennial review itself. The remainder of the recommendations have been addressed, either in "Natural Priorities" itself or within SNH's own recently completed review of decision-making processes and organisational structures.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery (Northern Ireland)

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what is the average amount of money spent per week on the national lottery in Northern Ireland (a) overall and (b) per capita; [3842]

(2) what is the average amount of money spent per week on the national lottery in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland, (i) overall and (ii) per capita. [3844]

Mr. Sproat: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have, therefore, asked the Director General of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5523]

Mr. Hanley: Most of my Department's computer code is contained in commercially obtained software applications, operated under licence. The number of lines of such code is known only to suppliers.

We estimate that our bespoke software contains up to 10 million lines of code. We are analysing this to determine how much will be affected by the century date change, and the cost involved.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5522]

Mr. Hanley: The diplomatic wing and the Overseas Development Administration use a total of 326 software applications; at least 90 per cent. are based on commercial packages, which are regularly replaced as new versions become available.

Rights of Indigenous Peoples

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the United States draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples; and if he will make a statement. [5820]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are aware of public and parliamentary interest in this draft declaration. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has answered questions in the House and letters from colleagues on the matter.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 20, what were the proposed annual savings for the 12 IT projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6709]

Mr. Hanley: Investment is agreed only if it represents value for money. This can include cash savings and additional costs avoided, which are quantifiable, and quality improvements, which are not.

Quantifiable annual savings expected were £23.2 million largely in additional costs avoided rather than cash. Three projects are finished. but have not been operational long enough for full savings to be realised.

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 20, what are the proposed annual savings for the seven IT projects in the £1 million to £2 million band planned for 1997–98. [6708]

Mr. Hanley: Planning of these projets is still at an early stage and expected savings have not yet been fully quantified.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6452]

Mr. Hanley: This Department provides 38 nursery places for children aged from three months to five years. In addition, holiday playschemes are available during school holidays. In 1992, we provided 26 nursery places and additional holiday playscheme facilities.

The number of staff who used both types of child care facilities between 1992 and November 1996 is:

Year	Number of staff
1992	[1]34
1993	136
1994	[1]142
1995	164
1996	155

[1] Does not include figure for ODA.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6441]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have been asked to reply.

Provision for the acquisition and loss of British nationality by people connected with St. Helena is made by the British Nationality Act 1981. Most are British dependent territories citizens under the Act.

There are no plans to alter the legislation.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Vacant Posts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many posts for staff within the European Parliament have been advertised within the United Kingdom since the start of 1995; and if he will list in each case the amounts (a) spent on advertising these posts and (b) spent in filling the vacancies involved. [6355]

Mr. Freeman: The European Parliament is responsible for advertising its own vacancies and it would be for it to provide details relating to its recruitment costs. The European staffing unit of the Office of Public Service monitors the press and the Official Journal of the European Communities for vacancies in the European institutions as part of the vacancy information service operated for potential British candidates. Since the beginning of 1995, it has noted nine separate competitions in which the European Parliament was either wholly or partially involved. Some of these competitions were for an unspecified number of vacancies so it is not possible to give the number of posts involved.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6463]

Mr. Willetts: The child care facilities provided at present and since 1992 in the Departments and agencies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible and other areas which fall to the Cabinet Office Vote are as follows:

	Facilities since 1992	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Cabinet Office (OPS)	The Westminster holiday playscheme	10	6	12	13	29
Civil Service College	Workplace nursery	15	15	15	15	12
Central Computer and Telecommunication Agency	Nursery scheme under HMSO	7	9	7	11	4
Central Office of Information	The Westminster holiday playscheme	3	3	1	2	3
Property Advisors to the Civil Estate	Since 01 April 1996 nursery placement	—	—	—	—	1
Security Facilities Executive	None	—	—	—	—	—
The Buying Agency	None	—	—	—	—	—

Due to machinery of government changes earlier this year, the figures for the Property Advisors to the Civil Estate; Security Facilities Executive; and The Buying Agency are not centrally held.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, columns 52–53, what were the proposed annual savings for the seven IT projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million, undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6713]

Mr. Willetts: Of the seven IT projects in the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and its agencies, in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million undertaken since 1992 four related to the migration from centralised to decentralised IT systems to meet the needs of the corporate restructuring of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, now the privatised The Stationery Office.

A fifth project covered the costs for the development by the Chessington Computer Centre, now privatised, of an on-line integrated pay and personnel system.

A project to provide contemporary office automation systems in the Central Cabinet Office is in progress; the efficiency gains which are expected to result cannot be quantified in cash terms.

Within the Central Computer and Telecommunication Agency, the enhancement of existing office automation systems is estimated to have resulted in annual savings of more than £300,000 since 1992.

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, columns 52–53, what are the proposed annual savings for the seven IT projects planned for 1997–98. [6712]

Mr. Willetts: The seven IT projects planned for 1997–98 in the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and its agencies are mostly designed to bring up to date or enhance office automation and other support and communications facilities. The improved efficiency resulting from the new systems cannot be quantified in cash terms.

The exception is the Civil Service College, where the introduction of a new financial management system is expected to generate savings of up to £47,000 per annum.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Indonesia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reason for delay in agreement of the draft report by the National Audit Office into alleged links between British aid and arms sales to Indonesia; and when he expects a publication date. [6397]

Dr. Liam Fox: The timing of the publication of National Audit Office reports is a matter for the Comptroller and Auditor General. The National Audit Office report into alleged links between British aid and arms sales to Indonesia will be published on 29 November.

TRANSPORT

Airport Inspections (Europe)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the extent to which each country in the European civil aviation conference is screening checked in baggage and transfer baggage to a satisfactory standard; [5927]

(2) if he will list for each member of the European civil aviation conference the percentage of checked in baggage and transfer baggage screened for security purposes. [5928]

Mr. Bowis: All international transfer and unaccompanied baggage is at present subjected to security screening in the United Kingdom, and the introduction of 100 per cent. hold baggage screening is nearing completion. All ECAC member states have accepted that measures to screen all international hold baggage should be progressively introduced. They are individually responsible for achieving implementation to defined standards. It would not be appropriate for security reasons to provide further details.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when officials from Transec last inspected airports within Germany; and if they were satisfied with the results of the inspections. [5929]

Mr. Bowis: My Department does not inspect airports overseas, as these are under the jurisdiction of the relevant sovereign state. However, Transec inspectors do make visits to overseas airports to assess the security afforded to and conducted by British airlines.

Airports in Germany were last subject to such a visit in December 1994. It would be inappropriate for security reasons to comment on the results of this, or any other, security inspection.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if staff aboard freight trains using the channel tunnel are required to be fluent in both French and English. [5942]

Mr. Watts: This is not a condition for their employment.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6476]

Mr. Bowis: My Department's computerised personnel management systems record that on 31 March 1993, some 46 per cent. of the staff employed by my Department were women.

Women and Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6430]

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6460]

Mr. Bowis: It has not been possible to assemble the information requested in the time available. I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the information requested in the Library of the House.

MV Cap Afrique

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 633, (1) how many passengers the MV Cap Afrique is permitted to carry; [6614]

(2) how many crew the MV Cap Afrique was carrying when it sailed from Dover on 6 November. [6613]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 28 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Questions about the number of passengers and crew carried by the MV CAP AFRIQUE.

The Cap Afrique is permitted to carry 12 passengers. When it sailed from Dover at 17.30 hours on 6 November the ship was carrying 14 crew out of the total of 25 persons on board.

Aircraft Registration

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions (a) passenger and (b) cargo aircraft registered in (i) Anguilla, (ii) Antigua and Barbuda, (iii) Dominica, (iv) Grenada, (v) St. Lucia, (vi) St. Vincent, (vii) St. Kitts, (viii) Morocco and (ix) Suriname have flown into United Kingdom airports in the past 12 months. [4971]

Mr. Bowis: Not all categories of flight require specific Government permission, and my Department does not keep a record of every flight into the UK.

We are not aware of any commercial flights to the UK by aircraft registered in Anguilla, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, St. Kitts and Suriname.

In the cases of Antigua and Barbuda, we are aware of one cargo charter service by Seagreen Air Transport, a single flight by a Caribbean Winds aircraft leased to Monarch Airlines, and nine flights by a Skyjet aircraft leased by Caledonian Airways. In addition a Skyjet aircraft was leased by Excalibur Airways from 31 May until 26 June.

In the case of Morocco, Royal Air Maroc operates scheduled passenger services to the UK using Moroccan registered aircraft. In the past 12 months, these have averaged seven flights per week. In addition, they have operated two ad hoc cargo charter services.

Vehicle Excise Duty Evasion

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles have been scrapped following wheelclamping as a result of vehicle excise duty evasion; and if he will indicate the cost of the disposal of the vehicles. [6970]

Mr. Bowis: During the three month pilot scheme, 269 vehicles were scrapped. Costs were borne by the contractor.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total revenues generated from the wheelclamping of vehicles for vehicle excise duty evasion; and how many vehicles have been thus wheelclamped. [6969]

Mr. Bowis: The pilot wheelclamping scheme for vehicle excise duty evaders ran from February to May 1996 in five London boroughs. The scheme produced an extra £2.1 million in extra vehicle relicensing and £35,000 in declamping and other fees. Around 21,000 additional licences were purchased over the three-month period. A total of 541 vehicles were clamped.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles are currently in storage as a result of being wheelclamped as a result of vehicle excise duty evasion; and if he will indicate the cost of their storage. [6944]

Mr. Bowis: No vehicles are currently in storage as a result of the pilot wheelclamping scheme. Vehicles are held for a minimum period of five weeks before disposal.

Traffic Area Network

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the organisation of the traffic area network in the light of the forthcoming closure of the traffic area offices in Cardiff and Manchester. [7027]

Mr. Bowis: In the light of views expressed during consultation, we have decided to defer changes to the boundaries of the existing traffic areas. This will enable further work to be carried out on a new computer system for the traffic area network which may affect the organisation of work. It will also allow further consideration to be given to how traffic area boundaries should be re-drawn to meet concerns expressed in response to the consultation. As part of the future restructuring, it is planned to create a separate traffic area for Wales.

In the meantime, Mr. John Mervyn Pugh will remain traffic commissioner for both the west midland and the south wales traffic areas, operating from the traffic area office in Birmingham. Mr. Keith Waterworth, the traffic commissioner for the north eastern traffic area, will continue for the time being as traffic commissioner also for the north western traffic area, operating from the traffic area office in Leeds. Mr. Pugh will, however, be appointed as deputy traffic commissioner in the north western traffic area so that he can hear cases in north Wales on Mr. Waterworth's behalf. We also intend appointing a deputy traffic commissioner based in Wales to hear cases in both parts of the Principality. I will review the situation in a few months' time.

Franchising Director

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what revisions he has made of his instructions and guidance to the franchising director. [7026]

Sir George Young: I have today written to the franchising director enclosing a new, consolidated version of his objectives, instructions and guidance—OIG. This consolidated version, which is being produced for ease of reference, does not change the franchising director's objectives, nor does it materially alter his instructions and guidance, other than to omit those sections of the previous version of the OIG which are now out of date. I am placing a copy of my letter, and the attachments to it, in the Library of the House.

Channel Tunnel Fire

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are (a) the terms of reference and (b) the membership of the bodies conducting (i) the French formal inquiry into the channel tunnel fire, (ii) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority inquiry and (iii) the Eurotunnel inquiry; and if the evidence of each will be published in full. [5745]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 26 November 1996]: The terms of reference and the membership of the bodies conducting the French judicial inquiry and Eurotunnel's inquiry are a matter for these organisations. The membership of the safety authority is Eddy Ryder, Jeremy Beech, Vic Coleman, Sandra Caldwell, Peter Moss, Roger Lejuez, Jean-Pascal Cogez, Pierre Desfray, Mr. Barthelemy, Claude Charmeil; the terms of reference for the safety authority inquiry is a matter for this authority. The safety authority has been asked if it will publish a report on its inquiry into the causes and consequences of the HGV fire on 18 November 1996.

Airfields (Yorkshire)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of airfields in Yorkshire. [5734]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The following 26 active civil aerodromes are in the county of North Yorkshire or within Barnsley, Bradford, Calderdale, Doncaster, East Riding of Yorkshire, Kingston upon Hull, Kirkless, Leeds, Rotherham, Sheffield, Wakefield or York unitary authorities:

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 November. [5197]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 November. [5196]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Ministerial Statements

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the circumstances in which it is acceptable for Ministers to make a statement which they know to be untrue on the Floor of the House; and what changes have been made to that list since March 1994. [6542]

The Prime Minister: There has been no change in the position as I stated it in 1994. It is clearly of paramount importance that Ministers give accurate and truthful information to the House. If they knowingly fail to do this, they should relinquish their positions, except in the quite exceptional circumstances, of which a devaluation or time of war or other danger to national security have been quoted as examples.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5412]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 November 1996]: For these purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 27 November, by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teaching Posts and Pupil Numbers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the change in full-time equivalent teaching posts in England between 1995 and 1996 in numbers and as a percentage; and what were the equivalent figures for pupil numbers in the same period. [6016]

Mr. Forth: Information on teaching posts is not collected centrally. Information on pupils and teachers is shown in the table.

Full-time equivalent numbers of pupils and teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools

England	Position in January each year
			Change
	1995	1996	Number	Percentage
Pupils	7,182,600	7,273,400	90,900	1.3
Teachers[1]	368,920	369,110	190	0.1

[1] Includes both qualified and unqualified teachers.

Computerised Administration

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies her Department has undertaken (a) with and (b) without the assistance of the National Council for Educational Technology, of the benefits to schools of computerised administration systems, with special reference to the advantages of computerised student records and associated paperless data input devices with remote link to the office by radio waves. [5872]

Mr. Robin Squire: No studies on this topic have been undertaken by the Department.

Mrs. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the reports and other publications published by her Department working with the National Council for Educational Technology that treat microcomputer-based school administration systems as their main topic. [5870]

Mr. Squire: No reports of this nature have been produced by the Department in conjunction with the National Council for Educational Technology.

University Lecturers (Pay)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will urge the Universities and Colleges Employers Association to seek arbitration for future pay disputes; and if she will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's reason for not referring university lecturers' pay to a standing pay review body. [6399]

Mr. Forth: Given the level of financial and academic autonomy that universities and colleges enjoy, the Government believe that these issues are currently best settled by higher education institutions.

Nuclear Engineers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research she has commissioned into problems in obtaining sufficient highly qualified graduates to become (a) nuclear engineers and (b) nuclear safety engineers. [4849]

Mr. Forth: No research has been commissioned specifically into the supply of nuclear engineers or nuclear safety engineers.

Employment Service (Publicity)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been spent by the Employment Service agency in producing promotional items during (a) the 1994–95 financial year, (b) in the 1995–96 financial year and (c) in the current financial year to date; what promotional items have been produced; how many of them have been produced; and what assessment he has made of the benefit of producing each of these promotional items. [6388]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. D. Horne to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 28 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to write to you about your question of 28 November concerning the production of promotional items by the Employment Service.

The Employment Service undertakes a wide range of promotional activity to inform employers and jobseekers about the services it offers. These activities have included jobseeker and employer advertising campaigns, production of leaflets and posters, stands at exhibitions and conferences—where employers are informed of the benefits of using jobcentres, and the organisation of Jobfairs where employers have the opportunity to recruit unemployed jobseekers in one place and at one time.

The total marketing and promotional spend during the last three years is as follows:

1994–95	3,556,921
1995–96	5,854,079
1996–97[1]	1,854,411

[1] spend to end of October 1996.

As there is such a diverse range of activity I am unable to give you this information in the form you have requested. I hope however that the following examples will give you an understanding of our promotional activity.

During the last three years we have undertaken a number of national advertising campaigns to promote to employers and unemployed jobseekers the services offered by our Jobcentres. The total cost of these campaigns in 1994–95 was £2.45m in 1995–96 £3.62m and our spend to date for 1996–97 is £1.3m.

Each of these national campaigns has involved a mix of television, radio and/or press advertising, with supporting information literature. The campaigns have been fully evaluated using independent tracking research. The research has indicated that the campaigns have been very effective in informing both employers and jobseekers of the services available.

In addition to the national campaigns, a range of national, regional and local activity is undertaken to promote specific events or services. The aim is to encourage local employers to use Jobcentres and for unemployed jobseekers to be aware of the wide range of help available to them. I have enclosed two examples of leaflets that we have produced for this purpose. I have arranged for copies of these leaflets to be available in the Library. We produce each year about half a million copies of the 'Just the Job' booklet which is available in Jobcentres and other advice locations. It explains the range of back to work services available to unemployed jobseekers.

We also this year produced four million copies of the Jobseeker's Allowance—Helping you Back to Work' guide. This is available to jobseekers through Jobcentres Post Offices, Citizen Advice Bureaux and Benefit Agency Offices. The booklet tells jobseekers about the help available when looking for work and in particular the entitlement conditions for receiving the Jobseeker's Allowance.

At a local level Jobcentre managers have used a variety of promotional methods, including direct mail shots to employers and adverts on the sides of buses. We also obtain a great deal of free editorial coverage in local press.

We recently exhibited this year at the annual conferences of the Institute of Personnel and Development and the Confederation of British Industry. This provided us with the opportunity to explain to employers and their recruitment specialists the benefits of using Jobcentres to meet their recruitment needs.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer of 7 November, Official Report, columns 709–10, what were the proposed annual savings for the IT project in the £1 million to £2 million band undertaken in 1996–97; what have been the realised savings; and what are the projected annual savings. [6707]

Mr. Robin Squire: The system has not yet been fully implemented. Scheduled implementation date is end March 1997. Savings will not start to be realised until 1997–98.

Projected savings	–1,199,032	358,032	354,702	351,239	347,637	343,891

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 7 November, Official Report, columns 709-10, what were the proposed annual savings for each of the IT projects costing more than £1 million; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6706]

Mr. Squire: The proposed savings (£000s) for the seven IT projects named were:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–00	2000–01	2001–02
Project 1	–1,435	265	523	660	697	697	747	697	—	—
Project 2	–375	–1,488	2,018	770	766	766	766	766	766	766
Project 3	—	–993	2,077	5,373	5,205	5,205	5,205	—	—	—
Project 4	—	—	–220	–1,499	847	797	832	752	591	—
Project 5	—	—	–60	–534	28	279	279	279	279	279
Project 6	—	—	—	–1,329	–63	1,625	1,625	1,625	1,625	1,625

The other project was for additional mainframe capacity and the benefit appraisal showed costs for the extra capacity. Benefits were in continuation of existing systems. These benefits were not included in the discounted cash flow. The costs for the project were:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000

Projects 4, 5 and 6 were transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry and we do not have information on realised savings or projected savings.

For the other projects, we have not yet carried out reviews that evaluate the actual savings against proposed savings. To provide this information would incur disproportionate cost.

Social Fund (Single Programming)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects Her Majesty's Government to sign the objective 3 European social fund single programming document 1997 to 1999. [6426]

Mr. Paice: The agreement of the text of the objective 3 single programming document for 1997 to 1999 between the UK Government and the European Commission was formally announced on 27 November. It is expected that the SPD will be signed by Commissioner Flynn on behalf of the European Commission before Christmas.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what child care facilities her Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6466]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department for Education and Employment operates across four head office sites and a range of child care facilities are provided, offering subsidised places to all employees.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of those employed by her Department in 1992–93 were women. [6480]

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1992–93 55 per cent. of staff employed in the Department were women.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many women are currently employed by her Department at each civil service grade. [6432]

Mr. Squire: The number of women currently employed by the Department is shown in the table. There are staff in some 50 civil service grades. For convenience the figures have been grouped into grade equivalents.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, columns 276–77, what factors underlie the changes in the Nirex payments. [5068]

Mr. Lang: The changes in the Nirex payments arose as a result of a revision to the shareholdings in UK Nirex which was effected on 1 April 1996.

Northern Electric

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the land and buildings that Northern Electric has disposed of since privatisation and (b) the price received for each sale. [5282]

Mr. Page: This is a commercial matter for the company.

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5529]

Mr. John M. Taylor: A precise answer cannot be provided without disproportionate cost. A recent study within my Department covering major computer systems reported that they comprised a total of 9,873 programs. This figure excludes systems within the next steps agencies and bought in commercial packaged software, such as word processors, and operating system software.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5528]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The computer systems within my Department make considerable use of commercial packaged software—for example, library cataloguing and management—for which no such information is available. For software developed on a bespoke basis, the information requested is not held centrally and provision of an answer would incur disproportionate cost.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5488]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In July of this year the model guidance on policy appraisal for equality treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms and to adjust the policy if it is not. Advice based on that model has been issued to all senior officials within the Department of Trade and Industry.

The recent Government report "One Year On" outlines action taken by Government to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Business Links

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when each business link will come to the end of its three-year pump-priming funding. [5684]

Mr. Page: A list of the dates when three-year pump priming will end or has ended is attached for all business links with an offer. The final payment of DTI grant will be made up to four months after the dates shown. Following the pump-priming period, the DTI will continue to contribute to the cost of business link services.

China (Arms Embargo)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out those sections of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 which apply in the case of the arms embargo on China. [6069]

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer given by the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 31 March 1995, Official Report, columns 842–43. Goods in the categories listed in that answer are entered in part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 as amended.

Nuclear Industry (Exports)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental impact assessment has been conducted on the proposed mixed oxide export facility at Sellafield. [5728]

Mr. Page: None. I understand that British Nuclear Fuels plc considers that the proposed mixed oxide export facility would not have any significant environmental effects and would not therefore require such an assessment to be made. The facility would involve only the storage of fuel before it is despatched to the customer, not any additional fuel production.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to promote British exports in relation to (a) components of nuclear power stations and (b) fuel cycle services to Pacific rim countries. [4853]

Mr. Page: My Department offers a range of support and services depending on the nature of specific bids and requests from the nuclear industry. Diplomatic support and export credits are also available. My ministerial colleagues and I take all suitable opportunities to promote the interests of nuclear power station and fuel cycle exporters when meeting our overseas counterparts. My officials' regular contact with representatives of nuclear companies and their trade association includes discussions about their international business.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in the clean-up and decontamination of the B38 and B701 buildings and surrounding areas at Sellafield in respect of radioactive leaks and high activity waste; where the contaminated soil has disposed of; and what has been the cost to date of the restoration programme. [5730]

Mr. Page: This is an operational matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc, subject to meeting the appropriate regulatory requirements. All decommissioning and clean-up of sites is, however, carried out in accordance with a predetermined programme approved by the regulatory authorities.

Combined-Cycle Gas Turbine Power Stations

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications his Department has received for combined-cycle gas turbine power stations since 1990; and how many are awaiting decision. [6296]

Mr. Page: Forty-three applications for new combined-cycle gas turbine power stations have been received to date. Three of these were received before 1990. Eleven are awaiting decision and five have been withdrawn.

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many combined-cycle gas turbine power stations are currently under construction; and what is the total coal burn equivalent of these stations. [6298]

Mr. Page: The only available data to hand are from the National Grid Company's seven-year statement. This indicates that 2 GW of CCGT capacity, with connection agreements in place, is under construction. The effect of new CCGT generating capacity on other plant will depend on the operating regime adopted at the time.

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many section 36 of the 1989 Electricity Act applications for combined-cycle gas turbine power stations have been granted to date. [6297]

Mr. Page: Twenty-seven applications for new combined-cycle gas turbines power stations have been granted to date.

Wind Farms

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for wind farm power generation he has received by region. [6299]

Mr. Page: The competition for contracts under the non-fossil fuel obligation is heavily oversubscribed. For wind energy, there are 167 project proposals, of which 14 are in the licence area of Eastern Group; 34 are in the licence area of Merseyside and North-Western Electricity Board plc; two are in the licence area of Midlands Electricity plc; 30 are in the licence area of North Western Electricity Board plc; 16 are in the licence area of Northern Electric; 16 are in the licence area of South Western Electricity plc; three are in the licence area of Southern Electric plc; 21 are in the licence area of Yorkshire Electricity Group plc; 29 are in the licence area of South Wales Electricity plc; and two are in Scotland.

Chemical Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will extend the provisions of the chemical weapons legislation to make it an offence to develop a chemical weapon or to assist in the development of a chemical weapon by transferring technology to another person or countries. [5884]

Mr. Lang: No. Under the Chemical Weapons Act 1996, it is an offence to develop a chemical weapon and individuals who participate in the development by somebody else of such a weapon by transferring technology would be guilty of the offence. The export of technology for the development of a chemical weapon is prohibited by export control legislation.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will extend the provisions of the chemical weapons legislation to other areas of weapons of mass destruction and conventional weapons. [5885]

Mr. Lang: My Department's consultative document, "Strategic Export Controls" (Cm. 3349), presented to Parliament in July, sought views on all aspects of strategic export control procedures and policy, including the possibility of new legislation. Among the specific issues raised was whether the provision in the Chemical Weapons Act 1996 creating the offence of developing a chemical weapon should be applied in relation to other forms of technology relevant to the production of weapons of mass destruction or their means of delivery. The consultation period closed at the end of October and the Department is currently considering the responses and follow-up action to the consultation.

Arms Exports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider providing that final approval for licences for arms exports to Governments with poor human rights is made by a parliamentary Select Committee. [5879]

Mr. Lang: The issues of parliamentary scrutiny and the location of the export licensing authority within Government are matters on which views were sought in my Department's consultative document "Strategic Export Controls" (Cm. 3349) which was presented to Parliament in July. The consultation period closed at the end of October and the Department is currently considering the responses and follow-up action to the consultation.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will impose an export licence requirement prior to negotiation of each individual arms transfer. [5887]

Mr. Lang: My Department's consultative document, "Strategic Export Controls" (Cm. 3349), presented to Parliament in July, sought views on all aspects of strategic export control procedures and policy, including the possibility of new legislation. The consultation period closed at the end of October and the Department is currently considering the responses and follow-up action to the consultation.

Newsagents

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of professional newsagents in business currently and in each of the last five years. [6403]

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many professional newsagents are in business in South Yorkshire; and how many there were in each of the last five years. [6617]

Mr. Page: This information is not available from official sources.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons his Department took from 16 July to 25 October to decide that the letter from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth relating to his constituent, Mr. C. V. Cottle, was the responsibility primarily of Her Majesty's Treasury. [6621]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Unfortunately, my Department has no record of having received my hon. Friend's letter of 16 July to my hon. Friend, the then Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for company affairs.

As soon as my hon Friend brought it to my private office's attention on 17 October that there was an outstanding letter, officials searched the correspondence database. No reference to this letter was found. My hon. Friend therefore kindly faxed to my office a copy of the letter on the same day. On its receipt it was forwarded to my officials who advised, shortly afterwards, that it was more appropriate for Her Majesty's Treasury to answer. The letter was duly transferred to Her Majesty's Treasury on 25 October.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the relationship between trends in the output of nuclear energy generated and the United Kingdom's CO_2 obligations. [4850]

Mr. Page: Government policy is to ensure that the United Kingdom meets its commitments under the framework convention on climate change which it ratified in 1993. Emission of carbon dioxide, the most important greenhouse gas, are expected to be 6 to 13 million tonnes of carbon below their 1990 level by 2000. Projected increases in electricity generation by nuclear power stations are estimated to contribute savings in emissions of 2.9 million tonnes of carbon in 2000.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to promote long-term generic research into nuclear energy. [4851]

Mr. Page: The Government believe that the generation of energy using nuclear fission is a mature technology and consequently that future research in that area should be funded by industry. The Government continue to support research into nuclear fusion as part of the European Union programme.

Electric Cars

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what means his Department supports the development of electric cars. [4852]

Mr. Greg Knight: Alternative propulsion technology, including electric and hybrid motors, is a key theme in the developing foresight vehicle initiative. The DTI is also supporting a number of trials of alternatively fuelled vehicles, including electric vehicles. In addition, the Department assists British companies in bringing relevant technology to the international market—for example by supporting a British presence at the recent international electric vehicle exhibition in Osaka, Japan.

Fast-breeder Reactors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the research evaluated by his Department relating to the issue of fast-breeder reactors as fast burners; and what discussions his officials have had with the managers of the Super Phoenix project. [4854]

Mr. Page: In 1992 the Government concluded that their continued funding of fast-reactor research was no longer sufficiently justified by the potential for power production of plutonium burning. My officials have had no recent contact with the managers of Super Phoenix.

Riot Contact Equipment

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what trans-shipment licences have been granted for the movement of electro-shock batons from South Africa to Britain and then beyond within the last five year; and if he will make a statement. [2484]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 November 1996]: None.

Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of Government expenditure on funding of (a) fundamental research and (b) applied research, in the expectation of profitable outcome for each year since 1990; and what proportion in currently available figures this represents of the total available to his Department for scientific research. [4272]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information is not available in the form requested. Government-funded research is classified into basic research and applied research, using the definitions in the OECD publication, "The Measurement of Scientific Activities", the so-called "Frascati Manual"—OECD Paris, 1994. ISBN 926414202 9. The breakdown by these categories over the years 1990–91 and 1994–95 for both total Government expenditure and DTI implementation on research is as follows:

Export Credits (Argentina)

Sir Jim Lester: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the outcome of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's reassessment, commenced in August 1995, of the premium rate chargeable in respect of exports to Argentina; how the rate charged now compares to the rates chargeable prior to this review; what information he has on the rates charged for comparable cover in the United States, France, Germany and Italy; what factors underlie the difference between these rates and the ECGD rates; and if he will make a statement. [6221]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 November 1996]: The ECGD's most recent review of Argentina pointed to improving risk prospects, which resulted in a premium rate reduction of around 7 per cent. The ECGD's benchmark premium rate is now 7.75 per cent., compared with the average of the rates of USA, France, Germany and Italy of 4.46 per cent. and of the average of all the main export credit agencies—ECAs—of 5.12 per cent. I am unable to provide information on individual ECA rates, which have been given to the ECGD in confidence.

The ECGD is required to match its premium to the perceived risk; its premium is consistent with the view of Argentinian risk taken by bond markets as reflected in yield spreads. We do not know precisely what factors other countries take into account in setting premium rates; but others such as Eximbank (USA) are charged with providing competitive premiums. Work is well advanced in the OECD and the EU on premium harmonisation.

HEALTH

Health Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the 1997–98 hospital and community health services revenue allocations for health authorities. [6590]

Mr. Dorrell: The 1997–98 hospital and community health services integrated revenue allocations for weighted populations are given, by health authority, in the table.

These reflect changes made to the national weighted capitation formula which introduce an interim needs weighting for community health services, a revised adjustment to take account of unavoidable geographical variations in the cost of providing services—market forces factor—and the introduction of specific formulae for certain special allocations.

NHS Executive

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arbitration over contracts between purchasers and providers has taken place in the NHS executive Trent since 1 April; which authorities and trusts were involved; when the arbitration guidance was issued, and to what financial year it related. [5145]

Mr. Malone: One formal contract arbitration has taken place in Trent region since 1 April 1996 between Central Sheffield University Hospitals national health service trust and Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Royal Hospital national health service trust.

For 1996–97, national health service executive Trent sent guidance on contract arbitration to all health authorities and trusts in the Trent region on 1 March 1996.

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the practice of mixed wards to end; and if he will make a statement. [5697]

Mr. Horam: It is for trusts and health authorities to manage priorities and strike a balance when deciding their local priorities. Under the patients charter, patients have the right, except in emergencies, to be told before admission if it is planned to care for them in a mixed-sex ward. Patients can expect their privacy and dignity to be respected and for there to be single-sex washing and toilet facilities. Single-sex accommodation can often be provided within mixed-sex wards. We are preparing guidance on the design of acute wards which will give examples of how this can be done.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's definition of a mixed-sex ward. [5775]

Mr. Horam: A ward in which male and female patients are accommodated.

Health Visitors

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of health visitors in England in each of the last 10 years; and what has been the average case load carried in each of those years. [5288]

Mr. Horam: Information on health visitors' case load is not available centrally. The number of health visitors employed by the hospital and community health services each year up to and including 1994–95 is available from the Department of Health's annual publication, "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on the number of health visitors at September 1995—the latest available—which are not directly comparable with the information for earlier years, are available in the Department of Health's Statistical Bulletin, "NHS hospital and community health services non-medical staff in England: 1985–1995", copies of which are in the Library. Information on the total number of face-to-face contacts made by health visiting staff during the financial year 1995–96 will be available shortly; copies will be placed in the Library.

Elective Surgery

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities that have not met the patients charter standards relating to admission for elective surgery within 18 months of referral to a consultant surgeon for each year since 1994. [5381]

Mr. Horam: The patients charter guarantees that all patients will be treated within 18 months of a decision to admit to hospital, not within 18 months of being referred to a consultant. Information in the form requested is not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received in the past year in favour of a general council for social services. [5285]

Mr. Burns: Ministers and officials have received about 30 letters.

General Practitioners

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to define the core general medical services that should be provided by general practitioners. [5378]

Mr. Malone: General practitioners' responsibilities are set out in their terms of service.

Medical Negligence Claims

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total amount of money paid from NHS funds to claimants as a result of medical negligence claims in each year since 1990. [5382]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the figures that were given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 41–42, and 17 May 1996 at column 586. As was made clear at the time, the figures for the earlier years were based on information which was not comprehensive and in particular did not include data from national health service trusts. The table shows the regional breakdowns based on latest estimates for 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96, consistent with the national estimates for those years.

Costs to the NHS of clinical negligence settlements by region

Region	1993–94 £ million (estimated)	1994–95 £ million (estimated)	1995–96 £ million (estimated)
Northern and Yorkshire	15.2	25.0	16.3
Trent	7.1	11.7	15.1
Anglia and Oxford	10.6	18.2	14.8
North Thames	21.4	30.4	37.2
South Thames	30.6	26.9	18.6
South and West	8.0	19.2	16.4
West Midlands	8.4	6.1	6.4
North West	16.6	22.5	24.3
Total	117.9	160.0	149.1

Dental Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists offer national health service treatment; and what was the number in 1992. [5573]

Mr. Malone: The number of dentists on health authorities' lists in England was 15,411 at 30 September 1992 and 16,336 at 30 September 1996.

Single-sex Wards

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of restoring all NHS wards to a single-sex basis. [5774]

Mr. Horam: No such estimate has been made.

North West Regional Health Authority

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on trends in patient demand in the North West regional health authority area. [5851]

Mr. Horam: The north-west, in common with other regions, has experienced a steady growth in demand for hospital treatment in recent years. Hospital activity in the year 1995–96 showed an increase of 3 per cent. in ordinary admissions, 23.4 per cent. in day cases and 0.4 per cent. in out-patients over the corresponding figures for 1994–95.

Child Protection Register

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what age local authorities remove children from the child protection register; and if he will bring forward measures to ensure that all children can be kept on such registers until the age of 18 years. [5849]

Mr. Burns: "Working Together Under the Children Act 1989", the Government's guidance on inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children from abuse, copies of which are available in the Library, advises that the purpose of the child protection register is to provide a record of all children in the area for whom there are unresolved child protection issues and who are currently the subject of an inter-agency protection plan and to ensure that the plans are formally reviewed every six months. De-registration should be considered at every child protection review. For de-registration to occur all members of the review conference must be satisfied that the abuse or risk of abuse is no longer present or is no longer of a level to warrant registration. The criteria for de-registration are that the original factors which led to registration no longer apply; that the child and family have moved permanently to another area which has accepted responsibility for the future management of the case; that the child is no longer a child in the eyes of the law i.e. the child reaches 18 years of age or the child marries; or that the child dies. It would not be justified to require the retention of all children on the register until they reached 18.

Hepatitis C

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates his Department made of the number of haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C who will die in the next five years. [6295]

Mr. Horam: The Department has made no estimates of this kind.

Mental Health

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he uses to assess the provision of child and adolescent mental health services in each area of the country; if he will rank each area of the country in the provision of services adopting these criteria; what guidance and publications his Department proposes to produce on child and adolescent mental health services in the next six months; and if he will make a statement. [6125]

Mr. Burns: National health service executive regional offices are responsible for assessing individual health authorities' performance against milestones set out in the priorities and planning guidance. This includes the implementation of policy on child and adolescent mental health services.

Regional offices use the policy guidance set out in the "Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services Health of the Nation Handbook" as a means to assess performance. Performance would be assessed against local needs and a national ranking of performance has not been considered.

We have produced various publications and guidance in recent years, there are no plans to produce additional material in the next six months.

Assisted Conception

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria his Department recommends local health authorities apply to couples awaiting assisted conception treatment. [6257]

Mr. Horam: Decisions about provision, priority and resources for infertility services are made by individual health authorities, who are in the best position to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances. The decisions must be made on the basis of sound evidence.

Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in the following publications:

The effective health care bulletin, "The Management of Subfertility" (August 1992), published for the NHS management executive by a consortium of Leeds and York universities and the research unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists "Infertility—Guidelines for Practice".

Copies of these are available in the Library.

The RCOG is reviewing its 1992 guidance as part of a project sponsored by the Department of Health. The revised guidelines should be available to clinicians next year.

Audit Commission

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total fee charged by the Audit Commission for the services carried out for the NHS in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995; and what is the estimated fee in 1996. [6247]

Mr. Horam: According to the annual report and accounts of the Audit Commission, its total audit fees charged to the national health service were:

1993–94: £32.236 million

1994–95: £36.789 million

1995–96: £38.759 million

The Audit Commission estimates fees for 1996–97 at £37.6 million.

Waiting Times (Doncaster)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the average waiting time for hospital treatment for patients of (a) fundholding and (b) non-fundholding general practitioners in Doncaster. [6607]

Mr. Horam: Such information as is available centrally is contained in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England (Resident Based)", copies of which are available in the Library. This shows, by individual health authority and specialty and within six month time bands, the number of patients waiting for admission to hospital. Average waiting times are not collected centrally. Patients funded by health authorities and those funded by general practitioner fundholders are also shown separately.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of people waiting over one year for an operation in (a) 1989, (b) 1992 and (c) 1996. [6545]

Mr. Horam: It is not possible to say how many people were waiting over a year for operations. Information available centrally shows patients waiting for admission, whether this is for surgery, medical treatment, assessment, therapy or rehabilitation. Information on this basis is given in the table.

Patients waiting more than a year for admission to hospital

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6456]

Mr. Horam: The Department provides nursery, creche and school holiday play scheme places for its staff. There is also access to a confidential advisory service.

Information about the number of employees using the facilities since 1992 is not available centrally.

Home-Start UK

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the research undertaken by the University of Leeds on the work of Home-Start UK—helping families under stress; and if he will make a statement. [6483]

Mr. Burns: The research report indicates that these schemes have been very effective in providing positive support to families for children.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding Home-Start UK has received from his Department in each of the last two years. [6484]

Mr. Burns: In the current financial year Home-Start UK is due to receive a core grant of £85,000 from this Department.

In the previous year for Home-Start UK, the equivalent core funding was £95,000. The Department's policy is to generally phase out core grants over a five-year period.

In addition local projects have received, and are receiving, some funding from the Department, especially the project in Wakefield, which received £618,807 over a three year period ending in 1995–96.

Acute Psychiatric Beds

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each health authority has spent on purchasing acute psychiatric beds from the private sector in each of the last five years and in the current year to date. [6671].

Mr. Burns: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the occupancy rate of acute hospital beds in the psychiatric sector in each region in each year since 1989. [6673]

Mr. Burns: Information on bed occupancy has been collected centrally only for periods from April 1996. We expect the first such information to be available from October 1997.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6474]

Mr. Horam: Prior to April 1993, staff in post information was not collated by gender. At 1 April 1993, 52 per cent. of the Department of Health's staff were women.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6445]

Mr. Horam: The information is given in the table.

Alpha-1-antitrypsin Deficiency

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide funding for the research into the genetic disease alpha-1-antitrypsin deficiency. [6087]

Mr. Horam: A major part of the biomedical research in this country and abroad is directed towards a better understanding of metabolic diseases such as alpha-1 antitrypsin deficiency. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. The Medical Research Council is always open to receiving proposals for new research initiatives.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a screening programme for the genetic disease alpha-1 antitrypsin deficiency. [6088]

Mr. Horam: Alpha-1 antitrypsin deficiency is one of many inborn errors of metabolism which are currently being considered as potential extensions to the existing neonatal screening programme—currently covering phenylketonuria and congenital hypothyroidism. The national health service executive research and development health technology assessment programme has commissioned two complementary systematic reviews of neonatal screening for inborn errors of metabolism. These reviews are considering the wider range of disorders in terms of screening effectiveness, cost and acceptability to parents.

The reviews are due to be completed early in 1997, after which the reports will be presented to the national screening committee, chaired by the Chief Medical Officer. Evidence from these reports, and evidence from any other robust research, will be considered by the committee before making any recommendations to the NHS executive board and Ministers about change to the neonatal screening programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5353]

Sir John Wheeler: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a program, however my Department is at present responsible for 254 major software systems.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5344]

Sir John Wheeler: My Department uses a number of proprietary software packages and, for these, information on the number of programs or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

My Department is carrying out an inventory of that bespoke software which is likely to still be in use in year 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Investment (Belfast, West)

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding from the European Union peace and reconciliation package has been released to community and voluntary organisations in the Belfast, West constituency to date. [5127]

Sir John Wheeler: Information is currently held at district council level and is not available at the level of detail requested. To date, around £5.5 million of EU assistance has been awarded to community and voluntary organisations in the Belfast district council area. In addition, letters of offer to the value of £1.09 million EU assistance have recently been issued to the Belfast European partnership board in respect of stage 1 of its action plans has recently been issued.

School Children (Dundonald)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports he has received relating to the conduct of children of 10 to 15 years of age after leaving school in the Dundonald area. [5121]

Sir John Wheeler: I am not aware of any reports having been received on this subject. I have, however, brought the question to the attention of the police.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6436]

Sir John Wheeler: A total of 43.4 per cent.

Note:

This figure is taken from the fifth report of the Northern Ireland civil service equal opportunities unit and relates to the position at 1 January 1993. It includes both industrial and non-industrial staff.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6433]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is to be found in the following tables.

Notes:

1. Table A shows the number of female permanent non-industrial staff in the Northern Ireland civil service working in the Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Office and the Police Authority for Northern Ireland.

2. Table B shows the number of female permanent industrial staff in NICS.

3. Table C shows the number of female permanent home civil service staff in the Northern Ireland Office.

4. Tables A and C show the position at 26 November 1996. Table B shows the position at 1 January 1996.

5. Casual staff are excluded from all tables.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the consultations between his Department and the Scottish Office about the planning conditions which may be applied to the proposed electricity interconnector between Scotland and Northern Ireland. [6679]

Mr. Moss: The proposed electricity interconnector comprises a Scottish leg, an undersea cable and a Northern Ireland leg. Separate public inquiries were held in Scotland and in Northern Ireland into the proposal, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and I concluded that it would be appropriate to announce our conclusions on the separate legs of the proposal simultaneously. This was done on 21 November 1996. Before the announcements, my right hon. Friend and I notified each other of our proposed decisions.

Health and Personal Social Services Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the report by the Government Actuary on his valuation of the health and personal social services superannuation scheme in Northern Ireland 1984 to 1989. [7118]

Mr. Moss: I have placed copies of the report in the Library.

The report concludes that the rate of contribution required from employers to meet the scheme's future liabilities, after taking account of employees' contributions, should remain at 4 per cent. The scheme's liabilities do not include the cost of pensions increases, most of which are currently met by the Exchequer.

I have decided to accept the actuary's recommendation.

Social Fund Budget

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans to make a further allocation of funds to the discretionary social fund budget in the current financial year. [7119]

Mr. Moss: I am very pleased to announce that the Northern Ireland social fund discretionary budget for 1996–97 will be increased by a total of £600,000 as a result of better than expected loan recoveries by the Social Security Agency. This will increase the original allocation for loans and grants to a total of £37.31 million.

This increase in the social fund budget will ensure that more people receive help and that the fund continues to play an important role in targeting resources on those most in need.

Details of the revised budgets have been placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4941]

Mr. Boswell: Most of this information is set out in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Hall) on 5 March 1996, Official Report, column 130. The following update relates to ministerial visits since that answer. Information on the costs of non-ministerial visits can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6467]

Mr. Boswell: The proportion of women employed by the Department as at 1 April 1993 was 46.02 per cent. These figures includes the ADAS agency, but exclude casual staff, for whom such data were not available.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6440]

Mr. Boswell: The details requested, as at 1 November 1996, are set out in the table:

Grade	Number of female staff
Senior civil service	12
Grade 6	20
Grade 7	125
SEO and equivalents	95
HEO and equivalents	286
EO and equivalents	621
AO and equivalents	1,064
AA and equivalents	1,120
Industrials	24
Total	3,367

These figures do not include staff in executive agencies.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to prevent a foot and mouth disease epidemic. [6485]

Mrs. Browning: There are many measures in place, both nationally and in the European Community, to prevent the introduction of foot and mouth disease. More specifically, as a result of the recent outbreaks of foot and mouth disease in parts of Greece and Bulgaria, imports of cattle, pigs, sheep, goats and other biungulate species from, or transiting through, these areas have been prohibited. Imports of certain animal products from these areas are subject to strict conditions of trade designed to eliminate the risk of transmission of the disease.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6451]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry and its agencies provide 120 subsidised nursery places for staff at five sites. Holiday playscheme places, most of which are subsidised, are available to staff at 11 sites. More than 200 members of staff used playscheme facilities during the last 12 months.

Nursery provision has expanded steadily since 1992 when 44 places were available at two sites. The level of nursery usage is always high. Playscheme provision was available at eight sites in 1992. Usage for playschemes varies geographically and seasonally, but is generally high. It is not possible to give total annual staff usage figures as historic records are not kept for every scheme.

DEFENCE

Equipment Expenditure

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the expenditure on defence equipment in each of the last 10 years for each of the three armed services. [6612]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Defence equipment expenditure cannot easily be broken down by service. It is instead categorised by systems areas: sea, land, air and other, which includes research. Expenditure in each of these categories over the last 10 years is as follows:

£ million (cash)

	Sea	Land	Air	Other
1995–96[1]	2,203	1,841	3,357	1,618
1994–95	2,441	1,642	3,184	1,552
1993–94	2,589	1,806	3,245	1,559
1992–93	2,891	1,846	3,152	822
1991–92	3,142	2,157	3,574	885
1990–91	2,955	1,927	3,197	759
1989–90	2,890	1,738	3,102	806
1988–89	2,633	1,544	3,085	766
1987–88	2,797	1,700	3,230	543
1986–87	2,494	1,759	3,090	542

[1] The figures for 1995–96 are estimates.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6454]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In line with my Department's policy to provide good-quality, affordable child care for staff wherever it is cost-effective to do so, the MOD and its agencies currently provide a range of child care facilities for use by service and civilian staff. In 1992 there were three nurseries, operating in central London, Taunton and Farnborough. Today, 13 MOD nurseries offer over 500 places to children of service and civilian staff in addition to places in playgroups, creches and holiday playschemes. No record has been kept of the use of facilities since 1992, in the form requested.

Radiation Testing

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the Government have spent on radiation experiments since 1966. [6563]

Mr. Soames: As far as my Department is concerned, the specific costs of these studies were subsumed into the overall Defence programme. They are not separately identifiable and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It is unlikely, however, that there would have been anything other than minor expenditure on these studies.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) Government and (b) private US collaboration funding has been received for the radiation-testing programme. [6567]

Mr. Soames: As far as my Department is concerned the information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. There is no evidence of any US private or Government funding of these MOD studies.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many lawsuits against the Government there have been based on the long-term health effects of radiation experiments. [6560]

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any legal proceedings having been brought against my Department in respect of the studies involving the use of radioactive material at Aldermaston, Porton Down and Farnborough.

Bois de Mai Residence

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 396, what action was taken in respect of the furniture at the official residence of Bois de Mai following its sale. [6626]

Mr. Soames: Following the sale of Bois de Mai, the furniture originally purchased from the Norwegian Government has been sold on to the German Government. Of the remaining furniture, some has been redistributed to the residences of the Deputy Supreme Allied Commander Europe and the United Kingdom military representative, with the balance going to storage. Items such as carpets and curtains were sold with the property.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6472]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Of the total number of civilian staff employed by my Department and its agencies in 1992–93 some 30 per cent. were women.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6443]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe) on 4 June 1996, Official Report, column 334.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, columns 652–53 on IT projects, what is his Department's definition of disproportionate cost. [6702]

Mr. Arbuthnot: When it is estimated that the cost of providing the information requested would exceed £450.

Co-operation Accord (United Arab Emirates)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the negotiation of a defence co-operation accord with the Government of the United Arab Emirates. [7029]

Mr. Portillo: The Governments of the United Kingdom and of the United Arab Emirates have signed today a defence co-operation accord in Abu Dhabi. The accord provides for the strengthening of military co-operation between the UAE and the UK in a number of areas, including training, the conduct of combined exercises, the provision of modern defence equipment and related services to the UAE armed forces and the development of joint military plans and military deployment strategies for the defence of the UAE. Under the terms of the accord, the UK is committed to assisting the UAE in deterring threats or preventing aggression against the UAE and, in the event of such aggression taking place, to implementing the joint military plans which are judged appropriate for the defence of the UAE. Discussions will now take place on these military plans and military deployment strategies under the auspices of a joint military committee; the accord will take effect once these discussions are complete.

The accord builds upon the 1971 treaty of friendship between the UK and the UAE and upon the long-standing history of co-operation between our two countries on defence. It is a welcome sign of our close and valuable relationship and it underlines our continuing commitment to working with states both in the Gulf and outside it to secure security and stability in a region of strategic importance to the UK.

Russian Space Agency (Environmental Evaluation)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make representations to his Russian counterpart in regard to the environmental evaluations made by the ecological division of the Russian Space Agency's Central Scientific Machine Building Research Institute of the use of rocket engines to incinerate nerve gas, biological and toxic weapons and industrial toxic wastes. [6017]

Mr. Soames: No. While my Department has concerns about the environmental impact of using rocket engines to incinerate nerve gas, biological and toxic weapons and industrial toxic wastes, it does not have access to the technical data on the processes involved which would allow it to form a judgment on its suitability as a disposal route.

Disbanded Regiments

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, columns 610–11. where the records of disbanded regiments are kept. [6128]

Mr. Soames: Records of disbanded regiments could be held in one of several locations such as a regimental headquarters or museum, a private or local authority museum or the National Army museum. They are not held centrally in my Department. If my hon. Friend has a particular regiment in mind, my Department would be pleased to determine the whereabouts of its past records.

Arms Sales

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will present an annual report to Parliament on arms sales and the criteria on which the Government's guidelines are based. [5999]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As I announced on 23 July 1996, Official Report, column 213, a report on defence equipment exports will in future be included as part of the annual statement on the defence estimates. This report will include an explanation of the Government's policy on defence exports.

TREASURY

Self-employment

12. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning his policies to encourage the growth in the number of self-employed people in the United Kingdom. [4867]

Mrs. Angela Knight: All Treasury Ministers meet representatives of the small firms sector, including the self-employed, frequently.

Economic Forecasting

13. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to improve the accuracy of his economic forecasting. [4869]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Economic forecasting will be easier in an environment that has stable growth, low inflation and sound public finances. We shall continue to pursue policies to bring these about.

Economic Growth

14. Mr. Berry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been made to him on growth rates in the United Kingdom economy. [4870]

Mr. Waldegrave: I receive many representations on economic growth. The Government are happy to be judged by their record. Since 1992, the UK has had the strongest and steadiest recovery of any major EU country. Both the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the International Monetary Fund expect the UK to be the fastest-growing major European economy, both this year and next.

Public Spending

15. Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for public spending as a proportion of gross domestic product over the planning period. [4871]

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor announced in his Budget on 26 November, spending will fall to 40 per cent. of GDP in 1997–98 and continue to fall in the following two years.

VAT (Domestic Fuel)

16. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the income from VAT on domestic fuel for 1996–97. [4872]

Mr. Oppenheim: The income from VAT on domestic fuel and power for the 12 months to June 1996 is estimated to be of the order of £1.1 billion. The outturn for 1996–97 will be affected by factors such as the weather, but is expected to be of a similar magnitude.

Building Societies

17. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to introduce further legislation about building societies. [4873]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I plan to publish a draft Building Societies Bill later this year. It will be introduced when a suitable opportunity arises.

Investment

18. Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect his recent Budget will have on investment in the United Kingdom. [4874]

Mr. Jack: This Budget creates a healthy environment for investment and growth. It builds on an already strong economy by reducing tax rates, but without jeopardising stability.

Private Finance Initiative

19. Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of the private finance initiative. [4875]

Mr. Jack: The PFI is going from strength to strength. As of last month, £7,000 million of agreed PFI deals have been done, with deals in almost every area of the public sector. The Treasury has forged an alliance with the Confederation of British Industry to speed up the PFI deal flow and we are working with the private sector to train practitioners on the front line, including over 2,500 officials already trained or booked on the "PFI in Practice" course. And at last month's private finance panel annual conference, we launched four new guidances, including the first set of standard terms and conditions for PFI contracts.

Interest Rates

20. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on future interest rates policy. [4876]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Interest rates are set to continue to achieve permanently low inflation. Over the last four years, the inflation performance of the economy has been the best for nearly half a century and the prospects are excellent.

26. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current interest rate in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) France, Germany and the United States. [4884]

Mrs. Knight: UK interest rates are set to continue to achieve permanently low inflation. International comparisons of data on interest rates can be found in the OECD's main economic indicators.

UK Competitiveness

22. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the measures proposed in his Budget statement on the United Kingdom's competitive position within the European Union. [4878]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Budget will help us build upon our position as the enterprise centre of Europe.

Direct Taxation

23. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the public response to the direct taxation changes in his Budget proposals announced on 26 November. [4880]

Mr. Jack: All income taxpayers—around 26 million people—gain from the Budget proposals. Real increases in personal allowances and the lower rate band help the low paid. Over a quarter of all taxpayers now pay tax at only 20p. All other taxpayers benefit from the 1p cut in the basic rate, which at 23p is the lowest headline rate of income tax for 60 years. In addition, the increase in the inheritance tax threshold allows people to build up wealth and security for their families and for future generations.

Value Added Tax

24. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the amount of VAT collected in the last year for which figures are available. [4881]

Mr. Oppenheim: The amount of VAT collected in financial year 1995–96 was £43,069 million.

Tobacco Duty

25. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on tobacco duty. [4882]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget Statement.

Exchange Rates

27. Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the effect on the economy of fluctuating exchange rates. [4885]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate but do not have a target for sterling. The exchange rate is only one of many factors that has to be taken account of in policy decisions.

Capital Investment

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on fiscal incentives to encourage capital investment in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, and on the levels achieved in each case in the last three financial years. [4877]

Mr. Jack: The Government believe that the best way to encourage capital investment in the UK is by low taxation, low inflation and stable economic policies, not by fiscal incentives. The Government have achieved considerable success in improving the climate for investment by reforming the corporation tax system to bring capital allowances more into line with actual depreciation and by cutting the rate of corporation tax from 52 per cent. to 33 per cent. The level of business investment in the UK as a proportion of GDP is comparable with our major competitors and it is now higher than in the 1970s. International statistics of business investment are available in the OECD business sector database.

Information and Publicity (Consultants)

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was his Department's expenditure on consultants to assist with information, publicity, press and media in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1993–94. [3579]

Mrs. Angela Knight: None.

Information and Publicity (Staff)

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of staff employed full-time or part-time (i) to provide information and publicity and (ii) to work in press or media in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1993–94. [3568]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information is as follows:

	1995–96 (£)	1994–95 (£)	1993–94 (£)
Press office/public inquiry unit	416,944	406,040	406,292
Publishing unit	91,805	82,330	47,673
Total	508,749	488,370	453,965

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5511]

Mr. Jack: The Treasury uses a number of proprietary software packages and for these, information on the number of lines of source code is known only to the supplier. An inventory of bespoke software is being undertaken as part of the Treasury's strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date issue, but the compilation of this inventory is not yet complete.

For programs written by Treasury staff we estimate that there are at present 75,000 lines of code.

There may be a further 100,000 lines contained in programs produced for the Treasury by external suppliers. For most of these programs, the Treasury has no access to the code or has no commitment to maintain them.

We have no information as to how many lines of code are contained in proprietary software such as operating systems, databases or PC packages.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5510]

Mr. Jack: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. A formula or a simple line of executable code could be said to be a program; however my Department is at present responsible for the following list of major software systems:

Source	Category	Number of full programs	Number of modules/ components
Proprietary	Systems software	25	—
	General central server software	24	—
	Office systems	24	—
	PARLY.CLERK /packages	32	—
	Total	105	—
Bespoke (external)	Total	16	325
In-house	Total	11	1,166
Total	Total	132	1,491

The software has been categorised by its source. Proprietary software covers operating systems such as Windows 95 general software operated off central servers, such as Novell netware; databases; office systems, such as WordPerfect and Excel; and PC packages used by individuals. Bespoke software covers programs produced for the Treasury by external supplies, such as software houses. In-house software includes items produced and/or maintained by Treasury staff.

For bespoke and in-house software we have shown two counts of (a) the applications and (b) the program modules making up those applications.

Public Sector Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the reduction in the payments of index-linked public sector pensions from each percentage point drop in inflation. [4883]

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on the whole public sector is not available as this information is not held centrally. However, expenditure in the main public service schemes, paid out of voted estimates, covering the armed forces, civil servants, teachers, NHS workers and pensions arising from service overseas, is available. It has been calculated that a 1 per cent. drop in inflation would result in a reduction in the region of £86 million in pensions expenditure based on the 1996–97 voted estimates.

VAT Receipts

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of VAT receipts for the current financial year. [4868]

Mr. Oppenheim: The 1996 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" forecasts that VAT receipts in the financial year 1996–97 will be £47.5 billion.

Abortion Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what dates updated abortion statistics for (a) December to March 1994, (b) April to June 1994, (c) July to September 1994, (d) October to December 1994, (e) December to March 1995, (f) April to June 1995, (g) July to September 1995 and (h) October to December 1995 were published; and when he intends to publish the updated abortion statistics for December to March 1996. [2726]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 28 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on updated abortion statistics.

Provisional statistics relating to the receipt of notifications of terminations performed under the Abortion Act 1967 are presented in the ONS monitor series, for the following periods: March quarter (1 January to 31 March); June quarter (1 April 30 June); September quarter (1 July to 30 September); December quarter (1 October to 31 December).

Final figures are later published in the ONS series of annual legal abortion statistics. For 1994, final abortion figures for each quarter are available in 1994 Abortion Statistics, England & Wales, series AB no. 21, which was published on 30 July 1995. For 1995 and the March quarter of 1996, provisional estimates of the number of legal abortions performed in each quarter are presently available. They were published or are expected to be published in the following ONS monitors: Legal abortions: March quarter 1995, series AB 96/1 on 30 January 1996; June quarter 1995, series AB 96/2 on 29 February 1996; September quarter 1995, series AB 96/3 on 9 May 1996; December quarter 1995, series AB 96/4 on 27 June 1996; and March quarter 1996, series AB 96/7 will be published on 21 November 1996. Final figures for each quarter of 1995 are expected to be published in 1995 Abortion Statistics, England & Wales, series AB no. 22, in January 1997.

The factors which account for the interval between publications are the time required for the receipt, statistical processing and analyses of the notifications in preparation for their subsequent publication.

Annual Paid Leave

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees were entitled to (a) three weeks and (b) four weeks annual paid leave for each year since 1979. [4689]

Mrs. Angela Knight: [holding answer 25 November 1996:] The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Joyce Quin, dated 28 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of employees entitled to three and four weeks of annual paid leave for each year since 1979.

The information available from the Labour Force Survey is shown in the table below.

Employees[1] paid holiday entitlement (Great Britain)

	All employees (thousands)	Of which those entitled to at least 3 weeks paid holiday	Of which those entitled to at least 4 weeks paid holiday
Autumn 1993	21,441	17,899	16,165
Autumn 1994	21,632	17,943	16,241
Autumn 1995	21,977	18,143	16,424

[1] Data only available since 1993 and only for autumn quarters. Number of weeks paid holiday excluding Public/Bank holidays.

Taxation (Employees)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of the number of employees whose tax liability is less than it would be due to some or all of their income being placed against a company whose owner is the employee concerned; and if he will make a statement. [5698]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 November 1996]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Attorney-General (1) how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems; [5527]

(2) how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5526]

The Attorney-General: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program. However, the Departments and agencies for which I am responsible operate in total some 70 major software systems, plus a number of smaller systems.

Those Departments and agencies use a number of proprietary software packages and, for these, information on the number of programs or lines of source code is known only to the suppliers.

My Departments and agencies are carrying out an examination of their software as part of their strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will show for the financial year 1995–96 (a) the total number of claims, (b) the number reviewed under the all work test, (c) the number found capable of work following the application of the all work test and (d) the number found capable of work who subsequently signed on as unemployed, broken down by (i) former invalidity benefit claimants, (ii) incapacity benefit claimants since 1995, (iii) income support claimants, (iv) severe disablement allowance claimants and (v) people in receipt of national insurance credits only. [410]

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

April 1995 to March 1996	Incapacity benefit claimants	Severe disablement allowance claimants
Claims	1,054,000	96,000
All work tests prompted	[1]1,700,000	[1]—
Disallowances following all work test	90,000	3,000
Incapacity benefit leavers who claimed unemployment benefit	[2]40,000	n/a

Notes:

All figures are from the 100 per cent. monthly count from the incapacity benefit computer system unless otherwise specified.

[1] Includes former invalidity benefit claimants, new claimants and national insurance credits only cases, also includes a small number of severe disablement allowance cases.

[2] Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Source:

Employment Service.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the numbers of claimants receiving unemployment benefit as a result of the rejection of their claim for incapacity benefit. [745]

Mr. Roger Evans: As at 13 September 1996, the latest date for which figures are available, 25,616 people were receiving unemployment benefits who had been disallowed incapacity benefit immediately prior to registering for employment.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the faults in the computer programme administering the jobseeker's allowance which have been identified to date. [4516]

(2) if he will list the faults which have appeared in the computer programme administering the jobseeker's allowance. [5742]

Mr. Roger Evans: The jobseeker's allowance payments system became operational on 7 October this year. The system contains some 1,500 computer programs, 900,000 lines of code, and involves approximately 2,000,000 online transactions per day for 30,000 users in Benefits Agency and Employment Service offices at over 1,500 locations.

There have been no significant problems with the system. The number of faults reported is in line with expectations when implementing a system of this size and complexity. The majority of these, and all those considered urgent, have already been rectified, and the remainder will be fixed in maintenance releases scheduled for the coming months.

There have been eight potential payment faults, seven of which have now been fixed, and clerical action initiated to deal with the other. None have resulted in incorrect payments.

Of 50 minor system faults, 20 have already been fixed and a further 14 have fixes scheduled for implementation. System faults are those where an error in the process means that the program does not perform exactly according to specification. In such cases some clerical intervention may be required. These faults do not result in incorrect payments. For example, one fault raised concerns that local offices should receive two copies of certain reports but only a single copy is being produced.

There have been 16 other minor or cosmetic faults which have no impact on the operation of the system.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the decision of the tribunal in Cardiff on 22 October in the Brunker case, with particular reference to the implications for other cases of withdrawal of reduced earnings allowance; and if he will make a statement. [5383]

Mr. Roger Evans: I am unable to comment on individual cases. Claims to social security benefits are decided by independent adjudication authorities who are bound by the provisions of the Acts and Regulations as approved by Parliament.

I understand that the commissioner has granted the adjudication officer leave to appeal on a point of law against similar tribunal decisions involving transfer from reduced earnings allowance to retirement allowance.

Benefits Agency (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Benefits Agency not to pursue the proposals recently published for the restructuring of the agency's offices in Wales until after the next general election. [5331]

Mr. Roger Evans: The proposals for restructuring Benefits Agency operations in Wales are subject to full public consultation. No decision on implementation will be taken until after the consultation period has ended on 28 February 1997.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent in modernising the (a) Morriston, (b) Port Talbot, (c) Pembroke Dock, (d) Carmarthen, (e) Holyhead, (f) Llangefri, (g) Caernarfon (h) Rhyl, (i) Deeside, (j) Dolgellau, (k) Cwmbran, (l) Tonypandy, (m) Porth, (n) Caerphilly and (o) Barry Benefits Agency offices (i) in total and (ii) per office since the inception of the Benefits Agency. [5113]

Mr. Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Donald Anderson, dated 27 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how much has been spent in modernising the (a) Morriston, (b) Port Talbot, (c) Pembroke Dock, (d) Carmarthen, (e) Holyhead, (f) Llangefri, (g) Caernarfon, (h) Rhyl, (i) Deeside, (j) Dolgellau, (k) Cwmbran, (l) Tonypandy, (m) Porth, (n) Caerphilly and (o) Barry benefit agency offices (i) in total and (ii) per office.

The total amount spent, in the last four financial years, on modernising the following buildings is £5,495,872, excluding general maintenance. This is broken down as follows:

(a) Morriston	543,630
(b) Port Talbot	495,427
(c) Pembroke Dock	80,577
(d) Carmarthen	252,184
(e) Holyhead	81,525
(f) Llangefri	465,517
(g) Caernarfon	175,402
(h) Rhyl	385,246
(i) Deeside	0
(j) Dollgellau	0
(k) Cwmbran	903,239
(l) Tonypandy	489,094
(m) Porth	561,179
(n) Caerphilly	892,483
(o) Barry	170,369

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

These amounts exclude general maintenance.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors account for the fall in the take-up of income support amongst eligible pensioners between the years 1993–94 and 1994–95; and what policies are being adopted by his Department to address this matter. [5667]

Mr. Roger Evans: It is not possible to identify separately all contributory factors. Pensioner take-up may be expected to change up or down from year to year in response to small changes in the relative sizes of income support and retirement pension at each annual uprating. Between 1993–94 and 1994–95 income support was uprated by slightly more than retirement pensions. This meant that some pensioners became entitled to small amounts of income support, which may have been left unclaimed. Research has shown that people are more likely to leave unclaimed small amounts of benefit; in 1994–95, 30 per cent. of pensioners appearing as entitled non-recipients in the survey were leaving unclaimed amounts less than £5.

The Benefits Agency provides information which is comprehensive, accurate, accessible and easily understood which enables people to establish their eligibility. The DSS, including its agencies, is spending nearly £9 million on publicity in the current financial year. The claiming of benefit is a matter of personal choice and there will always be those who choose not to make a claim. The important point is that a wide range of benefits are available for those who do wish to do so.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Child Support Agency cases are being investigated for overpayment which have been outstanding for (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months and (d) six months; and what are the total sums of money involved in each of these categories. [6089]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available.

Each time a maintenance assessment is reviewed, liability will change and an over or under payment of maintenance may occur.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases the Child Support Agency is considering at the present time, where a man owes more than £3,000 of maintenance and arrears and has paid less than £50 in four years. [4124]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Sir Dudley Smith, dated 27 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency maintenance and arrears.

The information you have asked for is not available in precisely the format that you have requested, so I have provided as much as I can. The Agency does not differentiate between the cases it deals with on a gender basis, and I am therefore unable to provide the figures for men who owe more than £3,000 in maintenance. At 31 October 1996, the total number of cases with more than £3,000 of maintenance and arrears outstanding was 101,818.

In a large number of these cases the arrears recorded as outstanding will be the result of an interim maintenance assessment. This measure, which sets maintenance at a punitive rate for absent parents (AP) who refuse to co-operate, was frequently used in the first two years of the Agency, but it is now only used as a last resort. It takes no account of an AP's actual financial circumstances. Since April 1995, an interim maintenance assessment is amended to a full maintenance assessment from the date liability starts once the AP co-operates: this almost always produces a much-reduced amount of arrears actually owed.

Where maintenance is not paid, the Agency has become increasingly successful in establishing payment by means of deduction from earnings orders and liability orders. I am unable to provide information on the number of cases where less than £50 has been paid in the last four years. Such a specific statistic has not been routinely collected; it could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

However, I can tell you that the latest available analysis of the Agency's work indicated that in 75% of cases where a full maintenance assessment has been completed, payment is being made in full or in part. This is based on the assumption that direct payments not via the Agency collection service are payed in full—otherwise parents with care can (and do) raise the matter with the Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

Paul Sutherland

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the detailed ruling by the High Court in respect of the case between his Department and Paul Sutherland in London on 7 November. [6390]

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the comments he received from the president of the Independent Tribunal Service on the draft Social Security (Adjudication) and Child Support Amendment (Number 2) Regulations 1996. [6429]

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6461]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The Department and its agencies provide, or take part in, a number of child care initiatives including subsidised holiday play schemes and nurseries, family care expenses scheme under which expenses are offered to staff for additional child minding costs while they are on work that falls outside normal working hours, membership of child care information services, child care referral service and the provision of a creche for DSS summer school. In 1992, subsidised holiday play schemes and nurseries were provided, although the number of places were fewer than are currently available; family care expenses and creche facilities for DSS summer school were also available.

Information on the number of employees who have used child care facilities in each year since 1992 is not available.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 681, on information technology projects, what is his Department's definition of disproportionate cost. [6698]

Mr. Burt: The Department follows the standard guidance that where the cost of collecting information and preparing a reply to a parliamentary question is in excess of £450, it may be considered disproportionately costly to answer it.

WALES

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5347]

Mr. Hague: My Department uses a number of propriety software packages and for these, information on the number of programs or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

My Department is carrying out an inventory of that bespoke software which is likely still to be in use in 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change, but compilation of the inventory is not yet complete.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many separate computer programs his Department operates. [5356]

Mr. Hague: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer program; this could be simply a formula or a line of executable code.

However, my Department is at present responsible for two major software systems.

Disease Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of (a) AIDS, (b) hepatitis B, (c) prostate cancer, (d) tuberculosis, (e) whooping cough and (f) lung cancer were reported in 1995. [5547]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information for Wales is as follows:

(b) 24 cases of hepatitis B were notified in 1995.

(c) 857 cases of cancer of the prostate were registered as newly diagnosed in 1990.

(d) 180 cases of tuberculosis (excluding chemoprophylaxis) were notified in 1995.

(e) 112 cases of whooping cough were notified in 1995.

(f) 2,314 cases of cancer of the trachea, bronchus and lung were registered as newly diagnosed in 1990.

Health Variations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the relative health of divorced partners in Wales; [6059]

(2) what assessment he has made of the relationship between types of diet and degrees of poor health in Wales; [5921]

(3) what steps he has taken to help in improving the health of members of single-parent families in Wales. [6058]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Assessments of the links between life styles and social factors and the health of individuals or groups are derived from a range of sources, including applied research and initiatives such as the Welsh health survey. Health authorities are responsible for planning and implementing measures to meet the health needs of their areas and are guided by such assessments and those made by their directors of public health.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the post-project evaluation by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority to demonstrate whether implementation of the move to Crickhowell house matched the projections in the option appraisal agreed with the Department, as set out in the letter from the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) dated 22 August 1994. [5912]

Mr. Hague: A post-project evaluation was completed by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in November 1994. Its conclusion was that the costs of moving to Crickhowell house represented good value for money in comparison with an alternative scenario.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the letter from the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West dated 22 August 1994, if he will place in the Library details of the alternatives to Crickhowell house considered in the option appraisal for the centralisation of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority; what rent levels and rent-free periods were offered by the other property development companies in their negotiations with the authority; and what role former (a) senior civil servants and (b) Ministers took in the negotiations leading up to the lease being signed for Crickhowell house by the Department in late 1991. [5919]

Mr. Hague: It would be inappropriate to publish details of proposals provided by developers on a commercially confidential basis, but they are open to audit. The preferred developer was selected by the authority after appraising competitive bids and approved by Ministers. The chairman of the authority at the time was also director of NHS Wales and a senior civil servant in the Department.

Asthma, Arthritis and Back Pain

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the relative prevalence of back pain and arthritis in the Welsh population compared with the United Kingdom as a whole; and to what he attributes variations; [6065]

(2) what resources he has committed to the study of the causes of changes in the prevalence of (a) asthma, (b) arthritis and (c) back pain in Wales. [6068]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Indications of improvement in the levels of asthma, arthritis and back pain are currently being considered by a working group led by the Welsh Office with representatives of Welsh health authorities.

The working group is to identify a range of indicators and target levels which could be achieved over the next five years by the application of evidence based clinical care.

Before it is issued in March 1997 the list of indictors and targets will be subject to consultation with the health service, starting in December this year.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to assist people in Wales with learning difficulties to reduce the side effects of taking medication. [6064]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh health gain protocol sets a target for 2002 of reducing to 10 per cent. the number of mentally disabled persons who suffer side effects from drugs. A first step is a study into the effects of withdrawing drugs from mentally disabled persons.

Health Service (Extra-contractual Referrals)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what appraisal he has made of the impact of the removal of the requirement for prior authorisation of extra-contractual referrals on the net and gross expenditure profiles of Welsh health authorities; what representations he has had from those authorities concerning the impact of the change; and if he will make a statement. [5911]

Mr. Hague: Discussions are under way with representatives of NHS Wales about potential changes to the ECR administration process. These discussions include the issue of the removal of the requirement for prior authorisation. The impact on expenditure profiles will be dependent on the conclusions of these discussions.

Powys Council

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a special funding provision to Powys council in respect of road clearing and gritting during the winter months; and if he will make a statement. [6407]

Mr. Hague: No. Local authorities are funded for their revenue services through the local government revenue settlement. The formula for distributing resources between authorities is agreed with the Welsh Local Government Association.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6448]

Mr. Hague: The information is as follows:

Mr. Hague: My Department opened a workplace nursery in 1991 and has supported holiday playcare schemes in the easter and summer school holidays each year since 1990. My Department also has provision to reimburse staff for additional child care expenses incurred in the course of their official duties.

Information on the number of employees using these child care facilities is not kept in the format requested.

Secondments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many secondments there were to his Department in each of the past five years. [6623]

[5720]

Mr. Page: I have been asked to reply.

Details of which organisations own the various plants and facilities on the Sellafield site are administrative, and commercially sensitive, matters for the operators. For security reasons, it is not the practice to disclose information on individual buildings. All the operators are required to meet the applicable environmental and licensing requirements.

DEFENCE

Services Sound and Vision Corporation

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what developments there have been affecting his Department's relationship with the Services Sound and Vision Corporation since his answer of 15 October, Official Report, column 863; and if he will make a statement. [7270]

Mr. Soames: The contracts mentioned in the answer given on 15 October have been offered to, and accepted, by SSVC. The MOD's relationship with the SSVC is now the same as its relationship with any commercial supplier and the corporation's non-departmental public body status has been revoked accordingly.

Edinburgh Castle

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the regulations which govern which flag flies over Edinburgh castle; what plans he has to alter these regulations to ensure that the Saltire or the Lion Rampant flies over Edinburgh castle while the Stone of Scone rests in the castle; and if he will make a statement. [5944]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 26 November 1996]: The rules governing flag flying over Army flag stations such as Edinburgh castle are set out in Queen's regulations for the Army. These state the type, size and occasions on which flags are to be flown. I have no plans to amend these regulations. The Saltire will fly from the Half Moon battery at Edinburgh castle on Saint Andrew's day and for the forseeable future thereafter.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Indemnity Undertakings

Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many indemnity undertakings were given by Departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six-month period ended 30 September; and what was the value of (a) any contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time under that section which remain outstanding as at 30 September and (b) non-statutory Government indemnities in respect of loans handled by the Government art collection which remain outstanding as at 30 September. [7271]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provision for the Government indemnity scheme is made by the National Heritage Act 1980. The scheme facilitates public access to loans of works of art and other items for public display made to museums, galleries and other such institutions by private owners and non-national institutions. It does this by indemnifying lenders against loss or damage to their loan. Loans covered by the scheme must be for public benefit. The scheme also covers loans of such objects for study purposes within institutions where this would contribute materially to the public's understanding or appreciation of the loan—for example through a scholarly publication.

In the six-month period ended 30 September 1996, the following undertakings to indemnify were given by the relevant Departments for objects on loan to national and non-national institutions:

	Numbers
Department of National Heritage	453
Scottish Office Education Department	164
Welsh Office Education Department	70
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	30

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time under section 16 and which remain outstanding at 30 September are:

Department of National Heritage	1,388,795,250
Scottish Office Education Department	348,112,981
Welsh Office Education Department	49,547,929
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	7,013,664

The value of non-statutory Government indemnities to cover loans handled by the Government art collection and which were outstanding at 30 September 1996 is:

Value: £9,000,000.

The Ministerial Committee on the environment (EDE),

The Ministerial Committee on local government (EDL) and

The Ministerial Group on the millennium festival (GEN 36).

I am a member of a further 11 ministerial committees of the Cabinet, as follows:

The Ministerial Committee on economic and domestic policy (EDP),

The Ministerial Committee on defence and overseas policy (OPD),

The Ministerial Committee on nuclear defence policy (OPDN),

The Ministerial Committee on Northern Ireland (NI),

The Ministerial Committee on the intelligence services (IS),

The Ministerial Committee on home and social affairs (EDH),

Internal Market

Sir Roger Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what decisions were taken at the EU ministerial Council on the internal market on 26 November; and what matters were voted upon. [7356]

Mr. Freeman: I attended the Council on behalf of the UK Government. An open debate was held on the Commission's report on the impact and effectiveness of the single market. I welcomed the report's message that the single market had benefited international competitiveness and jobs. I also supported the emphasis on effective application and enforcement and improved infractions systems. More work was needed on energy and services, including financial services.

The single market would also work better with simpler legislation, which would especially benefit small firms. I welcomed the Commission's report on its simpler legislation for the internal market—SLIM—initiative and the results of the pilot project. These would deliver concrete benefits to business. The UK's calculations showed that the Intrastat proposals alone would result in savings of over £5 million for the UK's small firms.

The Council asked the Commission to bring forward legislative proposals to implement the SLIM teams' proposals quickly. The Council also expressed a desire to see the SLIM approach extended to further areas of single market legislation and invited suggestions from all member states. I suggested that the electromagnetic compatibility, personal protective equipment, package travel directives and the VAT information exchange system would benefit from inclusion in a second round of SLIM. I also mentioned the importance of work to simplify legislation on machine standards and food hygiene.

The Council reached political agreement on a common position:

on an amendment to the directive on extraction solvents used in the manufacture of foodstuffs; and subject to a UK parliamentary scrutiny reserve, to amend two public procurement directives to align them more closely with the World Trade Organisation Government procurement agreement.

No agreement was reached on a common position on a directive on the legal protection of designs where neither the Commission proposal nor a presidency compromise gained sufficient support.

The European company statute, free movement of persons, problems facing ski instructors and tour guides and the "Action Robert Schumann" proposal to improve legal professionals' understanding of single market law were also raised and Council Members attended the launch of citizens first, the Commission's information initiative designed to bring the EU closer to the citizen.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6435]

Mr. Willetts [holding answer 28 November 1996]: On 1 April 1992, women comprised 41 per cent. of the total number of people employed in the Cabinet Office, its agencies, HMSO and the Central Office of Information.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6437]

Mr. Willetts [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The breakdown of female staff by grade across the Cabinet Office and the Office of Public Service and its five agencies at 30 September, together with that of the Central Office of Information is shown in the table.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, how many women are currently employed by his Department; and what proportion this is of the total. [1257]

Mr. Willetts [pursuant to his reply, 4 November 1996, c. 336]: I regret that my answer of 4 November did not include figures for the Central Office of Information. The corrected reply follows.

There are 558 women employed within the centre of the Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service which represents 46.4 per cent. of the work force. There are a total of 1,013 women within the whole of the Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service and agencies, which represents 32.4 per cent. of the work force. The divergence is attributable to the Security and Facilities Executive, where the majority of employees are male security guards. The Central Office of Information has 172 female employees, which represents 42.9 per cent. of the work force.

Civil Service (Nationality Restrictions)

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what were the Government's objectives in introducing nationality restrictions on employment in the civil service in June 1996; [5248]

(2) if the Government will scrap the nationality bar and restore the rights of Irish and Commonwealth citizens in applying for civil service posts; [5249]

(3) what legal provisions govern the rights of Irish and Commonwealth citizens to apply for posts in the UK civil service. [5250]

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1996; c. 664]: I regret that the word "Community" in the quoted reference from the British Nationality Act 1981 should have read "Commonwealth". The corrected reply follows.

The changes announced in my written answer to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 1 March 1996, column 771, took effect on 1 June 1996 and I have no plans to reverse them.

The legal provisions governing the rights of Irish and Commonwealth citizens to apply for posts in the UK civil service are as follows. The Aliens' Restriction (Amendment) Act 1919 prohibits the appointment of any alien "to any office or place in the Civil Service of the State". Because of Great Britain's historic connections with Ireland and the Commonwealth, the definition of "alien" did not include British protected persons or the Irish, even when the Republic of Ireland left the Commonwealth in 1948. Civil service posts were accordingly open to Commonwealth nationals and citizens of the Republic of Ireland. Having regard to the conditions at the time of their enactment, the concept of "alien" in the 1919 Act included those who are now nationals of European Economic Area member states. Under the British Nationality Act 1981, an "alien" is "a person who is neither a Commonwealth citizen nor a British protected person nor a citizen of the Republic of Ireland".

The June 1996 changes were made under the Minister's powers in the Civil Service Order in Council in order to protect the UK's right, which every other EEA member state has, to be able to reserve its core posts for its own nationals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many separate computer programmes his Department operates. [5357]

Mr. Burt: There is no universal definition of what constitutes a computer programme.

This Department is at present responsible for 18 major mainframe systems, and more than 1,500 small software systems.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5348]

Mr. Burt: The Department uses a mixture of in-house developed and proprietary software packages. Information on the number of lines of source code used in the proprietary software packages is known only to the supplier.

The in-house developed software contains millions of lines of code and the cost of counting these would be disproportionate. An analysis of this software is currently being carried out as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change. This will identify what software changes are required, and the analysis will be completed by January 1997.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people whose incapacity benefit was disallowed because of a failure to return the IB50 questionnaire belatedly returned the questionnaire and were awarded benefit. [6049]

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people failed the incapacity benefit all-work test in 1995–96 as a result of a Benefits Agency medical service examination. [6048]

Mr. Burt: Between April 1995 and March 1996, around 90,000 claimants were disallowed incapacity benefit following medical examination under the all-work test.

Benefits Agency Staff

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many staff are now employed by the Benefits Agency on a casual basis; [5743]

(2) how many staff were last year asked to leave the Benefits Agency employment before completing two years' service. [5744]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, on 21 November, Official Report, column 685.

War Pensions

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the current cost of the statutory disregard of war disablement pensions and war widows' pensions for each applicable Government benefit; [6982]

(2) what is the cost to local authorities of the discretionary disregard of war disablement pensions and war widows' pensions for (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit; [6977]

(3) how many local authorities give a full disregard to war disablement pensions and war widows' pensions in the calculation of housing and council tax benefit; how many authorities give a partial disregard; and how many give no disregard beyond the statutory £10; [6978]

(4) what would be the cost of disregarding the total of war disablement pensions and war widows' pensions for (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit; [6979]

(5) what is the cost of the current £10 statutory disregard of war disablement pensions and war widows' pensions for (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit; [6980]

(6) what would be the cost of disregarding the total of war disablement pensions and war widows' pensions for each applicable Government benefit. [6981]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Information on local authorities' discretionary schemes, other than in relation to levels of expenditure, is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disregard of war disablement pensions and war widow's pensions in the income-related benefits: estimated costs

£ million

	Housing benefit	Council tax benefit	Income support	Total costs
Estimated cost of current mandatory disregards	15	5	5	25
Estimated additional cost of a total disregard	45	15	35	95
Estimated overall cost of a total disregard	60	20	40	120

1. For 1994–95, the latest date for which information is available, local authorities reported additional expenditure on discretionary schemes of around £30 million for housing benefit and £10.5 million for council tax benefit.
2. Costs for family credit, disability working allowance and income-based jobseeker's allowance are likely to be negligible.
3. Estimates are based on data given in local authority subsidy returns for 1994–95; the May 1994 income support quarterly statistical enquiry; and the 1991, 1992 and 1993 family expenditure surveys. The estimates have been uprated to 1996–97 levels.
4. In compiling these estimates, expenditure has been rounded, where appropriate, to the nearest £5 million. Estimates given are of a broad magnitude only due to lack of comprehensive data on receipt of war pensions for claimants of income-related benefits or potential claimants of income-related benefits.

Special Advisers

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many special advisers are employed by his Department; and if he will list their names. [6831]

Mr. Lilley: There is one special adviser employed by my Department. His name is Peter Barnes.

Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1995 to give appellants entitlements to an oral hearing if they request it after the expiry of the 10 days time limit. [6903]

Mr. Roger Evans: There is no need for such an amendment. The decision not to opt for an oral hearing is not irrevocable. Requests for an oral hearing will be granted up to the point at which the tribunal decision is issued.

TRANSPORT

New Car Assessment Programme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the results of his Department's commissioned research on the new car assessment programme to be published; and what information will be released at this point. [6409]

Mr. Bowis: I expect the results to be published early next year. Information on front and side impact protection and pedestrian protection offered by seven super-mini-sized cars will be released.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received during the last 12 months, and from whom, about the research being carried out by his Department under the new car assessment programme and the publication of the results of this research. [6410]

Mr. Bowis: During the last 12 months, I have received the following representations.:

	Number
Motoring associations	6
Industry	4

The motoring associations were in favour of the NCAP, industry wanted to ensure that the results are presented in a fair and objective way and the Member of Parliament requested details of the programme.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department (a) has spent and (b) is planning to spend on research under the new car assessment programme; and what this work involves. [6411]

Mr. Bowis: To the end of November 1996, my Department has spent £1,035,000 on work connected with the new car assessment programme and, in the current phase, plans to spend a total of £1,580,000. This work involves purchasing vehicles, conducting crash tests and the collection and interpretation of data.

Noise Barriers

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what statutory provision highway authorities are empowered to fund the construction of noise barriers on existing motorways and trunk roads. [6950]

Mr. Watts: Highway authorities are empowered under section 282 of the Highways Act 1980.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the statutory provision under which his Department occasionally and in exceptional circumstances exercises a discretion to provide noise barriers to trunk roads built before October 1969; and if statutory provisions are subsequently amended to be disapplied to motorways and trunk roads built after October 1969. [6951]

Mr. Watts: My Department occasionally and in exceptional circumstances exercises a discretion to provide noise barriers on roads built before 17 October 1969 under section 282 of the Highways Act 1980. This section, which replaced section 23 of the Land Compensation Act 1973, provides the power to carry out works within a highway to mitigate the adverse effects of its construction, existence or use.

Other sections of the Land Compensation Act 1973 provide powers to insulate residential properties against noise, and to pay financial compensation to property owners for loss of value attributable to the construction, or substantial improvement, of a road. These powers were applied retrospectively to roads built or improved after 16 October 1969.

These statutory provisions remain in force.

Air Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 155, what investigations the Civil Aviation Authority has undertaken to ensure that International Civil Aviation Organisation standards are being met. [6974]

Mr. Bowis: It is not clear to which of the answers of 26 November the hon. Member is referring.

Polystyrene (Fire Risks)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the fire and smoke risks from the transportation of polystyrene; and if he will make a statement. [6418]

Mr. Watts: Extensive research and evaluation work on the fire and smoke hazards of a wide range of materials, including polystyrene in different applications, has been carried out for the Home Office's fire research and development group, the Fire Research Station and the Health and Safety Executive.

Railtrack (Land Sales)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sanctions apply to the selling by Railtrack of land in the operational portfolio. [6009]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack cannot sell any operational land—that is, land required for rail purposes, as defined at section 39 of the Railways Act 1993—without going through rigorous statutory closure procedures. The Rail Regulator, who has a duty to have regard to the interests of all rail users, will take decisions on closure proposals, with any subsequent appeals being referred to the Secretary of State. The regulator has the power both to require Railtrack to comply with the closure procedures and to impose a fine in the unlikely event of a breach.

Any profits realised by Railtrack from property sales are subject to arrangements whereby 25 per cent. of the profits over and above those taken into account by the regulator in setting the level of charges for access to the track, are clawed back and paid into the Exchequer via lower subsidy levels.

Midland MainLine

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to monitor the level of services on the Midland MainLine; and if he will make a statement. [4747]

Mr. Watts: The franchise agreement places obligations on the franchise operator to provide, and gives the franchising director the right to request, information about services in order to monitor compliance with the franchise obligations. The franchise agreement requires the franchise operator to monitor customer satisfaction, and to publish its own passenger's charter with terms no less favourable than those offered by British Rail. The office for Passenger Rail Franchising recently published statistics for punctuality and reliability in comparison with franchisees' passengers charter standards. Since the franchise commenced in April, Midland MainLine's punctuality and reliability has exceeded its charter targets of 90 per cent. and 99 per cent. respectively. In addition to the operational information provided by franchisees, Opraf has its own computer systems which make full use of data from Railtrack systems independently to monitor operating performance.

The franchisee for Midland MainLine plans broadly to maintain the pre-franchising number of services over the first three years of the franchise, with the introduction of additional services in 1999.

Air Accidents (1993)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 154, if he will provide further information on the air accidents occurring in 1993. [6968]

Mr. Bowis: Of the accidents referred to in my reply of 26 November, Official Report, column 154, five involved aircraft struck by ground vehicles and equipment, and two involved cabin attendants falling from aircraft while attempting to close a door.

The air accidents investigation branch investigated six of the seven accidents. The reports of its investigations, copies of which have been placed in the Library, were published in AAIB bulletins in 1993. The AAIB determined that the remaining accident was not a reportable accident.

Exhaust Emission Checks

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many spot checks are made each year on commercial vehicles to ensure that they comply with exhaust emission standards; what percentage of these have been found in the last available two years to be above the legal limit; and if he will make a statement. [6804]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr David Tredinnick, dated 29 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of spot checks which are made each year on commercial vehicles to ensure that they comply with exhaust emission standards; and what percentage of these have been found in the last available two years to be above the legal limit.

Instrumented checks using calibrated test equipment are carried out by the Inspectorate's vehicle examiners. Vehicles found to have exhaust emissions in excess of the legal limit are issued with a prohibition. Details of checks on commercial vehicles for the last two financial years are as follows:

	1995–96			1994–95
	Instrumented checks	Prohibitions issued	Percentage above limit	Instrumented checks	Prohibitions issued	Percentage above limit
HGV	11,405	350	3.1	12,959	450	3.5

England and Wales	210,186	241,841	219,635

1. Information is not available separately for England and Wales. 2. Number of HGV offences shown as reported for prosecution in England and Wales are those reported to the Inspectorate's internal prosecution service.

Figures not available for Scotland.

Bypasses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effects of undertaking comprehensive traffic measures in an area to be bypassed on the economic assessment of that bypass; and what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on this matter. [6895]

Mr. Watts: My Department's published appraisal guidance advises that, where comprehensive traffic calming measures are proposed for an area to be bypassed, the effects of the scheme are tested with and without the traffic calming measures.

The evidence suggests that traffic calming measures can enhance substantially the amenity of the bypassed town centre but generally have little impact on the volume of traffic using bypasses. No specific research has been commissioned into the economic consequences of town centre traffic calming on a bypass.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 238, if he will list the total number of hours worked by consultants employed by Samuel Montague in relation to rail privatisation. [6972]

Mr. Watts: The answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Airline Alliance

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has asked the Civil Aviation Authority to provide concerning benefits to the United Kingdom that would arise from the proposed

British Airways-American Airlines alliance; and what factors underlie changes from the previous practice in respect of consultation with the CAA. [5657]

Mr. Bowis: It is for the competition authorities to analyse the proposed British Airways-American Airlines alliance. I understand that the CAA has contributed to the analysis carried out by the Office of Fair Trading.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average time taken in the tendering process for (a) design, build, finance and operate roads projects and (b) other PFI transport projects. [5757]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 26 November 1996]: The average time taken in the tendering process for DBFO roads projects, from invitation to tender to the awarding of the contract, is 13 months. Information for other PFI transport projects is not readily available, particularly in cases where my Department is not the project promoter, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. An average figure would in any case be meaningless, given the differences in scale and complexity between projects.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Testing)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions have taken place between his Department and the legal authorities in England, Wales and Scotland in relation to the prosecution of offences involving HGVs reported by the Vehicle Inspectorate; [6359]

(2) if he will list for each of the last five financial years for (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland (i) how many HGV offences have been reported to the legal authorities, (ii) how many of these offences have been pursued and (iii) how many HGV inspections in total have taken place. [6360]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 28 November 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 29 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning:

1 What discussions have taken place between his Department and the legal authorities in England, Wales and Scotland in relation to the prosecution of offences involving HGVs reported by the Vehicle Inspectorate; and

2 The number of HGV offences reported to the legal authorities for each of the last 5 financial years for (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland; (i) how many HGV offences have been reported to the legal authorities; (ii) how many of these offences have been pursued; and (iii) how many HGV inspections in total have taken place.

In England and Wales prosecutions are undertaken by the Vehicle Inspectorate's own Prosecution and Legal Services department. Therefore no discussions have taken place with legal authorities regarding HGV offences. In Scotland, offences are reported for prosecution to the Procurator Fiscal and discussions are underway between the Inspectorate and the Crown Agent in Scotland about cases referred to the Procurator Fiscal which are not pursued.

Details of HGV offences reported for prosecution for each of the last 3 financial years are shown on the attached table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Rocket Project

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will report progress on the Ariane project; what representations he has received from (a) Professor David Southwood of Imperial college, London, and (b) Professor Stephen Schwartz and other plasma physicists at Queen Mary and Westfield colleges, London on this matter; what reply he sent; and if he will place copies of the correspondence in the Library. [6106]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Following the failure of Ariane 501, a second qualification flight is planned for April 1997. A third qualification flight, which might also carry a commercial payload, is planned for September 1997.

I have received letters from Professor Schwartz and, via the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) from Professor Southwood about the Cluster mission. Copies of the correspondence have been placed in the Library of the House.

EU Working Time Directive

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from business organisations in respect of the European Court of Justice's ruling on the working time directive. [5821]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has received a wide range of representations about the working time directive. Many of these have been from employers or employer organisations concerned about the directive's potential implications for industry.

Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the number of employees who will receive new entitlements to paid holidays as a result of the introduction of the working time directive. [4690]

Mr. Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The number of employees who might receive the entitlements proposed in the directive would depend on the conditions of entitlement set by implementing measures.

Personal Insolvencies

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many personal insolvencies was recorded over each of the past five years; and how many of these were recorded as being caused through the action of the Child Support Agency. [6239]

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The number of individual insolvencies in each of the last five years is shown in the table. Individual insolvencies include business insolvencies applying to individuals and are therefore not strictly personal insolvencies. Information on cause of insolvency is not available, but child support is not a provable debt in bankruptcy.

Individual insolvencies in England an Wales

1991–95

	Number

1992	36,794
1993	36,703

European Union (Employment Protection)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what employment protection is available to British nationals working in other European Union states, with particular reference to Germany. [6145]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Employment protection arrangements in other European Union states are primarily a matter for the Governments of those states.

South Africa

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of trade access for British companies in South Africa. [6398]

Mr. Lang: The Government support the conclusion of a trade agreement between the European Union and South Africa, which will open market access in both directions. To maximise the benefits for both parties, the agreement should aim at comprehensive product coverage in line with World Trade Organisation rules on free trade areas.

That was the position taken by the Government at the General Affairs Council on 25 March 1996 when the EU's negotiating position on a free trade area with South Africa was adopted. South Africa's formal response to the EU's offer of a free trade area is still awaited.

Internet

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions were made at the recent meeting of the Telecommunications Council on practical measures to deal with illegal and harmful content on the Internet. [6328]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The UK's "Internet Watch" self-regulatory framework for dealing with illegal and harmful content on the Internet was well received at recent meetings of the Commission ad hoc working group on this subject. In its report to the EU Telecommunications Council, the working group advocated the establishment of self-regulatory frameworks along the lines of "Internet Watch" in all EU member states.

At its meeting on 28 November, the Telecommunications Council welcomed this report. It adopted conclusions inviting member states to encourage and facilitate self-regulatory systems, possibly including reporting hotlines, and encouraging the provision of Pics-enabled software, to assist in the establishment of rating and filtering system. The Council also called on the Commission to foster co-ordination of self-regulatory bodies at Community level.

This is a highly satisfactory outcome, which will enhance the effectiveness of the "Internet Watch" approach.

EU Industry Council

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Industry Council held in Brussels on 14 November. [7384]

Mr. Greg Knight: The Council agreed a new steel aid code which meets main UK objectives, subject to UK parliamentary scrutiny. The negotiations secured a tightening of aid for partial closures and confirmation of the legal status of annex applying environment aid. The Commission gave a presentation of the sixth report on the control of aid to the steel industry.

The Council agreed the budget for a new multiannual programme for SMEs of 127 mecu. It agreed the text of a resolution on small and micro enterprises.

On state aids more generally, Council conclusions were adopted which were based on one section of the draft resolution. The conclusions recognised that the application of state aid rules requires continuous endeavours to increase legal certainty, predictability and consistency, noted the Commission's orientations regarding possible future proposals under article 94 regarding procedural rules and block exemptions in specified fields, and supported the early commencement of detailed work.

The main issues of the EC merger regulation, threshold reduction and treatment of multiple notifications were discussed. The presidency noted that no qualified majority existed for reducing thresholds. Most member states agreed on the need to solve the problems for business caused by multiple notification. They agreed that further work would be done at working group level.

The Council adopted conclusions on benchmarking, the competitiveness of the European automotive industry, an industrial competitiveness policy for the European chemical industry, and on the competitiveness of sub-contracting in the European textile and clothing industry.

On shipbuilding, the Council agreed to conclusions noting three main action points, to report back to individual cases to the next Industry Council, to work up a policy for the strategic development of the industry and to issue new figures for the state aid level applicable to individual ships by the end of the year.

Finally, the Council discussed progress in the transAtlantic business dialogue. It also discussed standardisation and the global information society.

Libya (Exports)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will establish an inquiry into the export to Libya in 1992 of goods for the use of the military. [2967]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 November 1996]: I have no plans to do so.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigation he has established into the export to Libya in 1992 of goods for the use of the military; and if he will publish (a) the terms of reference and (b) the findings of the investigation as soon as possible. [2968]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 November 1996]: None.

Export Licences

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he provides to Parliament about export licences. [3319]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The DTI places in the Library of the House of Commons a six-monthly analysis of all individual export licences which have been issued or refused. The analysis gives details of numbers of licences issued or refused, by country of destination and by category of goods as classified in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 and the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1995. The most recent analysis covered the first half of 1996. An analysis covering the second half of the year will be placed in the Library of the House in early 1997.

Power Company Takeovers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer the bids from United States companies for East Midlands Electricity and Northern Electric to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement. [5702]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The Director General of the Fair Trading is currently considering the bids by CE Electric and Dominion Resources for Northern Electric and East Midlands Electricity respectively and will advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in due course. All representations on this matter should therefore be submitted directly to the DGFT. The President will make his decision on whether or not to refer the bids to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, in the light of the DGFT's advice.

Mr. Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the United States Administration about protection of United States power companies from foreign takeovers; and if he will make a statement. [5701]

Mr. Page [holding answer 25 November 1996]: In a letter of 28 June 1996 to the Secretary of Commerce, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade raised the subject of US regulation of foreign ownership of US energy utility companies. In his response, Mr. Kantor confirmed that US law does not preclude foreign firms from owning US gas or electricity utilities. We are, however, continuing to study in such cases the detailed regulations to which both US and foreign companies are subject.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term-contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term-contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5418]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1996]: I have asked the Department's agencies to reply directly to the hon. Member.

Historical data on the numbers of temporary staff employed in the headquarters area of the Department are not maintained, and the information is not available in the form requested.

The Department currently has 48 temporary staff on fixed-term appointments and 175 casuals. Historical information of the numbers, in man years, of permanent and casual staff employed by the Department and its agencies is available from the staff numbers table on pages 120 and 121 of the Department's expenditure plans report, Cm 3205, published each March. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 29 November 1996:

To ask the President of the Board of Trade, how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed terms contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992.

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency to the above Parliamentary Question.

2. The total number of posts in RA for each of the financial years since 1992 is as follows:

1992–93: 556

1993–94: 580

1994–95: 582

1996–97: 561.5.

3. These are not identified separately as full-time and part-time since part-time posts count, pro-rata on the number of hours worked, as full-time posts. However, I can say that the following number of part-time staff were employed in each of the above financial years:

1992–93: Number unavailable

1993–94: 21

1994–95: 22

1995–96: 23

1996–97[1]: 24.

[1] As at 30 September.

4. Of the posts shown in para 2 above, two are fixed term contracts. One, for the Chief Executive, commenced in May 1993 for five years and carries no obligation to renew. The other, started in August 1994 is for three years and is renewable.

5. There are no temporary jobs in RA. However, the Agency employs casual staff at times to cover vacant posts or for specific work. The numbers of such staff are as follows:

1992–93: 22

1993–94: 23

1994–95: 16

1995–96: 19.5

1996–97[1]: 17.

[1] As at 30 September.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 29 November 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about various categories of jobs in The Insolvency Service for each year since 1992. The posts allocated to The Service as at 1 April each year were as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
(a) Full-time	1,533	1,537	1,593	1,553	1,432

Total permanent posts	1,547	1,552	1,607	1,565	1,447
(c) Full-time fixed-term contracts:
(i) renewable	0	0	0	0	0
(ii) unrenewable	0	0	0	0	0
(d) Part-time fixed-term contracts:
(i) renewable	0	0	0	0	0
(ii) unrenewable	0	0	0	0	0
(e) Temporary	0	0	0	0	0
(f) Casual	105	273	270	121.5	76.5

[1] Counted as 0.5 full-time equivalent. To assist its investigative effort The Service has the use of accountancy staff obtained on short term contracts from an agency. There were 20 such people as at 01 April 1995 and 45 at 01 April 1996.

In addition to staff filling part-time posts there are others filling full-time posts on for example a job-share basis. Similarly, additional casual staff are employed in permanent posts which are temporarily vacant, for example due to maternity leave.

Royal Observatories

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to issue the invitation to tender for the royal observatories; and if he will make a statement. [6119]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 November 1996]: I have been informed that the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council is unable to proceed at present with tendering of the programme of the royal observatories.

A series of difficulties which have significant financial and legal implications remain to be resolved before PPARC can issue invitations to tender, some of which only emerged during the detailed analysis required to prepare the tender documents. PPARC is determined to resolve these difficulties as soon as possible, but their resolution will realistically take several months.

Given the length of this delay, it will not be possible to adhere to the advertised time scale for the award and commencement of contracts. Consequently, the current tendering exercise has been formally terminated. Organisations which were shortlisted to bid against the invitations to tender have been informed. Tendering will proceed once the difficulties have been resolved and the cost and benefits re-assessed. Meanwhile, the work of the royal observatories will continue on the present basis.

A1 Service (Takeover)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department is taking in respect of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's investigation of the take-over of A1 Service by Stagecoach Holdings plc. [6487]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1996]: As I explained in my letter of 26 September 1996 to the hon. Member, the Office of Fair Trading is currently seeking from Stagecoach Holdings plc the undertakings which they were asked to give following the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the acquisition by Stagecoach of A1 Service in November 1995. The hon. Member is aware that the obtaining of undertakings from Stagecoach was delayed because of judicial review proceedings initiated by the company, which were concluded in June 1996 when the Court of Session in Edinburgh dismissed Stagecoach's petition.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6469]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1996]: On 1 april 1992, the Department employed 5,592 female staff, which was 45 per cent. of the total number of staff and on 1 April 1993 employed 5,700 female staff, which was 44 per cent. of the total staff. During 1992, the Department of Energy joined the DTI and the figure for 1992 therefore excludes former Department of Energy staff.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6449]

Mr. Taylor: [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The figures for female staff in the Department by grade level, on a headcount basis, are as set out:

	Number
Senior Civil Service	32
Grade 6—level	28
Grade 7—level	149
SEO—level	82
HEO—level	301
EO—level	491
AO—level	896
AA—level	396

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6450]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The Department operates a holiday play scheme in central London offering up to 32 places on any one day for at least 11 weeks of the year during school holidays. In addition, DTI staff in Government Offices may make use of local holiday play schemes. The Department's staff have had access to a holiday play scheme in central London since 1990. The following figures show the number of staff whose children used the DTI play schemes during 1993, 1994 and 1995. Figures for 1992 are not available.

	1993	1994	1995
Number of staff using the scheme	74	142	205

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6035]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1996]: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what means, when and at what cost, he intends to promote vouchers for pre-school children. [5864]

Mr. Ancram: Details of expenditure plans will shortly be finalised. I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 355, for what reasons the administration costs of the pre-school voucher scheme do not have additional start-up costs in the first year. [6090]

Mr. Ancram: The cost of administering the nursery voucher scheme, including start up costs have been estimated on the basis of the three-year period of the initial contract and a detailed breakdown is not available. The answer of 14 November spread the total estimated cost for Northern Ireland of £300,000 evenly over the three years.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 355, if he will negotiate to ensure that, in the contract with Capita over the pre-school voucher scheme, that there will be no costs falling on an incoming administration should the voucher scheme not go ahead. [6091]

Mr. Ancram: The national contract with Capita does not cover Northern Ireland but contains an opt-in clause permitting coverage to be extended to the Province when the necessary legislation is in place. In line with commercial practice, the contract for the national scheme contains provision for the payment of costs related to early termination of the contract. Further details are available in the contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Education Administration

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 355, if he will itemise the administration tasks that have to be completed by Capita for £9.17, as the estimated cost of administration per full-time equivalent pupil. [6092]

Mr. Ancram: The principal administrative tasks are:

Establishing and equipping a voucher centre office;

Issue of an initial letter and application forms to parents;

Production, issue, receipt and processing of vouchers; and

Provision of a telephone helpline.

Further details are contained in the contract for the national scheme, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Eastern Health and Social Services Board

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what savings have been made by the Eastern health and social services board in respect of purchases from the North and West Belfast HSS trust since 5 April. [6577]

Mr. Moss: The 1995 public expenditure survey settlement included a requirement from the Department of Finance and Personnel to the health service in Northern Ireland to find 3 per cent. cash efficiency savings. However, after discussions with boards and trusts, I concluded that this would not be possible. Accordingly, instead of being prescriptive, I agreed to guidelines of 1.5 per cent. efficiency savings and 1.5 per cent. cuts in services. In seeking to achieve the necessary savings, I understand that the board negotiated with North and West Belfast HSS trust a contract for 1996–97 which proposed a service reduction equating 1.3 per cent.—£0.831 million—a total saving of 2.93 per cent.—£1.528 million.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what savings the Eastern health and social services board is expected to make in respect of purchases from the North and West Belfast HSS trust in the current financial year. [6578]

Mr. Moss: I understand that the board, in accordance with the guidelines that service reductions should focus on low priority acute elective activity, agreed a contract with North and West Belfast HSS trust which will realise the following savings: cost improvement of 1.56 per cent.—£0.831 million—and in-year service reductions on 0.66 per cent.—£0.331 million.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the savings to be made by the Eastern health and social services board in respect of purchases from the North and West Belfast HSS trust will affect residential homes and their staff. [6579]

Mr. Moss: I understand that the savings realised from the North and West Belfast HSS Trust for 1996–97 have had no implications for the provision of its statutory residential care homes. The contract signed with the trust has no detrimental effect on its existing levels of statutory residential care. The trust has made no approach to the board about any proposals to reduce statutory residential provision in 1996–97.

Royal Group of Hospitals

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients of non-fundholding general practitioners have had their surgery suspended following the announcement by the Royal Group of Hospitals that it is to suspend all non-emergency operations for non-fundholders' patients. [6580]

Mr. Moss: No admissions to the Royal Group of Hospitals that had been booked before its announcement on 30 October have had to be cancelled due to lack of funding.

SCOTLAND

Computers

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lines of computer code there are in his Department's computer systems. [5341]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Department uses a number of proprietary software packages, and for these information on the number of programmes or lines of source code is known only to the supplier.

The Department is reviewing existing systems likely still to be in use in 2000 as part of our strategy for dealing with the year 2000 date change issue, but this review is not yet complete.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those trusts which failed to make a 6 per cent. return on their assets last year, indicating in each case the percentage return that was made. [5656]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following trusts failed to make a 6 per cent. return on their assets last year:

Aberdeen Royal Hospitals: 5.5 per cent.

Law Hospital 5.7 per cent.

Raigmore Hospital: 5.3 per cent.

Royal Alexandra Hospital: 4.7 per cent.

However the remaining 43 NHS trusts in Scotland achieved the required rate of return.

Glasgow Southern Orbital Road

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the time required for the statutory procedures and construction period for the proposed Glasgow southern orbital road. [6101]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that it would take four years, from the time the local roads authorities decide to proceed with the project, to complete the road.

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with local authorities in (a) Renfrewshire, (b) Lanarkshire and (c) Ayrshire concerning proposals for a Glasgow southern orbital road. [6103]

Mr. Forsyth: Officials from the Scottish Office and East Renfrewshire council met on 12 November to discuss the further work to be carried out by the council in developing its bid to the 1998–99 transport challenge fund for the Glasgow southern orbital road. There have been no discussions with authorities in Lanarkshire or Ayrshire.

Legal Aid

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how often the Scottish Legal Aid Board asked (a) solicitors and (b) advocates to produce their files in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995; and how often these requests were refused. [6129]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not routinely gathered and detailed figures cannot be given. There were two large cases in 1995 where solicitors did not produce their files to substantiate their accounts. Both cases were taken to the auditor of court for taxation.

In 1994, a firm of solicitors was asked to produce a significant number of its files to substantiate charges being made to the legal aid fund. As they could not produce them, a liability to the legal aid fund for over 1,000 cases amounting to a sum in excess of £30,000 was extinguished.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff were employed by his Department on Wednesday 20 November. [6142]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On Wednesday 20 November, the Scottish Office—excluding the Scottish Prison Service—employed 4,716 permanent and 380 casual staff—full-time equivalents. At the same time, the Scottish Prison Service employed 4,526 permanent and 41 casual staff—full-time equivalents.

Edinburgh Castle (Flags)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that the Saltire or Lion Rampant is flown in the place of prominence over Edinburgh castle (a) on St. Andrew's day and (b) for the duration of the stay of the Stone of Scone in the castle; and if he will make a statement. [5945]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 November 1996]: We have been considering for some time the arrangements for the flying of flags. On St. Andrew's day, and for the foreseeable future thereafter, the Saltire will be flown in a prominent position over Edinburgh castle, in addition to the Union flag.

Crime and Punishment White Paper

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many submissions he received on chapter 6 of his White Paper, "Crime and Punishment", Cm 3302; who the submissions were from; how many were (a) in favour and (b) against the Government's proposals; and if he will make a statement. [6323]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend received 29 responses relating to chapter 6 of the Crime and Punishment White Paper, Cm 3302. Those who responded are listed in the table.

I am making arrangements for copies to be made available in the Library of the replies from those respondents who have not asked for confidentiality to be respected.

Electricity Transmission Lines

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the undergrounding of (a) existing electricity transmission lines and (b) proposed new lines. [6680]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend has regard to his planning guidance and to any representations that may be made with regard to the undergrounding of all or part of existing or proposed electricity transmission lines.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet ScottishPower to discuss his proposal to require undergrounding of parts of the transmission line to the planned Northern Ireland interconnector; and when he intends to make a final decision on his proposed conditions. [6676]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet ScottishPower to discuss the proposed interconnector. He has asked the company to provide him with further information by 20 December. My right hon. Friend will announce a final decision in due course.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of undergrounding those sections of the proposed Northern Ireland interconnector transmission line that he has identified for that purpose. [6677]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 November 1996]: None. However, in evidence to the inquiry, ScottishPower plc provided estimated costs for the four sections as follows:

Water of Girvan: £3.8 million

Nick of the Balloch: £5.8 million

Duisk Valley: £10.5 million

Water of Tig/Dunnach Burn: £7.8 million.

Electricity Supply Interconnector

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his decision concerning ScottishPower's application to construct an electricity supply interconnector between Scotland and Northern Ireland. [6674]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend is minded to grant consent to the application to construct an overhead line to run from Coylton in Ayrshire to Auchencrosh, subject to the undergrounding of four sections of the line and certain other conditions. He has asked ScottishPower to provide him with further information by 20 December.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the value to the Scottish economy of an electricity interconnector with Northern Ireland. [6682]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 November 1996]: None. The proposed construction of an electricity interconnector with Northern Ireland is a matter for the private companies concerned. Northern Ireland Electricity plc and ScottishPower plc.

TREASURY

Arms Sales

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from (a) the UN and (b) its agencies in respect of the involvement of UK companies in (i) transporting arms, (ii) selling arms and (iii) facilitating arms sales to (1) Rwanda and (2) exiled Rwandans; when he received these; and if he will make a statement. [5496]

Mr. Oppenheim: The report of the UN International Commission on Rwanda claims that letters dated 30 November 1995, 18 December 1995 and 26 August 1996—the last letter recalled the two earlier ones—were sent by the UN International Commission to Customs and no response had been received. These letters were not received by Customs.

Customs did, however, have a meeting with Commission officials on 10 January 1996 and received written communication both from UN International Tribunal in Rwanda, on 21 March 1996, and from the UN International Commission, 12 September 1996. In these contacts, the UN requested information from Customs about arms supplies to Rwanda and exiled Rwandans. Customs investigators responded to these UN requests.

More recently, Customs obtained from the UN copies of the letters dated 30 November 1995 and 18 December 1995. The information requested by the UN in these letters was, in fact, provided by Customs investigators to UN officials in their meeting of 10 January 1996.

The UN Commission has recently expressed complete satisfaction with the co-operation received.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations have been instigated with regard to Mil-Tec Corporation Ltd. in connection with armaments whose final destination was Rwanda or Zaire. [5299]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Customs is aware of the current allegations and will take appropriate action in the light of its assessment of information obtained.

It is not, however, Customs general practice to comment publicly about the existence or nature of any investigations of individuals or companies not yet accused of criminal offences since to do so could risk prejudicing any on-going inquiries or future criminal proceedings.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances he (a) is able to allow and (b) is obliged to disallow claims for deductions for value added tax purposes where expenditure has been incurred but not paid. [6207]

Mr. Oppenheim: The right of businesses to claim deduction of value added tax is in general based on the principle of supplies received rather than on payments made. However, the cash accounting scheme allows businesses with a turnover of not more than £350,000 a year to opt to deduct VAT in the period when payment for supplies is made.

The Chancellor announced a new measure on this issue in his Budget: the VAT bad debt relief scheme has been changed so that non-payers will be required to repay any input tax which they have previously claimed from Customs and Excise. This change, which will apply to supplies made after 26 November 1996 which the customer has not paid for and for which the supplier has claimed bad debt relief, should help to encourage faster payment of debts.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of which member states of the European Union have met or are likely to meet the convergence criteria for European economic and monetary union. [6779]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: An assessment of which countries meet the conditions for joining the single currency on 1 January 1999 will be made by the Council of Ministers in early 1998. At present, there are considerable uncertainties surrounding this and other issues relating to the single currency.

Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when his departmental guidelines on cost-benefit analysis for all Government-sponsored or supported infrastructure projects were last updated with respect to the treatment of betterment; [5470]

(2) if he will list the occasions during the past 10 years when there was prolonged and significant disagreement between his Department and spending Departments over the interpretation of cost-benefit analysis carried out into major infrastructure project proposals; what sanctions he has to enforce his interpretation of his Department's cost-benefit analysis; and if he will make a statement; [5447]

(3) if he will list the occasions on which spending Departments have proceeded with Government-sponsored or supported infrastructure projects (a) against the advice or (b) without the approval of his cost-benefit analysis unit; [5474]

(4) if he will list the main elements of the procedure for resolving disputes between his Department and spending Departments concerning the approval by Departments of Government-sponsored or supported infrastructure schemes and the correct interpretation of cost-benefit analysis carried out on infrastructure project proposals; and if he will make a statement. [5469]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Guidance for officials and managers in central Government Departments with responsibility for the appraisal and evaluation of proposals entailing central Government expenditure is set out in "Economic Appraisal in Central Government: A Technical Guide for Government Departments"—HM Treasury, HMSO, April 1991—known as the Green Book.

The Green Book describes the principles of appraisal and project evaluation, and provides for specialist readers, technical guidance on issues of wide application in central government, including agencies.

Departments approve major capital projects within their delegated limits and responsibility lies with individual departmental accounting officers to ensure value for money.

Above delegated limits approval is subject to agreement by the relevant Treasury expenditure team that the proposed expenditure provides value for money in terms of public expenditure. A central unit in the Treasury provides general guidance, it does not approve individual projects.

The Green Book provides general guidance. From time to time, more specific guidance is written on particular issues such as the use of land and buildings. An annex on land and buildings, which refers to the treatment of betterment, is in the current version of the Green Book. In addition, and for many applications, departments develop and maintain their own guidance tailored to their specific needs and consistent with the conventions set out in the Green Book.

The current edition of the Green Book was produced in April 1991. Treasury officials are currently leading a Whitehall-wide interdepartmental group with the aim of providing an updated and revised edition of guidance for publication in the first quarter of 1997.

Rural Tax Offices

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many rural tax offices there were in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) currently; and what plans he has to alter that number. [3254]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: It is not possible to provide this information as tax offices are not categorised to show whether they are urban or rural.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the Maastricht treaty agreement to return to the ERM for two years before monetary union. [4727]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The Prime Minister and I have made it clear on many occasions that we have no intention of re-entering sterling into any exchange rate mechanism. Since the Maastricht treaty was written, the operation of the ERM has changed considerably. It is not possible, in the light of this, to say how the convergence criteria on exchange rates will be interpreted. The decision on which countries meet the conditions for joining EMU will not be made until spring 1998 at the earliest.

Building Societies

Dr. Spink : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding building societies use of annual percentage rates in promoting mortgages, which are accurate and understandable to the public. [6292]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply, because most mortgage advertising and the calculation of the annual percentage rate of charge for credit is regulated under the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

As some recent court cases have shown, there have been difficulties over the interpretation of the regulations on APR for low-start mortgages. Officials in my Department are discussing with representative of the mortgage lenders how these difficulties might be resolved in a way which gives consumers a clear, balanced view of future commitments.

WALES

Assistance to Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance he has given to (a) British Aerospace (Airbus) Broughton, (b) Raytheon Jets, (c) British Steel Shotton, (d) Optical Fibres, Deeside and (e) Pilkington, Deeside. [6286]

Mr. Hague: The main form of financial assistance available to companies in Wales is regional selective assistance. The Department's relationship with individual companies is commercially confidential but details of projects where companies have received an offer of £75,000 or more are published, following the first payment of grant, in the quarterly publication "Labour Market Trends".

In the last four years, the following information has been published:

Company Name	Travel to Work Area	Offer Value	Category[1]	SIC 1992 Description of Project
Pilkington Micronics Ltd.	Shotton, Flint and Rhyl	£950,000	A	Manufacture and processing of other glass including technical glassware
Raytheon Corporate Jets	Shotton, Flint and Rhyl	£1,516,000	A	Manufacture of aircraft and spacecraft

[1] Category A projects relate to creation of new jobs.

Public Appointments

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the people he has appointed to non-departmental public bodies since his appointment. [6638]

Mr. Hague: This information is contained in "Appointment by the Secretary of State for Wales", which is updated quarterly. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Theatr Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary for Wales when he proposes to visit Theatr Clwyd; and if he will make a statement. [6639]

Mr. Hague: I have no plans at present to visit Theatr Clwyd.

Wrexham-Bidston-Birkenhead Railway

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has travelled on the Wrexham-Bidston-Birkenhead railway in an official capacity since his appointment. [6599]

Mr. Hague: No.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with (a) the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and (b) the relevant local authorities concerning the exit strategy for the corporation; if he has amended his predecessor's forecast winding up date for the corporation; and if he will make a statement. [6955]

Mr. Hague: My March strategic guidance letter to the chairman of the corporation asked the board to prepare a draft plan for winding-up the corporation and put it out to consultation with local authorities and all interested bodies.

I have discussed issues concerning wind-up with the corporation. The corporation is about to issue the draft wind-up action plan for consultation. I have not changed the previously stated intention to wind up the corporation by the end of 1999.

I have asked the chief executive to report to me by 31 March 1997 the outcome of the consultation process and conclusions about succession arrangements.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with and representations he has received from (a) other development agencies and (b) local authorities in south-east Wales concerning a geographical extension of the development remit of the Cardiff Bay development corporation. [6954]

Mr. Hague: Representations have been made to me and my officials by the corporation, other development agencies and commercial interests. I have no plans to extend the designated area of the corporation.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has agreed with Associated British Ports concerning the leasing of Crickhowell house with respect to capital payments to (a) his Department and (b) the Welsh Health Common Services Authority; what refunds were made when (i) the NCM development was finalised and (ii) Scottharbour development commenced; when these payments were made; and to which organisations they were paid. [6953]

Mr. Hague: The details of the terms of the lease are restricted to the parties concerned for commercial reasons. However, the terms are open to inspection by the statutory auditors.

BSE (Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made in his 1997–98 expenditure plans for expenditure on BSE pari passu with the allocation announced in the expenditure plans in the Ministry of Agriculture budget. [6956]

Mr. Hague: I shall make a statement about public expenditure in Wales shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Terrorist Prisoners

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions, and for what reasons, prisoners convicted of terrorist offences in Great Britain and given temporary transfer to Northern Ireland prisons have had that transfer cancelled and been called back to prisons in England and Wales. [5955]

Miss Widdecombe: Since the introduction of revised criteria governing the transfer of prisoners between United Kingdom jurisdictions in November 1992, no prisoner convicted of a terrorist-related offence in Great Britain and temporarily transferred to a prison in Northern Ireland has had that transfer cancelled and been returned to a prison in England and Wales.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prison escapes in each category for each of the last 10 years. [4739]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Chris Mullin, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the Office, to reply to your recent question asking if he will list the number of prisoner escapes in each category for the last 10 years.

Information about the number of escapes by category has only been recorded centrally since the 20 June 1988. Escapes by prisoners who are not category A are shown by the category of prison not prisoner. Most "escapes" by category D prisoners are classed as absconds. These are not included in the figures in the attached tables.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what repairs and maintenance work have been carried out at HMP Doncaster since it was opened in 1994; and what was their cost; [5179]

(2) if he will list the representatives of (a) overseas Governments and (b) overseas Ministries of Justice who have visited HMP Doncaster on fact-finding missions since it opened; on what dates these visits occurred; and if he will make a statement. [5181]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your Questions about maintenance work and visits from overseas governments to Doncaster prison.

Planned maintenance since the prison opened has cost £197,000. This includes routine cleaning of shower heads, checking of the boiler house plant and ancillary equipment, deep cleaning of the kitchen and food serving facilities, and maintenance of the close circuit television, solenoid operated doors, intercoms, external security lighting and lifts. Work which is contracted-out to specialists is included in the maintenance costs.

Routine repairs to the prison estate over that period have cost £713,000. This figure includes the cost of employing the seven permanent staff who carry out much of this work. The repairs include replacing broken wash basins, toilet seats and lighting tubes, machinery breakdowns and repairs to hot water boilers.

Details of official visits from overseas government ministers and justice ministers to Doncaster prison are given in the attached table.

Prisoners (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners, and of what grades, have been released early from each prison in each of the counties of Yorkshire due to miscalculation of their release dates. [5178]

Miss Widdecombe: Records are not kept centrally on a regular basis of the number and security classification of prisoners who have been released early due to error in calculating their sentences. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Following the issue of guidance in a sentence calculation manual on the counting of remand time in consecutive sentences, a total of 66 prisoners were released early in August this year from prisons in Yorkshire; and in the light of the recent decision of the High Court in the cases of Evans and Reid relating to concurrent sentences, a total of six prisoners held in prisons in Yorkshire were released as of 20 November following recalculation of their sentences. Young offenders are not categorised in the same way as adult male prisoners for security purposes. They are classified on the basis of suitability for open or closed conditions.

Prison	Number	Security classification
Doncaster	3	2 category C; one young offender (closed)
Full Sutton	8	All category B

Handguns

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of legally held handguns (a) above .22 calibre and (b) of .22 calibre and below; and in each case what estimate he has made of the cost of compensating owners and dealers if the guns are made illegal. [4784]

Miss Widdecombe: The number of legally held handguns of higher calibres owned by private individuals in Great Britain is estimated to be 160,000. The number of .22 rimfire handguns is estimated to be 40,000.

The Government have estimated that the cost of compensating private owners and dealers in respect of handguns of above .22 rimfire calibre is between £25 million and £50 million.

The .22 rimfire handguns have not been made illegal. Had they been, the Government estimate that the cost of compensation would be in the region of £12 million.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the number of prisoners tested for drugs each month since March by individual establishment and (b) the number of prisoners who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March by individual establishment. [5671]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, Dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the numbers of prisoners tested for drugs each month since March by individual establishment and (b) the number of prisoners who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March by individual establishment.

The figures requested are given in the accompanying tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Table A sets out the numbers tested in each establishment each month between March and September. Data for October is provisional. Table B gives the percentage of samples which have tested positive for each type of drug in each month between March and September by individual establishment. Percentages rather than numbers positive are given as this is a more meaningful indicator. Accordingly, the mandatory drug testing database is configured to produce reports in this format. Conversion of the percentages into figures could only be done at disproportionate cost.

The data in both tables is for drug tests undertaken under all forms of Drug Strategy testing. These comprise the random, on suspicion, risk assessment, frequent testing and on reception types of mandatory drug tests, and voluntary testing. Since forms of targeted testing of drug misusers are included in these figures and because multiple drug positives from single sample have all been counted, the figures in table B indicate higher levels of drug misuse than those for random mandatory drug testing previously published in Hansard.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special procedures the Prison Service adopts when testing women inmates who are menstruating for drugs. [5670]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the procedures for testing menstruating women for drugs.

There are no special arrangements for collecting urine samples from menstruating women. Women of the Muslim and Jewish faiths are strongly opposed to exposing blood and staff are advised to take account of such religious convictions in considering whether to lay disciplinary charges when a prisoner refuses to provide a sample on those grounds.

Contamination of the sample by menstrual blood is a possibility. If contamination of a sample by blood occurs, the sample is sent to the laboratory for advice on whether it can still be analysed. Statistics on samples spoiled by menstrual blood are not kept, however only 1.5% of samples from female establishments are declared spoiled for any reason, including damage in transit, dilution or adulteration by other substances.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug searchers in Her Majesty's prisons have resulted in finds in 1994 and 1995; and if he will make a statement. [5892]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr Jim Callaghan, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about drug searchers.

In 1994, of the drug finds reported to Prison Service Headquarters, 5355 were as the result of searchers. In 1995 this figure was 7197.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the expenditure per month per prison on drug rehabilitation since March. [6273]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about expenditure on drug rehabilitation in each prison per month since March.

This information is not collected centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 233, (1) if he will list (a) the number of prisoners tested for drugs while on risk assessment each month since March and (b) the number of these who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March; [6277]

(2) if he will list (a) the number of prisoners randomly tested for drugs each month since March and (b) the number who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March; [6275]

(3) if he will list (a) the number of prisoners tested for drugs on reception each month since March and (b) the number of these prisoners who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March; [6279]

(4) if he will list (a) the number of prisoners tested for drugs while on frequent testing each month since March and (b) the number of these who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March; [6278]

(5) if he will list (a) the number of prisoners tested for drugs on suspicion each month since March and (b) the number of these who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March; [6276]

(6) if he will list (a) the number of prisoners voluntarily tested for drugs each month since March and (b) the number of these who have tested positive for each type of drug, in each month since March. [6280]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners, who have tested positive for opiates each month since March, are suspected to have tested positive due to their consumption of (a) commercially available opiate–based analgesics and (b) opiates which contravene the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971; [6252]

(2) what plans he has to introduce drug tests in the Prison Service to distinguish between different forms of opiates. [6251]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about the number of prisoners who have tested positive for opiate–based analgesics and for opiates which contravene the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, and whether there are plans to introduce drug tests that can distinguish between different forms of opiates.

The screening tests used by the Prison service do not distinguish between different types of opiate because there is no need for them to do so. If it is suspected that a positive screening result was due to prescribed medication, a more sophisticated confirmation test is required to determine whether the positive result was caused by a therapeutic dose of prescribed medication.

The confirmation test used by the Prison Service is capable of distinguishing between codeine (which is found in many medications), six-acetylmorphine (the active constituent of heroin), and morphine. Six-acetylmorphine is detectable in urine for only a short time after use, before breaking down compietely into morphine. Codeine also breaks down into morphine, but traces of the codeine persist until there is insufficient of either drug to cause a positive result. Therefore, a sample positive only for morphine can be attributed to misuse of an illicit drug. An analysis of the proportion of morphine to codeine, where both are present, will indicate whether a positive result is due to medication or to both medication and an illicit drug.

The attached table shows the number of samples which have confirmation tested positive for the different opiates in each month between March and September this year. Legitimate use of prescribed medication is not regarded as a positive test result and hence is not included in this table.

Breakdown of positive confirmation tests by opiates type, all types of prison drug testing, March to September 1996

Month	Samples tested	Morphine	Codeine	6–Acetylmorphine
March	237	40	31	30
April	225	41	40	29
May	315	46	38	29
June	336	115	51	41
July	344	200	47	54
August	272	158	40	34
September	291	189	43	35

The introduction of hydrolysis on July 2 has allowed the detection of opiates in a more degraded state. Since both codeine and 6–acetylmorphine breakdown into morphine, a sharp increase in morphine positives was to be expected. This affects the June figures because many samples collected in that month would not have been confirmation tested until July.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the average number of hours spent by prisoners in rehabilitation aimed at addressing drug use in each prison for each month since March; [6271]

(2) if he will list the average number of hours spent by prisoners in rehabilitation aimed at addressing drug use in each prison who have tested positive for drug use in each prison for each month since March. [6272]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Average hours per month spent on addressing drug misuse (April–October 1996)

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of extra days which will be served in prison due to positive drugs tests which were taken during each month since March. [6274]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this mater has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking him to list the total number of extra days which will be served in prison due to positive drugs tests which were taken during each month since March.

This information is given in the attached table.

1. This table includes the offences of 'unauthorised use of a controlled drug', 'refusing to provide a drug test sample' and 'falsifying a drug test sample'.

2. The 'unauthorised use of a controlled drug' offence is not exclusively provable by testing, as discovery of the physical act of drug use might also lead to the offence being proven. We are unable to distinguish between those offences discovered by testing and by other means.

3. Offences are grouped by the date of adjudication rather than the date of testing/discovery.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 233, if he will list the number of multiple drug positives from a single sample for each category of drug. [6270]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of multiple drug positives from a single sample for each category of drug.

The attached table shows the numbers of samples that were positive for each combination of drug groups between January and September this year. Prior to January statistics were provided in a different format which did not indicate to which drug types a multiple positive result related. Data for January and February is incomplete because of a phased transition from two laboratories which provided data in the old format to the Laboratory of the Government Chemist which provides the detailed data on individual samples necessary to produce this table.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy in respect of the wearing by prison officers of name badges when on duty in a prison establishment in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [6210]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the wearing of name badges by prison officers when on duty in prison establishments in England and Wales.

The current policy was introduced in July 1993 and made it a requirement for all members of the Prison Service coming into contact with prisoners or the public to wear name badges. The wearing of name badges was resisted by the trade unions, in particular the Prison Officers' Association, who advised its members not to conform. Governors were advised to encourage staff to wear name badges but not to take disciplinary action where they failed to do so.

The policy was reviewed in July 1995 when it was decided to proceed with the introduction of a new style photo bearing security pass which would incorporate, along with other information, the bearer's name. The trade unions have been fully consulted, and have indicated that they have no objection in principle to the proposal.

The new passes will be produced by an external bureau and tenders have been invited. It is expected that the contract will be let by the new year, and the passes should be introduced in establishments later in Spring 1997.

The wearing of these passes will be mandatory for all those who work in prisons.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers by grade, including governors, have left the Prison Service during each month of 1996. [5672]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many prison officers by grade, including governors, have left the Prison Service during each month of 1996.

Details for each grade are given in the attached table. Information is not yet available centrally for governors and officers who left the Service during October.

Prison Canteens

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the Prison Service's policy in respect of stocking specialist cultural goods for minority groups in prison canteens; [5674]

(2) what is the current Prison Service policy regarding the stock which prison canteens and shops can hold; and if he will list the items which all canteens are obliged to stock. [5673]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Prison Service policy on the stocking of goods in prison canteens.

In accordance with Prison Service Standing Order 4 and Instruction to Governors, IG 72/94, copies of which are in the House Library, governors should ensure that prison shops are stocked, so far as is practicable, with items which meet the likely needs of prisoners, including those from the ethnic minorities. The following items must be stocked:

Batteries for personal possessions;

A range of food and confectionary;

Toiletries

Tobacco

Phone cards;

Postage stamps;

Stationery and writing implements.

Specialist cultural goods for minority groups may also be obtained by prison shops using mail order facilities or by external shopping, where this would not incur disproportionate costs.

Prisoners (Self-harm)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the incidents of self-harm recorded (a) among (i) 15, (ii) 16, (iii) 17 and (iv) 18-year-olds and (b) in total by prison for each year since 1990. [5675]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about recorded incidents of self harm amongst 15, 16, 17 and 18 year old inmates in custody in each year since 1990.

The information routinely collected from Prison Service establishments about incidents of self harm is not categorised by age. Information is, however, becoming available in the form requested about the most serious incidents of self harm, those sometimes referred to as attempted suicides. Further work is planned which will improve the quality of this information in coming years. The attached tables are based on a preliminary analysis of the information available. Table 1 lists the total number of reported serious incidents of self harm amongst 15, 16, 17 and 18 year olds respectively for the years in question. Table 2 contains a breakdown of the figures in Table 1 by individual Prison Service establishments.

Firearms Incidents

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) automatic, (b) semi-automatic and (c) single shot legally held firearms have been used in firearms incidents for each of the last 10 years; [5970]

(2) how many (a) automatic, (b) semi-automatic and (c) single shot illegally held firearms have been used in firearms incidents for each of the last 10 years. [5971]

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many legally held (a) .22 calibre handguns, (b) handguns below .22 calibre and (c) handguns above .22 calibre have been used in firearms incidents in each of the last 10 years. [5972]

(2) how many illegally held (a) .22 calibre handguns, (b) handguns below .22 calibre and (c) handguns above .22 calibre have been used in firearms incidents in each of the last 10 years. [5973]

Miss Widdecombe: Information as to whether or not firearms used in offences are legally held has not, in the past, been routinely collected centrally in England and Wales.

However, a special exercise has recently been conducted to find out whether the guns used in homicides were licensed or not.

This covered the years 1992 to 1994, and out of a total of 79 homicides involving the use of a handgun, information was available in 61 cases to show that six were legally held—all more than .22 calibre—and 55 illegally held by the suspect—information on the calibre of 49 of these weapons being available, showing that seven were of .22 calibre and 42 above .22 calibre.

Discharged Prisoners (Accommodation)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were discharged from prison without permanent accommodation in which to live during the last year for which figures are available. [5889]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jim Callaghan, dated 29 November 1996:

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the work on the refurbishment of A and B wings at Wandsworth prison will be completed; and what will be the estimated cost of the work. [6214]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 29 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the work on the refurbishment of A and B wings at Wandsworth prison.

We expect that work on A wing will be completed for occupation in November 1998 and on B wing in September 1998. The estimated cost of the work is £11.13m.

Emergency Powers (Defence) Act 1939

Mr. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to repeal the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act 1939; and if he will publish a consultation paper with proposals for the content of new empowering legislation in place of the Act. [6003]

Mr. Sackville: The Emergency Powers (Defence) Act 1939 was repealed by the fourth schedule to the Emergency Laws (Repeal) Act 1959.

The Act was introduced as a result of the emergency of the outbreak of world war II. These were unique circumstances and there are no plans to introduce similar legislation today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5489]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: In July of this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances—a copy was placed in the Library of the House. This guidance requires officials to identify policies which might have unequal effects on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. Officials are currently considering how best to adapt this to the FCO's circumstances.

The FCO's diplomatic and aid wings also contributed to the Government report "One Year On", published in October and detailing the efforts of this Department and others in women's rights following the world conference on human rights in Vienna in 1993 and the world conference on women in Beijing in 1995.

Irish Republic

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with respect to the Irish Republic opening a consulate in Northern Ireland; and on what occasions representations have been made by him or others in his Department on the matter. [6381]

Mr. Rifkind: Any question of opening an Irish consulate in Northern Ireland would be a matter in the first instance for the Government of the Irish Republic. Neither I nor others in my Department have made representations on this matter.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council on 25 November in Brussels. [7269]

Mr. David Davis: The 13 A points in document 11893/96, the text of which will be placed in the House as soon as it is available, were approved. They included the approval of Ambassador Miguel Angel Moratinos as the European Union's special envoy to the middle east peace process.

The Council noted the resolutions adopted by the European Parliament listed in document 10901/96. A copy of the document will be placed in the House as soon as it is available.

The Council received a report on progress and agreed conclusions on the preparation of the World Trade Organisation Singapore conference encouraging the Commission, in consultation with member states, to seek an ambitious result. The Presidency noted Sir Leon Brittan's report on his recent visit to China.

Carl Bildt, high representative, gave an update on Bosnian institution building. The Commission reported on contacts made at official level on the regional approach in the margins of the Paris steering board. I reported to the Council on preparation for the London conference. I explained that the central theme would be to demand a strengthened commitment to peace implementation from involved parties as a condition for continued international assistance.

The European Union's special envoy to the Great Lakes, Aldo Ajello, summarised developments in the region since November. The Council agreed in principle on a small, 2.5 mecu EU contribution to the UN trust fund established to assist participation by African states in the multi-national force. The Commission will submit an appropriate proposal to the Humanitarian Aid Committee on 28 November.

The Council held a brief exchange of views on East Timor, underlining its support for the Portugal—Indonesia bilateral talks being held under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General in New York. The Council also considered the follow-up to the common position which was adopted in June and invited the Commission to draw up specific proposals for EU development assistance to East Timor.

The Council discussed the middle east peace process. I set out a proposal for a joint EU—Israeli study on the problems of the Palestinian economy which was agreed by the Council. This will be taken forward at working group level.

The Maltese Foreign Minister met EU Foreign Ministers in the margins of the Council. The Council subsequently took note that, at the meeting, the Foreign Minister of Malta had set out the reasons why full membership of the Union was not considered feasible for Malta by his Government, but that he had nevertheless requested a very close relationship with the Union, short of full membership. The Council invited the Commission to make proposals for future EU—Malta relations in the light of his statement.

There was an exchange of views on relations with Turkey over lunch. It was decided that Prime Minister Erbakan should be invited to dinner in the margins of the Dublin European Council on 14 December. The Council concluded that the presidency should take up contacts, with a view to holding an association council early next year.

Over lunch, Ministers approved a declaration on the recent developments in Iran, which have involved accusations and threats by Iran being directed at Germany in the context of a trial taking place there. The declaration made it clear that the judiciary of member states is independent of Governments and Parliament. In it, the European Union expressed the wish that Iran should continue to play a constructive role in international relations and noted that the Union was pursuing the critical dialogue on the basis that it should promote this goal and create better relations with the European Union. The Union also urged Iran in the declaration to discourage threats against persons involved in the trial and extend protection to German citizens in Iran.

Also over lunch, the land transport aspects of the EU–Switzerland negotiations were raised. It was agreed that substantive discussion should be postponed to the 6 December General Affairs Council.

The Council discussed the site for the Community plant site office. The Presidency concluded that a decision on the site could be taken at the 6 December General Affairs Council.

The Council adopted a declaration expressing its concern at the situation in Belarus. It urged President Lukashenko to respect the ruling of the Constitutional Court while reiterating the European Union's desire for a close and co-operative relationship with Belarus.

The Council also adopted a declaration on Chechnya, welcoming the conclusion of the agreement between Prime Minister Chernomyrdin of the Russian Federation and the head of the Chechen Government, Maskhadov and urging them to continue their efforts to find a permanent settlement. The declaration pledged the European Union's continuing support for humanitarian efforts to relieve the plight of refugees and displaced persons.

The Council had an exchange of views on the humanitarian situation in Bulgaria and expressed its willingness in principle to provide assistance. Ministers invited the Commission to keep Council apprised of developments. There was a structured dialogue with Cyprus, which continued over lunch, on 26 November.

The intergovernmental conference ministerial session covered flexibility and institutions. On the former, Ministers considered whether there was a case for new treaty language enabling groups at less than the full membership to integrate further in specific areas using the Community institutions and what general conditions should apply to any such arrangements. On the latter, Ministers looked particularly at the role of the European Parliament and national parliaments. The Government's line on these issues is set out in "A Partnership of Nations". The ministerial session was preceded, as usual, by a briefing meeting with European Parliament representatives.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 2 December 1996

HOME DEPARTMENT

Inquests

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to limit the time between recording a death and the holding of an inquest. [5206]

Mr. Sackville: None. I understand that coroners endeavour to hold inquests as soon as practicable following the death, but there are often factors outside the control of the coroner, which can affect the inquest date.

Bradford Commission

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which (a) Minister, (b) officials from his Department and (c) officials from the integrated Government office in Leeds (1) gave and (2) were invited to give (i) oral and (ii) written evidence to the Bradford commission; and if he will make a statement. [6693]

Mr. Kirkhope: No Minister, and no official from the Government office for Yorkshire and the Humber, gave evidence or was invited to do so. One official from the Home Office who was present in Bradford at the relevant time submitted written evidence based on her observations.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the contents of the Bradford commission report published on 20 November. [6714]

Mr. Kirkhope: The report raises a number of important issues. As expected, most of these are for the consideration of the authorities in Bradford who are concerned with the development of policy and the delivery of services, but all those involved in the promotion of good community relations will wish to note the contents.

Drug Dealers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the cases in which offenders have been convicted for the third or subsequent occasion of dealing in class A drugs in the past two years; [6687]

(2) how many individuals have been convicted of their third offence of dealing in class A drugs in each of the past five years. [6688]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected routinely and data for individual years and cases are not available. On the basis of an analysis of all offenders convicted of drug trafficking offences during a three-month period in 1994, we estimate that around 120 of those convicted of class A drug trafficking offences in 1994 had two or more previous convictions for similar offences.

Live Animal Experiments

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish statistics of scientific procedures on living animals in Great Britain for 1995. [7126]

Mr. Sackville: I expect the report to be published on 18 December.

Computers

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the consequences for data protection arising from the failure of computer systems to be millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [6667]

Mr. Sackville: I am advised by the Data Protection Registrar that she considers that failures of computer systems to take account of the year change to 2000 could result in contraventions of the Data Protection Act 1984. She intends to issue advice.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend section 11 grants for bilingual education beyond the five-year expiry date of March 1997. [6425]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 13 November 1996. Official Report, column 242.

Prisons (Education Budget)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the prison education budget will be for each of the London prisons for 1997. [6211]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Hugh Taylor to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 2 December 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the education budget for each London prison in 1997.

Budgets are allocated to prisons in financial years, running from April to March. The allocations for the financial year 1997–98 are expected to be agreed by the Prisons Board by February.

The education budgets for London prisons in 1996–97 are shown in the attached table.

Budget 1996–97

Prison	£
Belmarsh	356,000
Brixton	353,500
Feltham	420,081
Holloway	366,938
Pentonville	237,532
Wandsworth	229,805
Wormwood Scrubs	284,340

General Election (Costs)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to public funds of delivering general election material in 1992 (a) in total, (b) for poll cards and (c) candidates' mailings. [5952]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 27 November 1996]: The cost to public funds of delivering general election material in 1992 was:

(a) a total of £17,940,315[1];

(b) for poll cards £2,632,479; and

(c) for candidates' mailings £12,692,751.

[1]This includes £2,370,794 which was paid to the Royal Mail regional office at Bolton in respect of postal services delivered to constituencies in north Wales and north-west England, for which no breakdown between costs for delivery of poll cards and candidates' mailings is available, and certain miscellaneous staff and further postage costs.

Full Sutton Prison

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the discovery of an impression of a master key in a prisoner's cell at Her Majesty's prison, Full Sutton; how this breach of security will be investigated; and what steps he is taking to prevent similar breaches of security in future. [5253]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 2 December 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the discovery of an impression of a master key in a prisoner's cell at Full Sutton prison.

The impression of a key was found during a cell search on Tuesday 14 November. The cell was being searched by a specialist team after it was vacated by a high risk category A prisoner, who was transferred to Portlaoise prison in the Republic of Ireland the previous day.

The impression was made by a key which opened class 1 locks at Full Sutton Prison. Such keys open external gates to buildings within the prison secure perimeter. The possession of a key impression is a major security breach, however, to stage a successful escape, the prisoner would have needed to manufacture a working key and accumulate additional equipment in order to overcome all the security systems in operation.

This is an extremely serious incident. All the class 1 locks in the prison have been replaced. A full search of the entire prison, including non-residential areas, took place over the weekend. The search was performed using highly trained dedicated search teams, specialist dogs and equipment designed to detect explosives.

An exhaustive analysis of the intelligence relating to the circumstances of the find is taking place in consultation with the police. Remedial action will be taken in light of the result of the analysis now underway.

TRANSPORT

A1 Dualling

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy for dualling the remaining single carriageway sections of the A1 trunk road. [6999]

Mr. Watts: As a result of the review just completed, the Willowburn-Denwick improvement remains in the programme, but the Morpeth to Lanehead improvement has been withdrawn.

We are aware of the concerns about the adequacy and safety record of this road. In addition to the major schemes, a comprehensive programme of low-cost safety schemes has been undertaken over the last few years. We continue to assess the needs of the route to identify sections where further minor improvements could be taken forward, including shorter section of dual carriageway to provide safer opportunities for overtaking.

Buses

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) statutory powers and (b) financial options he exercises in respect of the conditions pertaining to bus design on routes let by tender by London Transport Buses to private route operators; and what discussions he has had with London Transport Buses concerning the continued use of the Routemaster bus in central London. [5654]

Mr. Bowis: The manufacture of Routemaster was brought to an end by the actions of the then Minister of Transport in 1968. Currently, Ministers have no specific powers on bus design for buses of operators franchised to run bus services in London. These are matters for London Transport, which has made it clear that it expects to see Routemasters continue on routes particularly in central London, so long as they remain available and in good condition.

Lorries

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the review of the existing higher maximum weight limit for lorries engaged in road and rail operations. [7359]

Mr. Watts: In carrying out this review, we have taken into account a number of other proposals that have been put forward for change to the present maximum lorry weights. We have published today a consultation paper which considers these various options and seeks views on a range of proposals. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library.

Coaches

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will end the UK derogation to EU coach weight legislation. [6765]

Mr. Watts: I do not intend to end the United Kingdom derogation to European Union coach weight legislation.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of installing (a) double glazing, (b) air-conditioning and (c) retarder on the axle weight of a coach. [6770]

Mr. Watts: No assessment has been made of the impact of installing double glazing, air-conditioning or retarders on the axle weight of a coach.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received on the presence of 18-tonne continental coaches on UK roads. [6766]

Mr. Watts: I have received no information about the presence of 18 tonne continental coaches on UK roads.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy in the period until the end of the derogation, to allow the UK coach industry to operate up to 18-tonne vehicles which comply with the 10.5-tonne rear axle limit. [6769]

Mr. Watts: The Department of Transport will shortly be issuing a consultation document looking into the feasibility of allowing coaches to operate at 18 tonnes with a 10.5 tonne maximum drive axle weight. Pending the results of this consultation a decision will be made on whether or not to permit such an increase.

Transport Expenditure

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the funding for local authority transport spending provided by his Department. [6945]

Mr. Watts: The provision was as follows:

1992–93: £999 million

1993–94: £1,187 million

1994–95: £1,008 million

1995–96: £960 million

1996–97: £830 million.

Railways (Radio Communications)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when Railtrack intends to reach its engineering target of having 98 per cent. of the rail network covered by the national radio network; and if he will make a statement; [5339]

(2) when he proposes to introduce a timed and costed plan for the installation of cab secure radios in all locomotive units; and if he will place a copy of the plan in the Library; [5336]

(3) which rail lines are currently not covered by a fully operational radio system through which signal boxes can communicate with train drivers. [5338]

Mr. Watts: Installation of the lineside transmitter equipment for the national radio network is virtually complete. A planned enhancement of NRN will require conversion of radio frequencies. This has been authorised and is proceeding.

Under a draft railway group standard on train radio communications, it will be obligatory for all driving cabs to be equipped with an operational radio which will enable communication between train drivers, signallers or control centres, in order for the stock to operate on Railtrack's infrastructure. This has an implementation date of April 1997, with dispensation until February 1998 where secure radio is being installed, subject to approval by Railtrack.

All cabs will be equipped within this programme. Virtually all modern cabs are already fitted; older, former Network South-East stock and a few remaining heritage diesel units will be equipped within the programme.

There are no plans to install a "secure" system of radio communication on a national basis.

National Road Transport System

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of his investment programme for the provision and maintenance of the national road transport system in each year since 1992–93 has been devoted to the repair and maintenance of existing roads. [6742]

Mr. Watts: The following table shows gross capital expenditure by the Department for the provision and maintenance of the national road system, the capital amount spent on road maintenance and repair of the national road system and this figure represented as a percentage of the total.

Year	Total capital expenditure £ million	Capital expenditure on the national road system maintenance and repair £ million	Percentage spent on road maintenance and repair Percent
1992–93	1,874.2	364.5	19.4

1995–96	1,706.2	309.7	18.1

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to his Department of his investment programme for the provision and maintenance of the national road transport system each year since 1992–93, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms based on 1992–93 figures. [6740]

Mr. Watts: The following table shows gross capital expenditure by the Department for the provision and maintenance of the national road system in both cash terms and real terms since 1992–93.

Year	Cash terms (£ million)	Real terms (£ million) (1992–93 prices)

Road Schemes (Somerset)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for the financial years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1996–97, in Somerset, those road schemes costing more than £50,000 requiring his Department's approval, indicating the location or road number, the total spent on each scheme in each year and the contribution made by his Department in each year. [6912]

Mr. Watts: Local authorities do not require my Department's approval for their road schemes, but they may seek financial help under the transport policies and programme—TPP—system. The Department keeps records of individual schemes only where they cost at least £2 million. Details of the schemes that the Department supported in Somerset in the years quoted, and in 1995–96, including the amounts allocated to them as "accepted expenditure", and the actual spend in the first three years, are in the table. It also includes details of the block allocations made to Somerset for minor road schemes in the same period.

M20

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the volume of traffic on the M20 between junctions 3 and 5 one year after it was first opened; what it is now; and what it is estimated to be on such future dates for which estimates are available. [6952]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 29 November 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir John Stanley, dated 2 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the volume of traffic on the M20 between junctions 3 and 5.

Traffic data is only kept readily available for a limited period. Traffic flows one year after this section of road opened (December 1971) could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, the Annual Average Daily Traffic (AADT) flow between junctions 3 and 4 during 1993 (the earliest year for which continuous data is available) was 66,000 vehicles per day (vpd). An equivalent figure for the section between junctions 4 and 5 is not available.

The 1995 AADT traffic flows between junctions 3–5 and 4–5 were 83,100 and 91,500 vpd respectively. Figures for 1996 will not be available until early in the new year.

Evidence presented at the public inquiry into the now withdrawn scheme to widen this section of motorway suggested that, without the improvement, traffic flows during the design year (2012) were forecast to be:–

	AADT
Junctions 3–4
Low growth	110,000
High growth	131,000
Junctions 4–5
Low growth	127,000
High growth	153,000

Road Surfaces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the (a) construction, (b) cost and (c) environmental criteria which determine where and when low noise, open-textured, road surfacing should be used on trunk roads or motorways instead of, or as a replacement for, concrete or standard bituminous construction. [6615]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 2 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking what are the (a) construction, (b) cost and (c) environmental criteria which determine where and when low noise, open textured, road surfacing should be used on trunk roads or motorways instead of, or as a replacement for, concrete or standard bituminous construction.

Low noise surfaces may be considered for new roads, or those which are being substantially altered, where these pass through noise sensitive areas. Their environmental benefits are considered during the development of the detailed design of a new road scheme and balanced against the additional costs of their use compared with alternative means of reducing the impact of traffic noise. The need to replace the surface of an existing road is determined solely by criteria relating to its residual life and skidding resistance.

Porous asphalt is the best known of low noise, open textured, surfacing. It has been subjected to extensive trials and we have established technical criteria for ensuring acceptable durability. Guidance on the criteria for construction is provided in the HMSO publication The Design Manual for Roads and Bridges, Volume 7: Pavement Design and Maintenance. The guidance includes advisory limits on traffic intensity and other factors affecting the practicality of its use. It is not Highways Agency policy to use porous asphalt as an overlay for existing roads partly because the surface drainage arrangements need to be altered, but also because the substantial additional costs cannot be accepted without any offsetting saving on other necessary noise mitigation measures or financial compensation.

Other types of open textured surfacing are being developed such as thin bituminous overlays. Examples have been approved for limited use in trunk road and motorway maintenance to restore skidding resistance. These products appear to offer promise through reduced noise levels when compared with conventional road surfaces, but have not yet demonstrated their ability to withstand heavy traffic. It is too soon to say whether or not these products will provide an economical alternative to conventional bituminous asphalt overlays.

There are particular difficulties with thin overlays on jointed concrete roads because of the tendency for the joints to be reflected as cracks in the surface material, causing a line of weakness. The trials with the new thin surfacing products include techniques to address this problem and are being monitored as part of the Highways Agency's continuing programme of research and development.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Defender Systems

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research he has undertaken in the last three years on public defender systems. [5198]

Mr. Streeter: No new research on public defender systems, whereby salaried staff provide legal services in criminal cases, has been commissioned by this Department in the last three years. Officials from this Department recently made a fact finding visit to north America to see how both criminal and civil legal aid are delivered in the USA and Canada. Among other services, they saw public defender systems in action and spoke to those responsible for running them.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Student Loans

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the contracts awarded to (a) NM Rothschild for advice on the sale of student loan debt and (b) Shreeveport for advice on the contracting out of the work of the Student Loans Company, indicating (i) their costs and (ii) their duration. [6941]

Mr. Forth: We expect the duration of the contracts to be between nine months to a year. Costs are dependent on the daily fee rates charged and the use made of those companies by the Department. Individual fee rates negotiated between the Department and the advisers are confidential.

Grants for Education Support and Training

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the breakdown of the allocations under each separate title of the grants for education support and training in 1996–97, (b) the planned breakdown for 1997–98, and (c) the change in numbers and percentage between the two years for each element and the total allocations for the above periods. [6937]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table sets out allocations under the grants for education support and training—GEST—programme for 1996–97. GEST allocations for 1997–98 will be announced in December.

Learning Difficulties

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals she has to ensure that newly qualified teachers starting their teaching careers are able to (a) identify and (b) give appropriate teaching to children at risk of specific learning difficulties and dyslexia. [6763]

Mr. Forth: The existing criteria for courses of initial teacher training require that newly qualified teachers should have acquired the necessary foundation to develop the ability to identify and provide for special educational needs and specific learning difficulties. We shall be consulting on revised requirements for initial teacher training in new year.

Pupil to Teacher Ratios

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the pupil to teacher ration in (a) 1979 and (b) the last year for which figures are available. [6760]

Mr. Robin Squire: The overall pupil-teacher ratios for maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England were 18.9 in January 1979 and 18.5 in January 1996.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average pupil to teacher ratio for (a) grant-maintained secondary schools and (b) local authority secondary schools. [6759]

Mr. Robin Squire: The pupil-teacher ratios in grant-maintained secondary schools and local education authority secondary schools in England in January 1996 were 16.3 and 16.7 respectively.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will give a breakdown of spending on the Teacher Training Agency in 1996–97 and of planning spending for 1997–98. [6936]

Mr. Forth: The latest estimate of the Department's grant to the Teacher Training Agency in 1996–97 is £197.763 million, consisting of £190.090 million recurrent expenditure, £4.473 million on capital expenditure and £3.200 million on administration costs. Subject to parliamentary approval, we plan a total grant of £209.771 million to the TTA in 1997–98, including £204.778 million on programme expenditure and £4.993 million on administration. Decisions on the detailed distribution of these sums are for the TTA itself.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will give a breakdown of spending on the grant-maintained sector in 1996–97 and of planned spending in 1997–98, showing (a) current funding and (b) capital funding and the percentage change between the two years. [6927]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

	1996–97 £ million	1997–98 £ million	Percentage increase
Recurrent	[1]101	116.2	15.0
Capital	138	144.9	5.0
Total	239	261.1	9.6

[1] Funding to the Education Assets Board and Education Associations is not included in the 1997–98 recurrent baseline. It has therefore been deducted from the published recurrent amounts shown for 1996–97 so as to provide comparable figures.

Youth Training

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of people on youth training (a) failed to complete the course, (b) failed to obtain a recognised qualification and (c) completed the course but failed to find a job, for each training and enterprise council in the financial year 1995–96. [6331]

Mr. Paice: The available information, which comes from the national follow-up survey of YT trainees, is given in the following table. These results are consistent with the national totals published in "Labour Market Trends". They relate to the period February 1995 to January 1996, the last full year for which data are available. The figures overstate the extent to which young people leave the programme early. They include a significant number who simply switched from one training provider to another, as well as trainees who left early having already achieved their full qualification. Those not gaining a qualification will include many who subsequently obtained a job, or continued in further education and training.

Training

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amount was spent on training by the Department for each unemployed person in (a) 1989–90 and (b) 1995–96, (i) in cash terms and (ii) in 1995–96 prices. [6332]

Mr. Paice: As the programmes covered by training expenditure are by no means confined to the unemployed, it would not be appropriate to express expenditure per unemployed person.

Disabled People

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she has made a decision on the future of committees for the employment of people with disabilities. [7400]

Mr. Paice: Committees for the employment of people with disabilities—CEPDs—were first set up under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 to perform specific functions related to the Act. In recent year's they have mainly been involved in providing advice and assistance to the Employment Service. The current terms of appointment of CEPD members cease on 31 March 1997.

The employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995—DDA—which come into force today, make fundamental changes to the way we approach the employment of disabled people, and will establish a new era of opportunity for them. In view of these new provisions, we have been considering whether the ES still requires local advisory arrangements. Consultations showed the value of partnership working between the ES and a range of local organisations and individuals able to influence positive developments in disabled people's employment in the local labour market.

We have taken into consideration the new opportunities that the DDA brings, the range of views expressed and the need to make best use of available resource. We have decided that the relevant provisions of the 1944 Act, under which CEPDS are appointed, will be repealed and that, with effect from April 1997, the ES will set up in each region a non-statutory regional disability consulting group.

These new regional consulting groups will provide a fresh, more streamlined approach to partnership working between the ES and relevant local organisations and individuals. The groups will be encouraged to contribute actively to the ES's regional and local initiative to promote improvements in the employment of disabled people.

I should like to take this opportunity to record my thanks for the important contribution made by current and past members of CEPDs and their predecessors. The new era which opens up today owes much to their willingness to work with the ES over many years to help improve the employment prospects for disabled people.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Arrears

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the arrears from (i) rents and (ii) other income currently outstanding to each local authority; what incentives are used to encourage local authorities to reduce these debts; and if he will make a statement. [4903]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on local authority rent arrears is collected from authorities on their housing subsidy claim form returns. A ranked listing of authorities' cumulative arrears as a percentage of rent roll is released each year in a DOE news release. Copies of the DOE news release, the latest of which provides statistics on the position at the end of March 1995 and was released on 12 January 1996, are in the Library of the House.

Other arrears relate primarily to uncollected community charges and council taxes, but may also result from a range of other sources such as outstanding insurance claims, trading activities, mortgage arrears and so on. Information on uncollected community charge and council tax for each local authority is not available centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy regularly publishes estimates for individual authorities: figures for 31 March 1995 are available in its "Revenue Collection Statistics 1994–95" publication, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. No information is available centrally on any other forms of arrears.

The Government expect local authorities to pursue all arrears of rent, community charge and council tax and so on that are collectable. It is in the interests of authorities to do so to restrict their level of borrowing and council tax bills overall. Authorities have a range of powers enabling them to enforce recovery of rent arrears, community charge and council tax arrears. They use these powers at their discretion and my Department has provided general guidance through practice notes and other advice. For example, in October 1994, a research report, "Rent Arrears in Local Authorities and Housing Associations" was issued by the Government to all local authorities; this contains good practice advice on preventing and managing rent arrears.

The Government have introduced a range of measures to encourage authorities to maximise revenue collection, for example the ring-fencing of housing revenue accounts, penalising poor performers in the distribution of housing investment programme allocations and requiring publication of rent arrears information under the citizen's charter performance indicator regime set up by the Audit Commission.

Energy Efficiency Voucher Scheme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the assessment of his Department's energy efficiency voucher scheme has been completed; when he intends to publish the results of the assessment; and if he will make a statement. [6543]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Evaluation of my Department's Wasting Energy Costs the Earth domestic energy efficiency campaign, of which the energy efficiency voucher scheme formed a part, is expected to be complete by mid-December.

The energy efficiency voucher scheme and associated promotions have formed an integral part of a wider drive to increase the level of energy efficiency awareness among domestic consumers and to encourage the purchase of energy efficiency goods. We are continuing this work through the Energy Saving Trust, and have recently announced an extra £21.5 million in its allocation over the next three years to enable it to pursue it.

Show Houses

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which growth in the housebuilding sector is inhibited by the practice that show homes can be assessed for the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement. [6683]

Sir Paul Beresford: No such assessments have been made.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the total annual additional costs to purchasers of new houses as a result of the practice of subjecting show houses to the uniform business rate. [6684]

Sir Paul Beresford: The House-Builders Federation estimates that the total yearly rates bill of show houses in England and Wales is about £8 million. If show houses were subject to the council tax and not rates, the federation estimates that the year's bill would be £3.4 million. The rates are generally paid by housebuilders because they occupy show houses. It is for the builder to decide the extent to which non-domestic rates, and other costs, are passed on to house purchasers.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which currently levy the uniform business rate on show houses. [6685]

Sir Paul Beresford: All local authorities in England and Wales are obliged to charge non-domestic rates on show houses.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met housebuilders to discuss the impact of the case of Ideal Homes v. Ian Walker at the rating tribunal in 1995; and what response he has made to the representations made to him on this matter. [6686]

Sir Paul Beresford: We regularly meet the house building industry. I have recently received representations from the House-Builders Federation requesting that show houses be subject to the council tax and not non-domestic rates. I am currently considering my response.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the levying of business rates and council tax on show homes; and if he will make a statement; [6904]

(2) if he will make it his policy that show homes are treated as stock rather than business or unoccupied residential premises for the purposes of local government taxation. [6906]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have recently received representations from the House-Builders Federation requesting that show houses be subject to the council tax and not non-domestic rates. I am currently considering my response.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount paid in the latest year for which figures are available in respect of (a) uniform business rates and (b) council taxes levied on show homes. [6905]

Sir Paul Beresford: The House-Builders Federation estimates that the total yearly rates bill on show houses in England and Wales is about £8 million. Show houses are not subject to the council tax.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Stationery Office, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the 20 largest printing contracts currently being carried out by The Stationery Office, Cardiff; and if he will specify which of them are bilingual printing jobs. [7147]

Mr. Freeman: The Stationery Office is a privately owned company carrying out work for a variety of customers. Its contracts are its own commercially confidential business.

Details of printing contracts let by Government Departments are not collated or held centrally. At the point of sale of The Stationery Office, on 30 September 1996, no contracts or arrangements between Government Departments and HMSO Wales Print Services were transferred to The Stationery Office. One customer contract and one customer arrangement previously held by HMSO Wales Print Services were transferred. The contract was with the Metropolitan police for the provision of printed matter and the arrangement was with Health Promotion Wales for a warehousing and distribution service.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has had with respect to the closure of the HMSO printing plant at Llanishen, Cardiff. [7149]

Mr. Freeman: The business of HMSO, including the property at Llanishen, Cardiff was transferred to The Stationery Office and sold on 30 September 1996. I have had no representations relating to Llanishen.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Human Genetics Advisory Commission

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when there will be an announcement on the membership of the new Human Genetics Advisory Commission; and if he will make a statement. [7383]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am delighted to announce that the following have agreed to serve on this important new group.

Sir Colin Campbell (Chairman)	Vice Chancellor, University of Nottingham
Professor Cairns Aitken	Chairman, Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS Trust
Dr. Micheala Aldred	Director, Retinoblastoma Society
Professor Martin Bobrow	Professor of Medical Genetics, Cambridge University
Mrs. Doris Littlejohn	President, Central Office of Industrial Tribunals, Scotland
Dr. Onora O'Neill	Chairman, Nuffield Council on Bioethics
Reverend Dr. John Polkinhorne	Chairman, Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing
Dr. George Posts	Chairman, Research and Development, SmithKline Beecham
Ms Moria Stuart	Newsreader, British Broadcasting Corporation

The chairman of the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee will also be a member. The current acting chairman is Professor Norman Nevin of the Department of Medical Genetics, Belfast City health and social service trust.

The advisory commission will be considering the broad social, ethical and/or economic consequences of developments in human genetics, for example, in relation to public health, insurance, patents and employment. They will also advise on ways to build public confidence in the new science. The group has been asked to give early consideration to how it can make itself open to wider public views.

Human genetics is developing rapidly. It offers major opportunities for improving the quality of life and for wealth creation, but also raises sensitive and complex issues which need to be addressed. The advisory commission will be able to approach these matters from a broad perspective, reporting direct to Industry and Health Ministers and supported by a secretariat based in the Office of Science and Technology. The first meeting will be held as soon as possible in the new year.

Bills (Payment)

Ms Armstrong: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each Department in 1995–96 the percentage of bills paid within 30 days or in accordance with agreed terms. [6719]

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) on 18 July, Official Report, column 613–14 on this matter.

The hon. Member will also wish to be aware that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury will be publishing soon the first league table of Government Departments and their agencies based on the revised monitoring arrangements.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 701, what were the proposed annual savings for the information technology projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million, undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6697]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1996]: Within my Department, project appraisals consider both qualitative and quantitative benefits. Individual projects will reflect both the business priorities of the time and the Department's strategic framework for IT. Some requirements are for pilots, to trial facilities on a small scale, and there are proposals which are a matter of operational necessity—for example, remedial work for the century date change—or provide for cost avoidance, for example, in the replacement of existing IT systems where the option of a return to a manual system is impracticable.

In my answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 701, I listed 13 relevant projects. For three of these, assessment of savings is inappropriate, being either enabling projects or concerned with pilots and the sourcing official of goods and services. For the remainder, the total cumulative quantifiable savings were estimated to be £80.9 million over the years to 1999–2000 as follows:

Financial year

1993–94: £4.2 million

1994–95: £7.1 million

1995–96: £9.4 million

1996–97: £13.8 million

1997–98: £14.8 million

1998–99: £15.3 million

1999–00: £16.3 million.

The realisation of such savings is one of a number of factors considered within my Department's resource bidding and allocation processes. Many of the projects are still being implemented and for most of the remainder there is no ready source of information on annual savings attributable to investment in IT systems in isolation rather than in conjunction with other measures to improve efficiency.

Actual savings recorded centrally have been:

Financial year

1993–94: £1.4 million

1994—95: £1.7 million

1995–96: £5.7 million.

These are lower than previously estimated, primarily because the implementation of one major project—the Department's office system infrastructure—was delayed by one year pending availability of funds.

Ms Church: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 701, what are the proposed annual savings for the planned information technology projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million. [6696]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1996]: In my answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 701, I identified three planned projects costing £1 million or above. Of these, the business case for one is still under development, another concerns remedial work arising from the century date change, and the third is a major enhancement to an existing system. This enhancement provides new quantifiable savings which will accrue primarily to the private sector, due to the deregulatory nature of the project, and at the same time maintains the benefits of the existing system over an extended period giving savings totalling £27 million over eight years, with the average annual saving for the remaining life of the system being estimated at £4.2 million.

Industrial Tribunals (Disability Discrimination)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if (a) his Department and (b) the industrial tribunals have completed their consideration of the employment provisions contained in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 with regard to the composition of industrial tribunals hearing cases under that Act; and if he will make administrative arrangements in a manner similar to those pertaining under race relations legislation, so that wherever possible a member who has special knowledge or experience of disability issues in the employment field will sit on tribunals hearing cases raised under disability legislation. [6949]

Mr. John M. Taylor: We are considering the matter with the president of the industrial tribunals and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Industrial Attachments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the industrial attachments to his Department, by departmental section, specifying (a) the commencement and finishing date, (b) the names of the individuals and their company or organisation and (c) the nature of the work undertaken. [6118]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 26 November 1996]: I list in table 1 the names, parent companies, start and finish dates and the directorates within the Department for those individuals who are on temporary secondment as part of our continuing programme of interchange of staff with the private sector. At table 2, I list the name, parent companies and start and finish dates for those individuals currently on temporary secondment to the Department as part of the export promoter initiative.

Newspaper Distribution

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will request the Director General of Fair Trading to refer the newspaper distribution system to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [6402]

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is the long-standing and consistent policy of successive Secretaries of State that the making of monopoly references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is normally a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading in areas of economic activity within his jurisdiction. He has said that he is not persuaded that this is the best way forward for the industry, but that he is continuing to monitor the newspaper distribution industry and is open to further representations.

Multiple Newsagents Association

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives from the Multiple Newsagents Association; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [6405]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I last met representatives of the Multiple Newsagents Association on 31 January 1996 to hear about the progress of industry talks concerning newspaper distribution.

National Publishers Association

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives from the Newspaper Publishers Association; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [6404]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Neither my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade nor I have met representatives of the Newspaper Publishers Association. The then Minister for Consumer Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton), met the NPA on 28 June 1994 to discuss the provisions of the industry code of practice for newspaper supplies.

Working Time

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now publish the research he has commissioned from Professor J. M. Harrington on the issue of working time and its impact on health. [6799]

Mr. John M. Taylor: As indicated in the reply by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 20 November 1996, Official Report, columns 573–74, a copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

World Trade Organisation

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been made to the Government of Singapore in respect of participation by UK-based non-governmental organisations at the World Trade Organisation interministerial conference in Singapore. [7009]

Mr. Nelson: Representations to participate in the conference are made to the World Trade Organisation secretariat in Geneva. Twelve UK-based non-governmental organisations have requested registration forms from the secretariat to participate in the conference.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the (a) Ministers, (b) officials and (c) accompanying persons whose attendance at the World Trade Organisation interministerial conference in Singapore in December 1996 will be paid for by public funds. [7136]

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade plans to lead the UK delegation and will be accompanied by 12 officials.

Tax Compliance Costs

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the tax compliance costs to unincorporated business in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [6913]

Mr. Page: I am aware of the concerns expressed by unincorporated businesses and by small businesses generally regarding tax compliance costs. These concerns were raised, for example, in the course of the "Your Business Matters" conferences and the resulting report which was published earlier this year.

The Government have taken a number of steps to reduce the burdens imposed on small businesses. These include the joint working programme, which has made the PAYE and NIC systems easier to operate, and the VAT annual accounting scheme which reduces the number of returns to be made from one per quarter to one per year. Self-assessment, which is now being introduced, is a simpler, more streamlined system for unincorporated businesses and is expected in time to lead to reduced compliance costs.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 315, what information his Department collates regarding (a) the percentage of UK small and medium firms which export, (b) the figures in each EU country and (c) the EU average. [6555]

Mr. Page [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My Department has collated estimates from two independent sources on the percentage of small and medium enterprises which export; these estimates are set out in the table. The European Commission defines a small or medium enterprise as one that employs fewer than 250 employees. The table does not give the percentage of small and medium enterprises that export according to this definition, nor can it be derived from the published information.

There is also no information on the sample sizes or the general quality of the data.

Newsagents

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of professional newsagents (a) currently operating and (b) operating five years ago. [7369]

Mr. Page: This information is not available from official sources.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to ensure the newsagents have choice in where to buy their newspapers. [6836]

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission in its 1993 report on the supply of national newspapers did not find that the publishers' practice of granting exclusive rights to wholesalers to distribute over specified areas was against the public interest.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small independent newsagents have gone out of business in the past 12 months. [6837]

Mr. Page: This information is not available from official sources.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to monitor the transfer of newspaper deliveries between newspaper wholesalers. [6835]

Mr. Taylor: The Director General of Fair Trading has a responsibility for monitoring developments in the industry. Several agreements between newspaper publishers to rationalise newspaper delivery have been furnished to the Office of Fair Trading under the provisions of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 and have been placed on the public register of restrictive agreements. The Director General of Fair Trading is considering whether any of the agreements contain significant restrictions which warrant scrutiny by the restrictive practices court.

PRIME MINISTER

European Council (Scrutiny Reserve)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each (a) occasion when and (b) matter upon which Her Majesty's Government have entered a scrutiny reserve at European Council meetings in the current parliament. [6556]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The outcomes of European Council meetings are issued as conclusions of the presidency alone. The question of scrutiny reserves does not therefore arise.

In cases where the European Council reaches political agreement on draft legislative texts, it would be open to any Head of State Government to alert colleagues if these had not yet cleared parliamentary scrutiny. There is no central register, however, of the occasion on which this may have occurred.

Different arrangements apply for Council of Ministers' meetings.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Dalit Reservations

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the Government of India to amend regulations extending the Christian Dalit reservations. [5723]

Dr. Liam Fox: The Government frequently restate their view that discrimination on religious grounds is unacceptable. The issue of reservations is an internal matter for the Government of India. We understand consideration is already being given to the extension of reservations to Dalit Christians.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud Prosecutions (Personal Investment Authority)

37. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the (a) rate of progress and (b) efficiency of prosecutions arising from fraud cases covered by the Personal Investment Authority; and if he will make a statement. [5207]

The Solicitor-General: Cases covered by the Personal Investment Authority are not separately identified in statistics relating to the prosecution of fraud. I have no reason to believe that such cases are prosecuted any differently from other fraud cases.

Lenient Sentences

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to change the procedure for referring unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement. [5204]

The Solicitor-General: The procedure for referring unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal is prescribed by sections 35 to 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. There are no plans to change this procedure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Review of Training for Staff

Mr. Allen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, when the planned House-wide review of training for staff will take place. [6618]

Mr. Beith: The House-wide review of training is planned for 1997. A more specific date will be decided by the Board of Management after the competing claims for staff resources have been considered early in the new year.

Members of the European Parliament

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many British Members of the European Parliament have opted to accept a lower salary than that for which they are currently eligible. [7112]

Mr. Newton: I am informed by Her Majesty's Treasury that the answer is none.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Bus Superannuation Scheme

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the determination by the pensions ombudsman in the case brought by Mr. Wheeler against the trustees of the National Bus employees superannuation trust scheme. [5677]

Mr. Heald: A copy of the determination, provided by the pensions ombudsman, was placed in the Library on 22 November.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5486]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: In July this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment, a copy of which is in the Library, was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. Senior officials in this Department have been issued with the guidance which requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not.

The recent Government report "One Year On" outlines action taken by Government to benefit women since the World Conference on Women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

Absent Parents

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the report of the Society of Practitioners of Insolvency, a copy of which has been sent to him, on the impact of family breakdown in finances of Britain's absent parents. [6238]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The report on personal insolvency issued by the Society of Practitioners of Insolvency in May was the first in that series to identify maintenance commitments as a separate cause of insolvency. The majority of the cases sampled—over 66 per cent.—specified business reasons as the cause of their insolvency while only around 3.5 per cent. cited divorce or maintenance commitments but the figures do not differentiate between spousal maintenance and child maintenance.

Responsibility for their children's maintenance applies as much to those who live apart from their children as to those who live with them. By implication, the figures in the report suggest that some people living with their families have also found it difficult to balance family expenditure and other bills. Under the child support schemes, absent parents retain at least 70 per cent. of their net income as assessed under the formula after paying current maintenance, to give them sufficient flexibility to manage their remaining expenditure. In addition, child support debts are not provable in bankruptcy proceedings, which means that other debts actually caused the insolvency in cases which named maintenance debt as a reason. The report offered no analysis of these cases.

War Widows' Pensions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 162, how many war widows' pensions have been awarded in respect of smoking-related conditions in each of the past 10 years. [6608]

Mr. Heald: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits Agency, Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in respect of current plans relating to the number of Benefits Agency offices required in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [5226]

Mr. Roger Evans: Eleven representations have been received, all of which were from hon. Members.

Child Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) of 12 November, Official Report, column 194, how many (a) new claims and (b) recipients there were in each of the last 15 years for (i) child benefit and (ii) one parent benefit; how many claims for each of those benefits were turned down in each of the last 15 years; if he will provide a breakdown of the reasons for the refusal of claims for each of those benefits in each of the last 15 years; and how many claims for child benefit in each of those years were based on foreign documentation. [6267]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Figures are not available for the number of claims for child benefit in each of those years which were based on foreign documentation, but are estimated to have been 16,000 a year in each of the last three years.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much the winter supplementary estimate for class XII, vote 1 proposes to increase provision for 1996–97 in respect of cyclical income support; how much of this increase corresponds to the reduction in income-based jobseeker's allowance; and how much results from the larger than expected increases in the numbers of (a) sick and disabled people and (b) unemployed people claiming income support. [6413]

Mr. Roger Evans: The transfer of expenditure from jobseeker's allowance, income based to income support, cyclical, arising from how these benefits are included in the main estimate, has had no impact on the increase in provision for 1996–97, in respect of cyclical social security.

It is estimated that of the £350 million increase in provision for cyclical social security:

£300 million relates to sick and disabled people;

£50 million relates to a higher proportion of the unemployed getting (income related) benefit.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the figures for planned spending by his Department in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 published in table 5A.4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98" include the effects of any agreement concerning the Department's estate under the private finance initiative. [7196]

Mr. Lilley: Yes. The successful bidder for the DSS estate services contract will be required to provide a payment of £250 million to realise underlying value from the assets. This sum will be payable on completion of the contract, expected in 1997–98. The figures for 1997–98 in table 5A.4 of the latest "Financial Statement and Budget Report" take account of this receipt. The Department also expects further on-going running costs savings from efficiencies in estate management. The extent of these will of course be subject to the outcome of the competition process.

I also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 12 November, Official Report, columns 201–02.

Bilingual Medical Certificates

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he has made for the printing of bilingual medical certificates at alternative printing premises after the closure at the HMSO Llanishen operation. [7145]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Benefits Agency provides bilingual versions of forms SC1 and SSP1, which are self-certificates. Medical certificates are produced in English only.

The requirements to provide bilingual versions of SC1 and SSP1 have not been changed by the closure of HMSO Llanishen.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Alcohol-related Crime (Minors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 years have been prosecuted for alcohol-related crime in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4408]

Sir John Wheeler: Information is not available in the form requested. Statistics are kept on offences directly related to alcohol consumption but not on crimes where the offender is under the influence of alcohol. The table gives figures for primary offences involving alcohol, some of which also cover drugs. The majority are motoring offences such as driving while unfit through drink or drugs or driving with excess alcohol in breath. The "other" category includes, for example, simple drunk, and drunk in charge of a loaded firearm.

Alcohol Sales (Minors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions for selling (a) alcohol and (b) alcopops to under-age children have taken place in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; what proportion of prosecutions have involved sales from (i) public houses, (ii) off licences, (iii) supermarkets and (iv) other outlets; and if he will make a statement. [4402]

Sir John Wheeler: Such information as is available is given in the table. It is not possible to give separate figures for alcohol and alcopops, or to distinguish, without incurring disproportionate cost, the proportion of prosecutions by the nature of the outlet.

Decommissioning Bill

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consult the Home Department with a view to extending the provisions of the proposed decommissioning Bill to England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [5118]

Sir John Wheeler: I have done so, and the Bill so extends.

Punishment Beatings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the total cost to public funds of the assaults known as punishment beatings in Northern Ireland; and if he will break down the costs in terms of (a) police costs, (b) medical costs and (c) cost of compensation paid to the victims in the last two financial years and the current year to date. [5852]

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to estimate precisely the total cost to public funds of so-called punishment beatings. However, for illustrative purposes, a victim of a punishment attack who suffered a broken leg and spent 10 days in hospital could cost the public purse £9,000 in potential medical and policing costs and subsequent compensation awards. There are believed to have been 563 of these assaults between 1 January 1994 and 25 November 1996. This figure does not include shooting attacks.

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many punishment beatings have taken place in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years and the current year to date. [5855]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of punishment assaults for the period 1991 to 25 November 1996 is set out in the table:

Year	By loyalist groups	By republican groups	Total
1991	22	40	62
1992	38	38	76
1993	35	6	41

1995	76	141	217
1996[1]	118	158	276

[1] To 25 November 1996. This does not include punishment shootings, which are recorded separately.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are presently employed at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing, Coleraine, what have been the figures for each of the last three years; how many grades of employees there are and how many employees there are in each grade; how many (a) have retired (b) left their employment and (c) been dismissed in those years; how many have been hired in the same period and grades; and what are the pay scales for each grade. [5847]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland under its chief executive, Mr. Brendan Magee. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brendan Magee to Mr. William Ross, dated 26 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your recent question about staffing in DVLNI, Coleraine.

The information requested is set out in the tables. The figures exclude short term period appointments (Casuals). Throughout the three year period DVLNI employed on average 29 Casual AAs.

Residential Homes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residential homes for the elderly there are in Northern Ireland in the private sector. [6109]

Mr. Moss: At 31 March 1996, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 131 private residential care homes for elderly people in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to support the private residential home sector in Northern Ireland. [6113]

Mr. Moss: Government remain firmly committed to the people first community care objective that there should be a strong independent sector alongside good quality public services. In the area of residential and nursing home care, the independent sector continues to be the main provider of care. At 30 September 1996, 86 per cent. of residential care and nursing home placements made by Health and Social Services trusts were in private and voluntary sector homes.

Elderly People

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many elderly persons have been recipients of care in the community in each of the last three years. [6110]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the total number of elderly people with complex care needs who were in receipt of a package of care in the community in Northern Ireland at 31 March in each of the past three years:

At 31 March	Total
1994	3,654
1995	6,849
1996	9,146

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many elderly persons receiving state assistance with care costs have been cared for in (a) residential homes and (b) their own homes, in each of the last five years in Northern Ireland. [6115]

Mr. Moss: Precise data for all the years requested are not available. However, the following table shows the breakdown of the number of packages of care being provided in the community by health and social services trusts at 31 March in each of the last three years for elderly people with complex care needs:

At 31 March	Residential care	Nursing home care	Domiciliary care
1994	618	1,292	1,744
1995	1,294	2,291	3,264
1996	1,858	3,153	4,135

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual cost of caring for the elderly in the community in Northern Ireland. [6111]

Mr. Moss: The information is not available in the exact form requested.

The table discloses the 1994–95 figure for expenditure on elderly care in the community.

This information has been extracted from supplementary financial returns produced by HSS trusts and HPSS boards to provide further analysis of the expenditure disclosed in their annual accounts.

There is additional expenditure on elderly care in the community in personal social services expenditure on elderly care, particularly expenditure on residential accommodation and aids and adaptations. However, this element has not been included in the total reported as it could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure on elderly care in the community 1994–95

Northern board area	12,867,369
Southern board area	13,126,878
Eastern board area	30,722,946
Western board area	12,246,083
Northern Ireland total	68,963,276

This information has been extracted from the analysis of expenditure under programme of care 4, elderly care, reported in the FR22 financial returns of each HSS trust and directly managed unit for 1994–95.

Driving Licences

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make driving licences issued in Northern Ireland valid for the purposes of paying fixed penalty motoring fines in England and Wales. [6112]

Mr. Moss: The Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 provides that any driver committing a fixed penalty offence may be given a fixed penalty notice unless the offence involves obligatory endorsement—the award of penalty points. In such a case, a driver must produce a driving licence. In Great Britain, a driving licence is defined as a document issued using the powers granted under part III of the Road Traffic Act 1988. A Northern Ireland driving licence is not a licence under that enactment. Accordingly, Northern Ireland driving licence holders can receive fixed penalties in Great Britain but only for non-endorsable offences. Northern Ireland legislation has similar provisions. When the provisions of the Road Traffic Offender (NI) Order 1996 relating to the introduction of a penalty point scheme comes into operation, probably late in 1997, the Department of the Environment (NI) proposes to seek changes to legislation, both in Northern Ireland and in Great Britain, to permit the mutual recognition of endorsements.

HIV-AIDS

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of HIV infection have been reported in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; how many persons have died of AIDS; and by what means they contracted the infection. [6114]

Mr. Moss: The number of cases of HIV infection and the number of persons who died from AIDS in each of the last five years are shown in the table. Information about the means by which the infection was contracted is also shown for the period 1991–95 inclusive. However, this information cannot be released in disaggregated form as it might undermine the commitment to preserve the anonymity of those who come forward for examination or treatment and discourage contributors to the voluntary reporting system.

EU Peace and Reconciliation Fund

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many grants have been paid by the European Union peace and reconciliation fund towards economic development in Northern Ireland. [6116]

Mr. Ancram: Five of the seven sub-programmes under the European Union special support programme for peace and reconciliation directly promote economic development in Northern Ireland. To date, a total of 544 grants have been awarded under these sub-programmes. In addition, there are other measures within the sub-programmes which indirectly promote economic development in Northern Ireland.

Police Officers (Secretive Organisations)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on national guidance issued by the Associated of Chief Police Officers about the membership of secretive organisations; and what representations he has received from the Police Authority about its implications and implementation in Northern Ireland. [5321]

Sir John Wheeler: The RUC is aware of the guidance issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers, and the implications of the proposals are being considered within the context of Northern Ireland. The Secretary of State has not received any representations from the Police Authority about the implications and implementation of the guidance in Northern Ireland.

Police Authority for Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what representations the Police Authority for Northern Ireland has made to him following publication of its community consultation report about reviewing the list of days and occasions when the Union flag is flown over police stations; [5323]

(2) what representations the Police Authority for Northern Ireland has made to him since publication of its community consultation report about ensuring a neutral working environment in all RUC and authority establishments in line with established fair employment obligations and legislation; [5322]

(3) what follow-up activity the Police Authority is undertaking to implement the range of recommendations, ideas and suggestions contained in the report of its 1995 community consultation; [5313]

(4) what representations he has received from the Police Authority with regard to implementing ideas and suggestions in its report of the 1995 community consultation. [5314]

Sir John Wheeler: Following the publication of its report, the authority identified a number of priority issues to take forward. It has, for example, established two working parties on "Young People and Minorities and the Police" and "Authority Policy on Openness and Accountability". It also raised a number of points with the police, including on drugs misuse and crime prevention as well as on recruitment, equal opportunities and fair employment issues. Authority members have also held meetings with a number of organisations and further meetings have been arranged.

In addition, I have corresponded with and met the authority chairman on issues that include the flying of the Union flag over RUC stations. Indeed, I met him and his deputy as recently as 27 November, when we discussed several issues arising from the report. Furthermore, I shall meet members on 16 December to continue the dialogue.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the suspension of a senior official of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland; how many other officials are suspended or under investigation and when he expects the investigation into alleged irregularities to be concluded. [5325]

Sir John Wheeler: Two officials, one of them senior in rank, have been suspended as a precautionary measure while an investigation is conducted. It would not be appropriate to comment further until the investigation is complete. I expect the investigation to be concluded in the next few months.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what steps he will take to ensure that the Police Authority for Northern Ireland holds annually a series of open meetings throughout Northern Ireland; [5329]

(2) when the Police Authority for Northern Ireland will publish an annual report for the year to June 1996; [5328]

(3) what steps the Police Authority for Northern Ireland is taking to provide more public information about the way it operates; [5306]

(4) what steps the Police Authority for Northern Ireland is taking to prepare and plan for its meetings to be held in public. [5307]

Sir John Wheeler: The Police Authority for Northern Ireland is currently taking forward work in this area. The authority established a working group on openness and accountability in the early summer of 1996 and will publish a report in the new year. Ultimately, codes of practice on openness and accountability will also be published. The working party is considering a number of aspects of improving public awareness of its work, and the report will recommend the way in which the authority and members will conduct authority business in public in the future. The authority has also appointed a full-time information officer to assist in improving communication of its work to the public, and will publish an annual report covering its work for the year up to June 1996 in January 1997.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings the Minister of State has had with the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in the last five years; and on what dates. [5319]

Sir John Wheeler: In the last five years, I have met the full authority on four occasions: 9 February 1994, 14 June 1994, 9 May 1995 and 12 October 1995.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what alleged financial and other irregularities have been uncovered in the operations of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland; what investigations are taking place by (a) authority staff, (b) auditors and (c) the police. [5324]

Sir John Wheeler: Following an audit of the authority's procurement function, certain irregularities were uncovered which required further investigation. Authority staff are investigating whether procedures were adhered to. The Northern Ireland Audit Office has been informed, and I understand that it is looking into the matter. The RUC is investigating whether the criminal law has been breached.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to advertise seeking applications and nominations to serve on the Police Authority for Northern Ireland from July 1997; and how many appointments he expects to make. [5326]

Sir John Wheeler: The advertisement seeking applications and nominations for appointment to the Police Authority for Northern Ireland will appear in the local press on Wednesday 4 December 1996.

The Police Act (Northern Ireland) 1970 provides for the appointment of a maximum of 22 persons, including the chairman and vice-chairman. The present authority numbers 21, and I expect to make no fewer appointments than that to serve on the authority from 29 June 1997.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to ensure that the Police Authority for Northern Ireland holds annually a series of open meetings throughout Northern Ireland. [5330]

Sir John Wheeler: No. The police authority is already empowered to make appropriate arrangements for ascertaining the views of the community, under article 82 of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when he hopes to bring forward draft legislation to reflect the contents of the "Foundations for Policing" White Paper; [5304]

(2) what is the timetable for the transfer for responsibility for financial management and the provision of supplies and services for the RUC from the Police Authority for Northern Ireland to the Chief Constable. [5305]

Sir John Wheeler: Work is continuing on draft legislation based on the White Paper proposals. No timetable has yet been set for the introduction of such legislation to Parliament.

The timetable for the transfer of responsibilities to the Chief Constable is dependent upon the legislation being passed.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many times the Police Authority for Northern Ireland's working group on the relationship between young people, minorities and the police has met; when its work will be complete; and if its findings will be published; [5308]

(2) if he will list the organisations and individuals who have been consulted for views and opinions by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland's working group on the relationship between young people, minorities and the police. [5309]

Sir John Wheeler: There have been three meetings of the Police Authority's joint working party on young people and minorities to date. At its first meeting, it was agreed that two sub-groups should be formed, one to deal with minorities, the other to deal with young people. The sub-group on minorities has met on four occasions and the sub-group on young people has met on three occasions. Meetings have been held with representatives of the youth and ethnic minority organisations including the Youth Forum and the Multi-Cultural Resource Centre. Further meetings have been arranged with other organisations and members have attended a number of youth-related conferences. The joint working party will complete its task shortly and the authority will publish a report in the new year.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many times the Police Authority for Northern Ireland's working group to consider what actions would be necessary to increase our public accountability, explain the work of the authority better to the community and bring policing issues to the attention of the public, has met; when its work will be complete; and whether its findings will be published; [5310]

(2) if he will list the organisations and individuals who have been consulted for views and opinions by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland's working group to consider what actions would be necessary to increase our public accountability, explain the work of the authority better to the community and bring policing issues to the attention of the public. [5311]

Sir John Wheeler: The Police Authority working party on openness and accountability has held four formal meetings. In addition, members of the authority have met police authorities in Greater Manchester, Northumbria and Humberside. Further meetings are planned with other authorities to examine how they open business to the public. The working party will complete its work shortly and the authority will publish a report in the new year.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Irleand what has been the attendance record of every member of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland from July 1994 at (a) regular monthly authority meetings, (b) special authority meetings, (c) meetings of each sub-committee and (d) visits to authority and RUC establishments. [5315]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

(c) Committee meetings are meetings of the authority's policy co-ordinating committee; community relations committee; finance and personnel committee; general purposes committee; support services committee and audit committee.
[1] Two members of the authority have declined to make public their identity due to reasons of personal security.
[2] Newly appointed member.
[3] During the period July 1994 to March 1996.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his policy on the recommendation in the community consultation report of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in respect of the form of oath of office for police officers of the RUC; [5316]

(2) what representations he has received from the Police Authority with regard to amending or changing the oath of police sworn by members of the RUC; and what plans he has to change it. [5317]

Sir John Wheeler: With regard to representations the Secretary of State has received from the police authority, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him earlier today on that subject.

The authority raised two points about the RUC oath, whether the oath should be affirmed in the form of a declaration and, secondly, on revision of the wording of the oath. On the former point, my officials have written to the Chief Constable raising the question of whether the oath should, in law, be affirmed as a declaration. Changes of substance to the oath would require primary legislation. The Government's position is that any such changes should be on the basis of widespread support. I do not believe we could achieve such support at present.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings he has held with the Police Authority for Northern Ireland since July 1994; and on what dates. [5318]

Sir John Wheeler: Since July 1994, my right hon. and learned Friend has met the full authority on one occasion; 9 May 1995.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Complaints)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he hopes to (a) receive and (b) publish the Hayes review of the arrangements for handling and investigating complaints against the RUC. [5327]

Sir John Wheeler: I expect to receive the report into the police complaints system by Maurice Hayes next month. It will be published shortly thereafter.

Claimant Count Figures

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people left the claimant count figures in the year to September 1996; and by how many the number of people in work changed in that time. [6392]

Mr. Ancram: Over the year to September 1996, 101,014 claimants left the unemployment count. Figures showing how the people in work changed over the same time period are not yet available.

Young Offenders

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of 18-year-old offenders was unemployed on the date of sentence in each of the last five years. [6926]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 29 November 1996]: Information on the employment status of offenders is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Shares (Taxation)

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate his Department has made of the cost to the Exchequer in (a) the 1995–96 financial year and (b) from 6 April to 8 October 1996 from the tax abuse of share buybacks and special dividends; and if he will make a copy of the calculations available in the Library; [3098]

(2) if he will place in the Library the basis for, and calculations behind, the statement in the Inland Revenue press release of 8 October that the changes in respect of share buybacks and special dividends will produce an estimated yield of £80 million in 1996–97, £200 million in 1997–98 and £400 million for 1998–99 onwards. [3099]

Mr. Jack: Estimates of the revenue effects of restricting the payment of tax credits in respect of share buybacks and certain special dividends, as announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 8 October, were prepared on the following basis and assumptions:

(a) That with no change in tax treatment, the level of relevant distributions would have been £4 billion annually, with associated tax credits of £1 billion; of these credits, £700 million would have been paid to exempt institutions.

(b) With the change in tax treatment, relevant distributions would fall by £1 billion (with this money retrained by companies or distributed without attracting tax credits). The remaining £3 billion would be paid as dividends not falling within the restrictions announced on 8 October 1996, with tax credits of £750 million, of which £300 million would be paid to exempt institutions.

(c) The impact of the changes on tax revenues would be:

(i) receipts of advanced corporation tax (ACT) would fall by £20 million in 1996–97 and £250 million a year starting 1997–98, because of the drop in relevant distributions;

(ii) payments of tax credits to exempt institutions and non-taxpayers would fall by £100 million in 1996–97 and £400 million a year starting in 1997–98;

(iii) Payments of mainstream corporation tax would rise by approximately £50 million in 1997–98 and £250 million a year starting in 1998–99; and;

(iv) the liability of higher rate income tax payers would increase by a small amount.

(d) The net revenue effects are, therefore, likely yields of £80 million in 1996–97, £200 million in 1997–98 and £400 million in subsequent years.

(e) The actual revenue effects will depend on the level of relevant distributions that would have been made and the tax liabilities borne when companies make similar or alternative distributions in the future.

The same comparative method of calculation applied to the level of share buybacks and relevant dividends in the financial year 1995–96 and in the period 1 April to 8 October 1996 produces estimates of the total cost to the Exchequer of £400 million respectively, borne over the period 1995–96 to 1997–98 and £450 million.

Building Societies

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to issue guidance to building societies that are converting to banks as to the manner in which they should issue bonus shares to their members in cases where disabled people have lost the capacity to operate their own accounts and have appointed another person to handle their financial affairs; [2298]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that disabled people who have lost the capacity to operate their own building society accounts and have appointed another person to handle their financial affairs are not excluded from receiving bonus shares when the building society converts to a bank. [2297]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The existing law allows building societies to take account of the interests of disabled people in the position described. The final structure of any distribution is a matter for the society concerned, and it is for its members to decide whether they agree that distribution or not. I understand that the Building Societies Association has issued guidance to its members on future account opening and handling practice in advance of the Disability Discrimination Act coming into force on 2 December.

Unemployment

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many men aged (a) 18 to 25, (b) 25 to 40, (c) 40 to 50 and (d) 50 to 65 years with no educational qualifications are without a job in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Wales and (iv) each English region; and what percentage this represents of the relevant population. [6330]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Stephen Byers, dated 2 December 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the breakdown of men without a job who have no educational qualifications by age and region and what percentage of all men with no educational qualifications they represent.

The available information for the United Kingdom is shown in the attached table.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase public service pensions from April 1997. [7454]

Mr. Waldegrave: Under the legislation governing public service pensions they are increased annually by the same percentage as state earnings-related pensions—additional pensions. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 26 November, Official Report, columns 207–20, that additional pensions will be increased by 2.1 per cent., in line with the annual increase in the retail prices index up to September. Public service pensions will therefore be increased by 2.1 per cent. from 7 April 1997. Pensions which have been in payment for less than a year will receive a pro rata increase.

Tax Database

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which the pressure of work on EDS Ltd. and the Inland Revenue has contributed to the revision of security and handling arrangements in the case of tax records held by the United Kingdom Inland Revenue. [1634]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The technical support arrangements for the self-assessment computer system are not related to pressures of work at the Inland Revenue or Electronic Data Services Ltd. They are designed to provide quick and effective support for the Inland Revenue in running the self-assessment system.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the memorandum dealing with access by EDS or Oracle overseas to the Inland Revenue's database. [1640]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: My reply on 16 October 1996 to my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks), Official Report, columns 912-13, made public the arrangements which Oracle would be putting in place to provide 24-hour support, using its worldwide service network, for the self-assessment computer system. But it would not be appropriate to make public the advice given, in confidence, by officials to Government Ministers.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the revised security strategy in the case of the Inland Revenue database represents a change of Government policy. [1641]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The Inland Revenue's security policy has been revised only to reflect the requirement to provide 24-hour technical support for business critical computer systems. This does not represent a change of Government policy.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide for information governing the personal tax affairs of hon. Members to be held on the Oracle data equipment on the same basis and in the same way as all other United Kingdom taxpayers. [1644]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The tax affairs of all taxpayers are treated as confidential, but for some years, additional safeguards have applied in certain cases, including Members of Parliament, and such safeguards will also apply under self-assessment.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5415]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 November 1996]: Apart from information on fixed-term appointments, the information requested is available from "Civil Service Staff In Post Summary Tables" for 1 April for each year in question, copies of which are available in the House Library.

Departmental records do not distinguish between fixed-term appointments which are renewable or unrenewable, or identify appointments which are temporary as a separate category from casual and fixed-term appointments. Details of fixed-term appointments in the Treasury agencies are given in the table.

[1] The CSO and OPCS merged in April 1996 (to form the ONS). Figures were collected in different formats within each department prior to that date. Within the OPCS staff on fixed term appointments were calculated within the number of permanent staff, and not all figures are available for the CSO.

[2] Numbers of fixed term appointments are not available prior to 1995. Figures for 1995 and 1996 do not show full time and part time staff separately, and have been calculated on the basis of one part timer equals 0.5. The figures are:
1995 = 546.5
1996 = 718.5

[3] Prior to April 1995 figures for fixed term appointments were included in the count of casual employees.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of those employed by his Department in 1992–93 were women. [6471]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 28 November 1996]: On 1 April 1992, 42.4 per cent. of Treasury staff were female. The figure for 1 April 1993 was 42.9 per cent.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are being taken to determine if there was involvement of British companies in the brokering of arms to combatants in the African Great Lakes region conflict; and if he will make a statement. [5367]

Arms Exports

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 November 1996]: Customs is aware of current allegations and will take appropriate action in the light of their assessment of information obtained.

It is not, however, Customs' general practice to comment publicly about the existence or nature of an investigation of individuals or companies not yet accused of criminal offences since to do so could risk prejudicing any on-going inquiries or future criminal proceedings.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Poisoning

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department has spent on research into (a) E.coli 0157 and (b) campylobacter in each year since 1990 and from 1 January to date. [7213]

Mrs. Browning: The expenditure by my Department on research into E. coli 0157 and campylobacter over the past four years is set out in the table.

	1993–94 £	1994–95 £	1995–96 £	1996–97 £
E. coli 0157	113,917	334,292	506,522	851,211
Campylobacter	770,047	984,271	1,095,499	675,245

The information for earlier years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research applications his Department has (a) granted and (b) rejected to study (i) E.coli 0157 and (ii) campylobacter in each year since 1990 and from 1 January to date. [7212]

Mrs. Browning: The lists of research applications commissioned in these two areas over the past four years, and the lists of the research applications formally received but not commissioned over the same period, have been placed in the Library of the House. The information for previous years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5428]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 25 November 1996]: I will answer for the Department and the Pesticides Safety Directorate. Chief executives of the Department's other agencies will be replying direct to the hon. Gentleman.

Departments and agencies are now responsible for their own budgets and resources so fixed complements no longer exist. Staff numbers are, therefore, the most accurate guide to the number of jobs in a Department.

Information on the numbers of full-time, part-time and casual staff employed in my Department and the Pesticides Safety Directorate as at 1 April each year since 1992 can be found in the civil service staff in post summary tables, copies of which can be found in the Library of the House. Temporary staff are identified as casuals. In addition to that information there were, at 1 April 1996, 54 full-time and nine part-time staff on fixed-term appointments in the Department and PSD. It is not possible to distinguish between renewable and non-renewable appointments. Figures for fixed-term appointments in previous years are not available.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter, to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 2 December 1996:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about staff numbers as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible. [5428]

Information on the numbers of full-time (FT), part-time (PT) and casual staff employed in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate as at 1 April since 1992 is given in the tables below. Information in casual jobs before April 1994, on temporary jobs and on those with renewable and non-renewable fixed-term contracts cannot be separately identified.

	Permanent and casual

April 1992	76	14	90

Letter from Phillip Needham to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 2 December 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has asked me to reply direct to your Parliamentary Question in which you ask how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term-contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term-contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual that have been in (1) his Department and (2) Executive Agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5428]

The information relating to ADAS is as follows:

Year 1 April	Permanent full-time	Permanent[1] part-time	Casual full-time	Casual[1] part-time
July 1992	2,410	73	167	—
1993	2,287	190	179	—
1994	2,099	221	153	23
1995	1,773	165	150	16
1996	1,551	107	132	11

[1] Part-timers are counted as whole posts. We cannot extract the information concerning renewable and unrenewable fixed term-contracts without disproportionate cost to the agency.

Letter from George Trevelyan to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 2 December 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in the Intervention Board for each year since 1992, as this matter is within my operational responsibility. [5428]

The numbers of permanent and casual full-time and part-time staff employed by this Agency as at 1 April each year since 1992 are published in the Civil Service staff-in post summary tables, and also the Departmental Reports for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board, copies of which may be found in the Library of the House. Temporary staff are identified as casuals. In addition to that information, I can also confirm that over the period since 1992 no full-time or part-time staff have been employed by the Intervention Board on either renewable, or unrenewable fixed-term appointments.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Peter Hain 2 December 1996:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the number of full-time, part time and casual posts within the Agency and the various terms of employment terms relating to those posts. [5428]

We do not keep records which readily relate to the precise terms of your Question but the following table provides much of the information:

	VLA	CVL
	1996		1995	1994	1993	1992
Permanent
Full-time	921	620	586	608	598	581
Part-time	98	60	61	61	61	60

Part-time	14	2	—	5	7	—

A word or two of explanation is also necessary. The table refers to staff in post at 1 January of each year. A detailed breakdown relating to jobs rather than staff is not readily available.

The figures for 1992–96 refer to the Central Veterinary Laboratory (CVL). The figures for the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) for 1996 reflect the increase in Agency staffing following the merger of CVL with the Veterinary Investigation Service in October 1995 to form the new Agency, the VLA.

There is no differentiation between fixed-term contracts which are renewable or unrenewable. All contracts are reviewed before expiry to consider whether they should be terminated, extended or become permanent.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 2 December 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning the numbers of full-time, part-time and casual staff employed since 1992.

The following table illustrates the information that is available. Staff numbers for 1992 are not separately identifiable from MAFF and, for 1993, separate details of full-time and part-time casual staff are not available The figures for 1995 reflect the merger of CSL with the MAFF Food Science Laboratories in April 1994. Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 2 December 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service your Parliamentary Question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning the number of (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed term-contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual in Executive Agencies of his Department for each year since 1992 has been passed to me for reply with respect to this Agency. [5428]

The Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) was established as an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) on 1 April 1995. It took over from local authorities responsibility for enforcing meat hygiene, inspection and animal welfare at slaughter legislation in licensed fresh meat premises in Great Britain.

The information requested relating to the MHS is listed in the annex attached to this letter. As you will note, 35 full time staff were employed by the MHS in 1994 before its official launch in April 1995.

BSE

Mr. Hinchcliffe: Mr. Hinchcliffe:To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 581, if he will list the ages of confirmed BSE cases in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1995, in the categories, (a) under two years, (b) two to three years of cows at slaughter aged typically six to seven years, (c) three to four years, (d) four to five years, (e) five to six years, (f) six to seven years, (g) seven to eight years, (h) over eight years and (i) age unknown. [5599]

Mrs. Browning [holding reply given on 26 November 1996]: The following table details the number of confirmed BSE cases reported in Great Britain in 1995 and 1996 by age. It includes estimated ages.

It has not been possible to provide the data requested in the second part of (b) as it is unclear precisely what is required.

Sheep Dips

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, for Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that farmers and land owners in England and Wales are aware of the danger to the environment involved in the use of sheep dips based on synthetic pyrethroids. [6256]

Mrs. Browning: No veterinary medicine is authorised for use unless it meets stringent statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes risk to the environment. The Government are advised on this by the independent scientific veterinary products committee. Warnings on the labels for synthetic pyrethroid dips include:

"Disposal: the product is dangerous to fish. It is unlawful to permit any poisonous, noxious or polluting matter to enter any river, stream or watercourse. Guidelines giving advice on safe disposal of pesticides and their containers are available from the Agricultural Departments."

Copies of current guidelines have been placed in the Library of the House.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 660, what were the proposed annual savings for the information technology projects in the phases which fall into (a) the £1 million to £10 million and (b) more than £10 million categories undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6699]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The proposed and realised annual savings for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's information technology projects for the cost bands of (a) up to £1 million, and (b) greater than £1 million, are as follows:

£ million

Project costs	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	Total
Proposed savings
Up to 10	3.23	5.07	4.80	13.36
More than 10	1.77	6.73	3.50	17.84
Total	5.0	11.8	8.3	31.2	56.3
Realised savings
Up to 10	4.10	2.90	7.90	17.60
More than 10	0.42	7.20	13.43	24.70
Total	4.5	10.1	21.3	42.3	78.2

Currently only proposed savings figures are available for 1996–97 — "Up to £10 million" £22.02 million and "More than £10 million" £31.77 million.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to restrict the availability for human consumption of dried, canned or frozen beef from cattle aged over 30 months of age and slaughtered before 29 March. [827]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 6 November 1996]: Regulation 3 of the Fresh Meat (Beef Control) Regulations 1996 prohibits, subject to limited exceptions, the sale for human consumption of meat from cattle over 30 months old slaughtered on or after 29 March 1996. There is no restriction on the sale of meat or meat products derived from animals slaughtered before this date. The Government's independent adviser on spongiform encephalopathies, the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, did not consider this necessary. We therefore have no proposals to restrict the availability for human consumption of these products.

DEFENCE

Fishing Boats (Medical Evacuations)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost of medical evacuations from foreign-owned fishing boats off the United Kingdom in the last 12 months; and if he will list the names and the national ownership of the fishing boats involved. [6428]

Mr. Soames: Emergency medical rescue of civilians at sea is the responsibility of the Coastguard which may call on military search and rescue assets if required. During the last 12 months, our military SAR aircraft have carried out 17 medical rescues from foreign-owned fishing vessels off the United Kingdom, as follows:

Vessel	National ownership
Scarlet Bucaneer	Irish
Ocean Monarch	Irish
Lui 2	French
Hakin	Spanish
Rafael Nemina	Spanish
Mar 4	Spanish
Deo Juvianti	Dutch
Opcn	Belgian
Madre Querido	Spanish
Jesus de Belem	Spanish
Albatross	French
Not known	Danish
Not known	Danish
Jose Castro	Spanish
Manuel DaCosta	Spanish
St Carolus	Belgian
Helen Mary	German

Details of rescues carried out by the Coastguard may be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The cost of medical rescues is not separately identified as these operations form part of the normal duties of SAR assets. The only extra cost incurred by MOD is in supporting the Coastguard in some out-of-hours operations.

Free Cigarettes

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date cigarettes ceased to be issued free to the armed forces. [6591]

Mr. Soames: We have been unable to ascertain from departmental records still in existence as to whether there was ever a universal free issue of cigarettes to service personnel, but we believe that this did occur under some circumstances during the second world war, particularly for those serving overseas. To the best of our knowledge, no evidence exists to indicate that members of the Royal Navy or the RAF received free cigarettes after the end of world war 2. Records do indicate, however, that some Army personnel were issued with free cigarettes up to the late 1950s, but we believe that this practice ceased in the early 1960s. Should any additional evidence come to light on this matter, I will inform the hon. Member.

Miss Nicola Goode

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set a date for the Medical Review Board to examine the case of the injury to Miss Nicola Goode of 2 Victoria heights, Dartmouth; and if he will make a statement on the reason for the present delay. [6798]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend has written to my hon. Friend about his constituent.

Nuclear Safeguards Project

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) funding and (b) personnel his Department has contributed to the International Atomic Energy Agency's 93+2 project concerning nuclear safeguards. [6780]

Mr. Soames: My Department makes no direct financial contribution to the 93+2 programme. As part of their normal duties, officials from my department participate in the Government's routine consideration of the subject. This activity is not separately identified, and details could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HMS Vigilant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary for Defence at what time the Trident nuclear submarine HMS Vigilant was (a) scheduled to arrive and (b) arrived in Faslane on 24 November; what action was taken against protesters demonstrating against HMS Vigilant's departure from Barrow docks on 22 November; and what is the projected annual operational cost of HMS Vigilant. [6788]

Mr. Soames: Under the code of access to government information, it is not our policy to give details of submarine movements on the grounds that it would harm national security or defence. My Department took no action against demonstrators at Barrow docks on 22 November: this was a matter for the local police. It is too early in the programme accurately to assess the annual operational cost of HMS Vigilant, but our expectation is that the cost of the total Trident fleet will average around £200 million per annum over the lifetime of the system.

Northern Ireland Battalions

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average shortfall in manning of resident battalions in Northern Ireland; what is the average percentage of nights out of bed for soldiers in those battalions; and what is their average weekly working time. [6998]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Exports Levy

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was raised in the last financial year from the Treasury levy on the export sales of defence equipment whose development was funded by the Government; and if he will list the 10 items of equipment whose export sales raised the most money under the levy in the past year with, in each case, the rate of the levy and the sum raised. [5170]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Commercial exploitation levy receipts in 1995–96 from export sales of defence equipment whose development was funded in whole or in part by my Department totalled £21.9 million. Levy arrangements are negotiated case by case, either on the basis of fixed percentage rates according to the nature of the equipment or through profit-sharing schemes. Details of levy arrangements for individual equipments are commercially confidential, as are the amounts raised in support of specific sales.

Frigates (Refit and Sale)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the refit of the frigate Battleaxe; how long before its sale the refit was completed; and what was the price paid by Brazil. [6833]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The last refit of HMS Battleaxe was completed in July 1994 at a total cost of some £13 million. On 18 November 1994, the Brazilian Navy signed a contract purchasing all four batch I type 22 frigates which includes HMS Battleaxe. The ship will be handed over on completion of her royal naval service at the end of April 1997. In order to protect customer confidentiality, we do not reveal price details of defence sales.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the refit of the frigate Andromeda; how long before its sale the refit was completed; and what was the price paid by India. [6834]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The last refit of HMS Andromeda was completed in December 1991 at a total cost of some £27 million. HMS Andromeda was sold to India in March 1995. In order to protect customer confidentiality, we do not reveal price details of defence sales.

Aviation Repairs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Defence aviation repair agency implementation team was established; on what dates it visited RAF St. Albans, RAF Sealand and their RN equivalents; and if he will make a statement. [7150]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The defence aviation repair agency implementation team was formed on 22 July 1996. Members of the team have visited the following establishments on the following dates:

RAF St. Athan from 5 to 6 September and on 2 October;

RAF Sealand on 20 August and 10 to 11 September;

RNAY Fleetlands from 19 to 20 September;

RNAW Almondbank on 22 August and 26 September

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from aviation repair companies and consortiums in respect of the competing for quality programme on deep repair aviation maintenance submissions; what further representations he has received from private sub-contractors to the competing for quality bidding MOD units on the same subject; and if he will make a statement. [7189]

Mr. Arbuthnot: CFQ programmes for deep aviation repair are in hand at RAF Sealand and RAF St. Athan. For RAF Sealand, two bids have been received in addition to an in-house bid. These are currently being evaluated.

For the work put out to tender at RAF St. Athan, a number of consortiums are expected to respond shortly to an invitation to tender, again alongside an in-house bid.

Catering Support Services

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the period of time it took to announce the successful bidder for the catering support services at Royal Citadel, Plymouth. [7110]

Mr. Soames: The market testing exercise began with the issue of an invitation to tender on 10 September 1993 and ended with the announcement of the contract award to Gardner Merchant plc on 24 July 1996.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department of the market test for catering support services at the Royal Citadel, Plymouth. [7113]

Mr. Soames: The identifiable cost for the Citadel market testing exercise was for independent consultancy support to the in-house bid team, which cost some £30,400.

Armed Forces (Germany)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the total cost in each of the last three years of the presence of the British armed forces in Germany. [7114]

Mr. Soames: The operating costs of maintaining British forces in Germany have been:

Year	Final outturn £ million
1993–94	1,582
1994–95	1,466
1995–96	1,353

Service Widows' Pensions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the annual cost of raising pre-1973 service widows' pension to half that of their deceased husbands. [7115]

Mr. Soames: We estimate that the cost of the armed forces pension scheme of raising pre-1973 service widows' pensions to half that of their deceased husbands would be in the order of £29 million per year.

Main Building, Whitehall

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Department's plans to redevelop the MOD main building in Whitehall. [7272]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As indicated in an answer that I gave on 28 October, Official Report, column 27, it is my Department's intention to examine private finance options for the redevelopment and subsequent operation of main building. The objectives are to replace building services now at the end of their economic life, and to provide a modern working environment and maximum utilisation of space and flexibility for the future.

As the first stage in the procurement process, advertisements inviting expressions of interest from the private sector will be placed in the 11 December edition of the MOD bulletin "Works Services Opportunities" and in the national press. Further progress will depend on the response from the private sector, the refinement of proposals during 1997 and identification of options for achieving best value for money. My Department will ensure that any private finance initiative deal that is negotiated will not prejudice the security of its principal headquarters in any respect.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the integrated Army Personnel Centre. [7404]

Mr. Soames: The integrated Army Personnel Centre will open in Kentigern house, Glasgow, as a defence agency of the Ministry of Defence, on 2 December 1996. The aim of the APC is to provide an effective, integrated personnel management and administration service to the Army, in order to maximise its operational capability throughout the spectrum of conflict, from peace through to general war. The APC will have a staff of about 1,100 of whom about 1,000 will be civilians. Some 500 new civilian jobs are being created in Glasgow. Functions will be progressively transferred to the APC from the current dispersed organisation of 19 separate offices, with all the work being performed in Glasgow by 31 March 1998.

The Adjutant General will be the owner of the APC on behalf of the Secretary of State for Defence. His mission is to man the Army effectively and efficiently, with well-motivated men and women, individually trained to meet the requirements of the Army, within allocated resources.

The APC chief executive, a major general, will be required to manage the Army's manpower assets in the most cost-effective manner, to manage officers' and soldiers' careers in a manner that ensures the best return for the Army's investment in individuals, to provide an efficient and effective Army personnel, pay and pension administration service and to meet legitimate demands for information in a cost-effective and timely manner. The chief executive has been set the following key targets to be achieved by March 1998, when the APC is fully operational.

1. To increase the proportion of Army posts, other than private soldiers or subaltern officers, which are manned to 90 per cent.

2. To increase the proportion of Army personnel meeting appointment/job specifications posted in-year to 90 per cent.

3. To increase the in-year percentage of Army personnel given six months' notification of posting—not those posted on short notice operational requirements or following initial training or long career courses—to 50 per cent.

4. To increase the percentage of change requests authorised and/or accurately processed within five working days of receipt to 90 per cent.

5. To increase the percentage of due terminal benefits paid by the fifth working day after discharge/retirement or following receipt of the correct authorisation, whichever is the later, to 95 per cent.

6. To implement and maintain a comprehensive feedback mechanism for the continual measurement of customer satisfaction.

7. To achieve 23 per cent. reduction in running costs by 31 March 1998.

8. To identify comparable large organisations in the public and private sectors with a view to benchmarking specific APC activities and performance levels.

I have arranged for copies of the agency's framework document and corporate plan to be place in the Library of the House.

Radiation Testing

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who has responsibility for the organisation and implementation of radiation testing procedures and information gathering; [6570]

(2) who has authorised the testing of civilians in relation to radiation experiments. [6574]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November]: As regards studies which were conducted by my Department, such responsibilities rested ultimately with the director or head of the establishment concerned. It would be normal practice for the appropriate ethics committee to consider and approve scientists' submissions for particular studies to be carried out; submissions would include a copy of the lay statement which is to be given to the volunteers.

The results of many of the studies carried out in the past have been published in open source scientific and technical journals.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have the results of the radiation testing been used for; and where that data are currently held. [6561]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The purpose of the studies carried out by my Department at Aldermaston was to calibrate whole body monitors to account for differences in body size and chest wall thickness; these were to improve the effectiveness of measurement techniques used by hospitals. Those at Porton were to investigate the amount of radioactive fall-out which might be expected to adhere to the fabric of the clothing worn by volunteers when crossing contaminated ground and how best that contamination might be removed, and to establish the mechanism of penetration of chemical compounds through the skin. Those at Farnborough served to provide a measure of changes in body fluid volumes through application of the dilution principle. Details of some of the studies carried out at Porton can be obtained from the Public Record Office; other records are no longer available due to the passage of many years.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of caring for those exposed to radiation through voluntary testing. [6581]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: Given the extremely low doses involved in the studies, it is highly unlikely that the health of any of the volunteers has suffered as a direct result of taking part in these studies. No such estimates have therefore been made.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many doctors and researchers have worked for the radiation-testing programme since 1966. [6565]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: I regret to say that this information is not held centrally, and that, given the passage of many years, it is not available at the establishments concerned. [6568]

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British volunteers have been the subject of radiation experiments since 1966; of these how many were employees at Aldermaston; and to what levels at radiation they were exposed.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: Detailed records are no longer available, but is estimated that about 200 individual members of my Department were involved, of whom 12 were Aldermaston employees. The level of radiation to which these volunteers were exposed was negligible and significantly less than the average natural background exposure. Put into proper perspective, it would have been equivalent to that received from a single dental X-ray.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information was provided to volunteers on the short and long-term dangers of exposure to radioactive materials. [6559]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: All volunteers would have received a detailed explanation in lay terms prior to giving their consent to participating in such studies. The individuals would also have the right to withdraw from the studies at any time without having to explain their reasons for withdrawal. At no time was there a question of either short or long-term danger to any participants since only negligible amounts of radiation doses were applied. The studies were at all times subject to the appropriate medical ethics safeguards.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the radiation experiments currently being conducted. [6566]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: No radiation experiments are currently being conducted by my Department.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations at which radiation testing has been performed; and what protection was promised to people who were not involved in the programme from the effects of exposure to radioactive materials. [6571]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My Department has conducted studies involving the use of radioactive material at Aldermaston, Porton Down, and Farnborough. Some of the Aldermaston studies involved the use of facilities at Harwell and were supported and funded by the International Atomic Energy Agency and approved by the Medical Research Council. Harwell is not, of course, an MOD establishment. Those not involved in the programme would have been afforded precisely the same health and safety considerations as the volunteers.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of subjects who have died due to complications caused by exposure to radiation during testing programmes. [6562]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: None of the studies conducted by my Department has involved significant radiological doses. All have been conducted with due regard for the health and safety of those concerned. It is therefore highly unlikely that these would have led to any deaths or adverse health conditions. Consequently, my Department has made no such estimates.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effects on the families of those tested of the exposure of a family member to radioactive materials. [6573]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: None. All these studies involved minute doses of radiation; no such assessments were therefore necessary.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums radiation experiment volunteers were paid for their services. [6564]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: Due to the passage of time and absence of detailed records, it is impossible to detail precisely the amounts concerned. Some, but not all, volunteers from my Department would, however, have received recompense of approximately 20 shillings per week for taking part in the studies together with the appropriate rates for travel and subsistence.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what follow-up tests have been performed on the long-term effects of radiation exposure. [6569]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: As far as my Department is concerned, only those volunteers for the Aldermaston studies were monitored for a period of six months thereafter; further monitoring was unnecessary. It has long been known that significant additional doses of radiation can cause an enhanced risk of cancer. No follow-up assessments have been considered necessary in respect of those other studies, involving individual volunteers exposed to negligible doses of radiation which are far smaller than those received from natural background radiation. However, the National Radiological Protection Board carried out two independent studies in 1988 and 1993 into the incidence of mortality and cancer among people who participated in the UK's nuclear weapon-testing programmed in the 1950s and early 1960s. The NRPB studies showed no overall excess of cancer or mortality among over 20,000 veterans. Copies of the NRPB studies are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what different types of radiation testing have been used since 1966. [6572]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 3 July 1996, Official Report, column 467.

Bosnia and Croatia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 290, on British bases as part of the implementation force operation, if he will list to whom the payments are being made for the renting of United Kingdom bases in Bosnia and Croatia; and if he will make a statement. [6625]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The UK does not make payments for facilities owned by the Governments of Bosnia and Croatia. Payments are, however, made for privately owned facilities; while these premises are occupied for military purposes, they are unable to be used for other commercial purposes. It is right, therefore, that private owners should not be financially disadvantaged. Contracts covering all the bases listed in my previous answer, Official Report, column 290, are currently held with the following companies:

Market Testing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to amend the proposed competing for quality bids and submissions programmes for market testing RAF and Royal Navy aeronautical repair facilities. [6902]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 29 November 1996]: None.

WALES

Working Hours

13. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of men employed full-time in Wales work 48 hours or over per week. [5220]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Based on the spring 1996 labour force survey, an estimated 32 per cent. of male full-time employees in Wales say they usually work 48 hours or more per week.

14. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the work force in Wales works over 48 hours a week. [5221]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Based on the spring 1996 labour force survey, an estimated 20 per cent. of the employed work force in Wales say they usually work more than 48 hours per week.

15. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on levels of unemployment in Wales. [5222]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In October 1996, the seasonally adjusted number of persons on the claimant unemployment count in Wales fell below 100,000 for the first time since January 1991. Unemployment in Wales has fallen by 26 per cent. since December 1992.

Mr. Hague: In the period 1 January 1996 to 31 October 1996, 128 inward investment projects have been recorded promising 13,602 new jobs, 2,564 safeguarded jobs and capital investment of £2.36 billion.

18. Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on devolved government in Wales in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [5225]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Nine, with the majority being against the imposition of a Welsh Assembly.

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per capita on road building and maintenance in the last year; and what was the figure in 1978–79 at current prices. [5227]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Expenditure per capita on road building and maintenance in Wales, at 1995–96 prices, was £149 in 1978–79 and £164 in 1994–95, the last year for which complete information is available.

Single Currency

20. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will commission research on the effect of the single currency on democracy and the public services in Wales. [5228]

Mr. Hague: No. We would agree to take part in a single currency only if we judged it to be in the interest of the United Kingdom as a whole to do so.

Second Severn Crossing

21. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the opening of the second Severn crossing on the economy of Wales. [5229]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The new crossing is a substantial expansion of the essential transport infrastructure, thereby significantly improving economic mobility and further enlarging our attractiveness for inward investment, and it represents a major opportunity that Welsh businesses are increasingly taking.

Welsh Assembly

22. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the desirability of holding a referendum for a Welsh Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [5230]

Mr. Hague: Three since the beginning of January this year.

Drug and Alcohol Abuse

23. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to combat drug and alcohol abuse in Wales. [5231]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend launched the Welsh drug and alcohol strategy, "Forward Together" on 14 May 1996: we have established a Welsh advisory committee and set up a Welsh drug and alcohol unit; and at local level the strategy will be implemented by drug and alcohol action teams.

Health Authority Funding

24. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much non-recurring funding has been made available to health authorities in Wales in the present financial year to date. [5232]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Up to the end of October, Welsh health authorities have received a total of £20.588 million in additional non-recurring funds.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend and I have received numerous representations on this subject; the Government have introduced measures to support the essential element of the structure of the beef industry.

Community Hospital, Porthmadog

26. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in respect of the construction of the new community hospital at Porthmadog; and if he will make a statement. [5234]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Two letters have been received from the hon. Member. Gwynedd Community Trust is considering propositions under the private finance initiative. A successful outcome will also depend on the support of the North Wales health authority, which is currently reviewing community hospital facilities within its area.

Male Unemployment

27. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the figure for male unemployment in (a) Newport and (b) Wales for the latest available date; and what is this figure expressed in percentage terms. [5235]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In October 1996, the unadjusted number of males on the claimant unemployment count in the Newport travel-to-work-area was 5,087, 9.4 per cent. of the male work force. The corresponding figures for Wales were 74,279 and 10.5 per cent.

Rate Support Grant

28. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet local authority leaders to discuss the 1997–98 rate support grant settlement. [5236]

Public Service Employment

29. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of people employed in the public service in Wales; and what percentage this is of the total number employed. [5237]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Based on the spring 1996 labour force survey, in which employees are asked to classify themselves, an estimated 325,000 employees say they work in the public sector in Wales. This represents 32 per cent. of all employees in Wales.

Low Incomes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what data sets his Department (a) holds and (b) updates on low-income families in Wales. [6057]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the distribution of household income in Wales is available from a number of official sources including the Office for National Statistics' annual family expenditure survey and the Department of Social Security's annual family resources survey. The Welsh Office does not routinely collect any additional statistics on household income.

Households (Baths)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many householders in Wales (a) do not have their own bath and (b) do not have access to a shared bath. [6055]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The available information from the 1991 census of population is given in the following table:

	Number of residents
Households in Wales with:
Exclusive use of bath/shower	2,776,410
Shared use of bath/shower	7,257
No bath/shower	13,507

Unemployment and Health

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the relationship between the levels of unemployment and ill health of men aged 15 to 44 years in Wales. [6063]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: While it is not possible to conclude from the 1995 Welsh health survey data whether there is a causal relationship between unemployment and ill-health, analyses indicated that for unemployed men aged 18 to 45 the mental health summary scores were generally lower—that is, worse—than those of employed men of the same age. However, there was little difference between the physical health scores for unemployed men aged 18 to 45 when compared with those of employed men of the same age. Both scores tended to be lower for men who had been unemployed for more than 12 months.

The results show that unemployed men aged 18 to 45 were more likely to be classified as being at risk of developing clinical depression than employed men of the same age and were generally more likely to have had treatment for back pain and respiratory disease.

The main results from the survey, and the definition of the summary scores, are published in Welsh health survey 1995, a copy of which is in the Library.

Health Survey Data

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reliability tests were applied to the data collected in the Welsh health survey questionnaires conducted in 1995. [6067]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh health survey questionnaire was for the most part made up of well-tested questions of proven reliability. A pilot survey was carried out in December 1994 using a random sample of 1,000 adults living in Wales to test all the questions and survey methods used.

A random sample of the completed questionnaires was validated by hand, comparing the respondents' answers with the corresponding keyed-in data.

Details of other steps taken are given in appendices 1, 2 and 3 of the survey report—Welsh health survey 1995. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the reasons for the change in infant mortality in the first year of life in Wales in 1994. [6062]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There was a small increase in the infant mortality rate for Wales in 1994. Much of the increase was concentrated in East Dyfed. A very detailed inquiry has been made of all still births and infant deaths in East Dyfed between 1993 to 1994 but no common factor was found.

Nursery Education

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect the reduction of day nursery places in Wales has had on the ability of single mothers to secure (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment since 1979. [6071]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Local authority day nursery and full day care places in Wales have increased since 1979. The figures in the following table are taken from appendix I to the activities of social services departments statistical series.

Year ending	Full day care places offered by registered providers	Places in local authority day nurseries
31 March 1979	901	99
31 March 1980	817	109
31 March 1981	746	158
31 March 1982	743	191
31 March 1983	834	191
31 March 1984	1,006	220
31 March 1985	1,013	230
31 March 1986	1,049	237
31 March 1987	1,233	238
31 March 1988	1,313	243
31 March 1989	1,912	264
31 March 1990	2,693	241
31 March 1991	3,519	203
31 March 1992	4,599	194
31 March 1993	5,213	235
31 March 1994	5,274	235

To help maximise parental participation in the work force, between 1993 and March 1996 the out-of-school child care initiative supported the development of over 3,500 new child care places for school age children. A further 300 places will be created in 1996–97.

The Department's child care demonstration projects for the under-fives in Wales will support the development of 600 new child care places for pre-school age children between 1995 and 1998.

Households (Beds)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many families have insufficient individual beds to meet the normal needs of their household. [6056]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The bedroom standard—defined in the following table—is recognised as a measure of overcrowding. The results from the Welsh social survey 1992 indicated that 2,100 households had two or more bedrooms fewer than the standard requires and that 18,300 households had one bedroom less.

Bedroom standard definition

(extract taken from 1993 Welsh House Condition Survey, Chapter (11)

The standard number of bedrooms is:

(a) one for each cohabiting couple

(b) one for each other man or woman aged 21 or over

(c) one for each two persons of the same sex aged 10–20

(d) one for any person aged 10–20 and a child under 10 of the same sex

(e) one for any person aged 10–20 not paired as in (c) or (d)

(f) one for each two of any remaining children under 10

(g) one for any child remaining

Child Care (Single Parents)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effects of insufficient child care provision on the health of single parents in Wales. [5916]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities are responsible for assessing and setting priorities for the health care needs of the population of their areas, within the resources available to them. The maternal and early child health protocol published by the Welsh Office in 1991 encourages health authorities, working with others, to provide a fully co-ordinated approach to support the health of mothers and children in the early years.

Frail Elderly (Hospital Beds)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of frail elderly people who will need a hospital bed in 2000; and if he will make a statement. [6288]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Data on frail and elderly people are not collected centrally. Numbers of hospital beds needed in the future for the frail and elderly is planned for locally.

Maternity Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on maternity care. [6284]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Policy in Wales for maternity care is set out in "Investment in Health Gain: Maternal and Early Child Health" which was published in 1991. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much cash has so far been expended on the nursery voucher scheme in Wales; what is his estimate of the amount of moneys he will release to the scheme for the first full year of operation; and if he will make a statement. [6290]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 October, column 984. The Welsh Office has to date spent some £78,000 in respect of the implementation of the scheme in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated number of nursery vouchers for the first year of its operation; and if he will make a statement. [6291]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 16 October, column 984 and 4 November, column 349. The nursery voucher scheme contractor has sent a preliminary letter to parents of eligible children identified from the child benefit database. Application forms for vouchers will be sent to parents in January.

GCSE Candidates

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the percentage of 15-year-old pupils of the maintained sector of each local education authority entered for GCSE in (a) English language, (b) mathematics, (c) science, (d) English language and mathematics together and (e) English language and mathematics and science, in total and by gender in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1995; and what were the percentage point changes between 1992 and 1995; [6303]

(2) if he will list for (a) 1992 and (b) 1995 the percentage of 15-year-old pupils in total and by gender of the maintained sector of each local education authority (1) entered for GCSE in (i) science and (ii) English language and mathematics and science together, and

(2) achieving (A) at least grade G in each and (B) at least grade C in each, indicating in each case their average points score; [6302]

(3) if he will list for 1996 the percentage of 15-year-old pupils in total and by gender of the maintained sector of each local education authority (1) entered for GCSE in (a) English language, (b) mathematics, (c) science, (d) English language and mathematics together and (e) English language and mathematics and science together and (2) achieving (i) at least grade G in each and (ii) at least grade C in each, indicating in each case their average points score. [6304]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The available information has been placed in the Library of the House.

Some of the information requested on combinations of subjects could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received concerning mixed-sex wards; and from what sources. [6642]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information relating to the number of representations received concerning mixed-sex wards is not held centrally.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many mixed-sex wards there are in Wales; and what is his estimate of the number of beds concerned. [6641]

Mr. Jones: Data on mixed sex wards are not collected centrally. Numbers of beds in mixed-sex wards are determined locally.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grammar schools there are in Wales. [6643]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None.

Immediate Care Beds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many immediate care beds are available (a) in the North Wales health authority and (b) in each of the district hospital trusts. [6597]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information concerning the number of beds by speciality is collected on the basis of specialities recognised by the royal colleges. Immediate care is not one of these recognised specialties.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) men and (b) women are unemployed in (i) Wales and (ii) Flintshire. [5303]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were 74,279 men and 22,345 women on the claimant unemployment count in Wales in October 1996. The corresponding figures for Flintshire were 2,710 and 934 respectively.

Computer Programme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress with the OSIRIS office automation project. [7142]

Mr. Hague: The OSIRIS service has been delivered to the pilot work group and tested. Implementation of the service in my Department's housing division is now under way.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the principal components of the £70 million estimated capital cost of PFI contracts sponsored by his Department given in the Red Book; and what is (i) the length of each contract, (ii) the break clause timings where applicable and (iii) the end of contract ownership arrangements agreed for the principal schemes. [7144]

Mr. Hague: The figures in table 5.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" show estimated capital spending by the private sector under the PFI. The £70 million estimated for 1997–98 includes one contract that has already been signed, for the OSIRIS IT project. This seven-year contract was signed in June 1996. Further information, including break clause and end-of-contract arrangements, is provided in a case study of the project published by the central IT unit and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

The remainder of the £70 million is made up of projects for which contracts have not yet been signed.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the use of heritage furniture donated to the National Museum of Wales in the house of the director; if he has authorised its use; what guidelines exist concerning the use of heritage furniture in private residences of senior museum employees; and if he will make a statement. [7148]

Mr. Hague: I have seen press reports on this matter. I understand that the national museum provides the director with furnished accommodation at the museum of Welsh life, for which he pays a commercially assessed rent. In addition to living there, the director uses the accommodation for office purposes, and for entertaining in association with his work.

Selection of individual items of furniture to be placed in the accommodation is a matter for the museum, in accordance with the terms of its agreement with the director. The Welsh dressers to which the press reports refer were purchased by the museum, rather than donated; I am advised that, if they had not been placed in the director's accommodation, they would have been held in store.

I am satisfied that these arrangements are entirely proper.

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to attend further official luncheons for the purpose of encouraging Welsh business to fund and participate in a Welsh pavilion at the millennium exhibition at Greenwich. [7143]

Mr. Hague: I have no immediate plans to do so, but will consider this as necessary in the next few months.

Bilingual Documents

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the printing by The Stationery Office of his Department's requirements for bilingual public documents, forms and leaflets. [7146]

Mr. Hague: My Department has made no arrangements with The Stationery Office for the printing of bilingual public documents, forms and leaflets. All printing work is subject to normal public procurement procedures.

Elective Surgery

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent to which waiting times for elective general surgery in the coming financial year in the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority accord with the patients charter. [5380]

Mr. Malone: Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority has not yet finalised its purchasing plan for 1997–98 nor agreed any contracts with provides of surgical services. In common with every other health authority in the country, Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth will work with its providers to ensure that all patients are treated within the time limit set by the patient's charter.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5483]

Mr. Horam: In July this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. Copies have been placed in the Library. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differentially on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. Women are major users of health services and play an increasing role as managers and employees in the health and social services professions. Health policy and services need to be responsive to and reflect women's needs. Headline achievements in the Department of Health and the national health service have included:

- Making women's health a key health ministerial responsibility since 1986.
- Regular ministerial meetings with representatives of women's groups; a wide range of women's health organisations receive funding.
- Extensive gender-disaggregated statistics on health status and health-related behaviour are published by, or on behalf of, the Department of Health.
- Many of "The Health of the Nation" targets are relevant to women and several are set specifically for them.

The recent Government report "One Year On" outlines action taken by Government to benefit women since the World Conference on Women and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress may be measured.

Residential Care (Malpractice)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the legal sanctions applicable in the event of cases of malpractice among residential carers [5850]

Mr. Burns: It is the responsibility of the employer, in the first instance, to take disciplinary or dismissal action as appropriate.

The general criminal law may be applied, for example in the case of assault against a person or theft of a person's property.

Under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 it is an offence for any person caring for a child under the age of 16 wilfully to assault, ill-treat, neglect, abandon or expose the child in a manner likely to cause unnecessary suffering or injury to health. Similarly, it is an offence under the Mental Health Act 1983 to ill-treat or wilfully neglect a patient in a mental nursing home or a person who is under a guardianship order in residential accommodation.

Registration authorities responsible for regulating independent residential care homes, nursing homes and children's homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984 and the Children's Act 1989 have the power to cancel a home's registration, thereby revoking its licence to trade, if the authority considers malpractice by any of the staff to be sufficiently serious.

Fluoridation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those water companies which add fluoride to the public water supply indicating for each the percentage of artificially fluoridated water they provide; [6201]

(2) when (a) he and (b) members of his Department last met with representatives of the (i) National Pure Water Association and (ii) British Fluoridation Society and what matters were discussed; [6205]

(3) if he will list the research (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by his Department since 1986 into the prevalence of dental decay between areas of non-artificial fluoridated water and artificially fluoridated public water supplies and its association with socio-economic, health and dietary factors; [6199]

(4) if he will list the total number of representations his Department has received in the last five years (a) opposing and (b) supporting the fluoridation of public water supplies. [6202]

(5) if he will list the research projects (a) wholly and (b) partly funded currently by his Department since 1986 into the safety and efficacy of artificially fluoridated public water supplies; [6204]

(5) if he will list the European Union countries which currently have artificially fluoridated public water supplies, indicating the percentage of the population covered. [6200]

Mr. Malone: United Kingdom water companies supplying artificially fluoridated water supplies to various localities within their catchment include:

Anglian Water
Northumbrian Water
North West Water
Severn Trent Water
South Staffordshire Water
Thames Water

Data on the percentage of fluoridated water supplied are not collected centrally.

On 20 November 1996, the Minister of Health met representatives of the North West Councils Against Fluoridation, whose delegation included members of the National Pure Water Association. The meeting concerned the Government's water fluoridation policy. A similar meeting with Department of Health officials was held last June. Department of Health officials meet the British Fluoridation Society two or three times a year to discuss water fluoridation. The last meeting was in March this year.

The Department has not funded research either wholly or partly into water fluoridation. Water fluoridation at 1 mg per litre is considered, on the scientific evidence currently available, to be safe for humans, and is an effective way of improving oral health. The Department of Health will continue to monitor information relevant to the safety and efficacy of fluoridation of drinking water.

Information on representation for and against fluoridation made to the Government is not available.

The European Union countries currently artificially fluoridating the public water supplies are the United Kingdom covering 10 per cent. of the population, the Republic of Ireland covering 73 per cent. of the population and Spain 10 per cent. of the population.

Mr. Horam: There are no specific national waiting time targets for assisted conception.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department concluded the negotiations on the 1993 annual financial returns; what excess profits have been repaid by rebate or price reduction; and by how many pharmaceutical companies in respect of their 1993 sales. [6419]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 October, column 763.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the amount spent on purchasing health care from the private sector by general practitioner fundholders in each year since 1991–92. [6601]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table. The proportion of funds spent by fundholding general practitioners on private health care has been broadly comparable to the proportion spent by health authorities.

Year	Expenditure on private healthcare (£ million)	Percentage of GP fundholder budgets (HCHS)
1991–92	3.7	0.9
1992–93	13.1	1.6
1993–94	29.9	1.6
1994–95	52.5	1.9

East Norfolk Health Authority

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay the savings required of £1.4 million by the East Norfolk health authority in respect of Norwich community health council. [6762]

Mr. Horam: The East Norfolk health authority has recently published its draft investment plan which includes information on the assumptions underlying its proposed strategy. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Alston CBE DL, chairman of the East Norfolk health authority for further details.

Community Hospitals

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the need for community hospitals; and if he will make a statement on the future of Kelling hospital, north Norfolk. [6739]

Mr. Horam: Community and other small hospitals continue to have an important role in today's modern national health service. However, there is no national blueprint setting out the way in which services should be provided. Each health authority must decide the best configuration of services based on their own individual circumstances.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assist the NHS as a service provider in implementing the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 which come into force on 2 December. [7399]

Mr. Burns: Many national health service hospitals and community trusts already meet some if not most of the provisions of the Act. We issued an executive letter—EL(96)70, copies of which have been placed in the Library—alerting the NHS to the implications of the Act. The NHS executive will be holding two conferences early in 1997 for chief executives of trusts and their staff responsible for nursing and quality to identify the special needs that disabled people in hospital may have, to discuss how these may more effectively be met, and to develop strategies for raising awareness and facilitating a more understanding and positive attitude to disability. These conferences are being organised in consultation with disabled people and their organisations and will be opened by my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People. The conferences will be followed up with the issue of good practice guidance.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the benefits of early diagnosis of cystic fibrosis; and if he will make a statement. [6083]

Mr. Horam: Cystic fibrosis is one of many conditions which will be examined by the national screening committee to determine whether a national screening programme is appropriate and, if so, what level of priority that should have.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it policy for all new-born babies to be tested for cystic fibrosis; [6084]

(2) if he will estimate the additional cost to the NHS of introducing routine testing for cystic fibrosis in all new-born babies. [6085]

Mr. Horam: Cystic fibrosis is one of several inherited diseases which have been identified as potential extensions to the existing antenatal and neonatal screening programmes. The national health service executive research and development health technology assessment programme has already commissioned a systematic review of cystic fibrosis screening. The review will examine both genetic screening, which can identify couples at risk of an affected birth, and new-born screening, which aims to advance the clinical diagnosis in order to improve prognosis. The screening effectiveness, cost and acceptability to parents will be considered as part of the review.

The review is due to be completed during 1997, after which a report will be presented to the national screening committee, which is chaired by the chief medical officer. Evidence from these reports, and evidence from any other robust research, will be considered by the committee before making any recommendations to the NHS executive board and Ministers about changes to the existing antenatal and neonatal screening programmes.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his most recent estimate of the number of deaths that are likely to occur over the next 20 years as a result of CJD. [6832]

Mr. Horam: The annual incidence of deaths from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in the United Kingdom continues to be in line with the worldwide average of about one case per million of the population.

NHS Trusts (Disabled Staff)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the most recent figures for the total number of registered disabled employees in the

NHS trusts system, as a percentage of the total number of NHS trust employees; and if he will list the figures for (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995. [7000]

Mr. Malone: The figures showing the percentage of registered disabled persons employed by each trust in England and Wales are published annually in the "Employment Gazette/Labour Market Trends." Copies are available in the Library.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of (a) E. coli 0157 and (b) campylobacter in England in each year since 1990 and from 1 January to date. [7208]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is provided in the following table and is for England and Wales.

Road Building

Mr. Donohoe: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects currently on the Scottish Office's road building programme, the estimated cost of each of the projects and the estimated time scales for starting and completing these projects. [6357]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will make an announcement on these matters in the near future.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount his Department has spent on road building in each of the last five financial years, the projects which were undertaken and the cost of each project; and say what is the planned expenditure by his Department on road building in each of the next five financial years. [6358]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State's total expenditure incurred on road building covers expenditure on motorways and trunk roads and expenditure on local roads. Table 1 shows the amount spent on roads from 1991–92 to 1995–96.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year quarter since October 1990 (a) the number of people deregistered with dentists as NHS patients and the number of dentists involved in these deregistrations for each health board in Scotland and (b) the total number of people deregistered as NHS patients with dentists. [6422]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Quarterly information is not available. Information supplied by health boards on deregistrations for financial years is contained in the table. Deregistered patients may subsequently register with another dentist.

The total number of patients registered in 1995–96 was 52 per cent. higher than in 1990–91.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis dentists can deregister an NHS patient; and what recourse is open to patients. [6420]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: General dental practitioners are independent contractors who are free to choose whether to provide NHS treatment to individual patients. Dentists may decide to deregister patients for a variety of reasons including debts owed by the patient, where the dentist leaves the practice or when a dentist chooses to stop offering NHS treatment. Regulations lay down that a dentist who wishes to end a patient's registration prematurely without his/her agreement must give three months' written notice and complete any outstanding treatment before the patient may be deregistered. A dentist may end a registration at less than three months' notice only with the agreement of the health board. Health boards will help patients who have been deregistered to find an alternative dentist willing to accept them under NHS arrangements.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his Department has received about the impact of the revised NHS scale of payments of dentists on NHS dentistry; and what evaluation he has made of the impact of the new payments scales on the scale of private sector dentistry. [6421]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The package of reforms to the general dental services remuneration system reflected in the change to the NHS scale of payments introduced from 1 September 1996 is designed to improve patient services, provide stability and security for the dental profession and create a firm foundation for future work.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area in Scotland for each of the last six financial years (a) how much revenue has been raised in NHS charges for dental treatment, (b) the average charge for dental treatment levied on NHS patients and (c) how many people were registered with dentists as NHS patients. [6423]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is contained in the tables.

Legal System (Waiting Times)

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics his Department collates on the interval between a report on an accused person being received by the procurator fiscal and the accused person's first appearance in court; and if he will provide the statistics for the year 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96. [6554]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am informed by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate that the Crown Office records the average time between (1) receipt of a report and service of a complaint and (2) service of a complaint and the pleading diet. These records do not relate to solemn proceedings, custody cases or cases where the accused was released on an undertaking. The figures for 1993 to 1996 are as follows:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Court Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. M. Ewart, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Michael Ewart to Mr. Ian Davidson, dated 2 December 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the interval between the pleading diet and the trial diet in the Sheriff Court.

Average figures for the waiting period between pleading and trial diet for summary criminal cases in each of the Sheriff Courts for each of the years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 are shown in the attached table below.

The figures for 1995–96 were published in the Scottish Court Service Annual Report and Accounts which was placed in the House of Commons Library earlier this year. I am also enclosing a copy with this letter. We will be including similar statistics in our Annual Report and Accounts in the future.

I hope that this is helpful.

Directly Employed Solicitors

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what estimate he has made of the non-wage costs of employing extra staff to implement part V of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill; [6889]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average salary to be paid to the extra members of staff to be recruited if part V of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill becomes law. [6892]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is anticipated that the annual non-wage cost of employing directly employed solicitors will be £260,000. The estimated average salary of the additional staff is £17,500, representing six legally qualified and 14 non-qualified staff salaries.

Annual non-wage costs for power of investigation and registration measures are expected to amount to £43,000. It is anticipated that the average salary costs of the extra staff will be £26,500, for eight staff at various grades.

Pesca Projects

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the current Pesca projects in Scotland approved for European funding; by (a) region and (b) of expenditure; [6838]

(2) if he will list the Pesca projects that have been approved in principle but which have not been allocated any funding by Government; and if he will make a statement; [6839]

(3) what was the total Pesca funding for each local authority in Scotland for each year since 1994. [6840]

Mr. Kynoch: Pesca is delivered in eligible areas in Scotland through local Pesca groups, LPGs. The Scottish Office has approved a business plan for each LPG detailing the budget and criteria for selecting individual projects at local level. Each LPG has began to implement its business plan and approve projects. Detailed lists of projects will be provided in annual reports from the LPGs for collation by the Scottish Office and transmission to the European Commission in June 1997.

The table lists the LPGs, each group's allocation and the lead organisation and telephone number.

Farm Payments

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which regulations affect the eligibility of farming enterprises currently determining their separate business status to receive payments of sheep annual premium, suckler cow premium, hill livestock compensatory allowances and arable aid payments; and if he will make a statement. [7214]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Separate regulations govern each of the individual aid schemes listed. In addition, over-arching rules on business eligibility are laid down in the Council and Commission Regulations 3508/92 and 3887/92, as amended, respectively establishing an integrated administration and control system for community aid schemes. Elaboration of these rules is contained in the annual IACS booklet provided to potential claimants.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to effect payment of 1996 sheep annual premium, suckler cow premium, hill livestock compensatory allowances and arable aid payments to farming enterprises currently determining their separate business status; and if he will make a statement. [7215]

Mr. Robertson: Payments under the schemes to eligible businesses will be made in the normal way. In cases where the status of the business is in dispute and where the special review arrangements, which we have established, have been invoked, letters are being sent to the farmers concerned inviting them to agree that the related businesses should be treated as one, on a provisional basis, to facilitate payment and to avoid potential hardship.

Ravenspark Hospital

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to which body the capital receipt from the sale of Ravenspark hospital in Irvine will accrue; what is the estimated sale value of the site; and what progress has been made in disposing of the site. [7024]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Health board capital receipts from the sale of land and buildings are normally remitted to the management executive and are used to offset the capital programme for the whole of the NHS in Scotland. Cases can be submitted by health boards to retain capital receipts. Each case is judged on its own merits.

The value of the land at Ravenspark hospital in Irvine is dependent on planning permission. Progress will be made in disposing of the site by Ayrshire and Arran health board once a final decision about planning permission has been reached.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make an announcement in respect of the closure of Ravenspark hospital in Irvine. [7044]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not received an application to approve the closure of Ravenspark hospital from Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Cattle Tracing

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date his Department was informed of the proposal from Aberdeen and Northern Marts for a computerised tracing system for Scottish cattle; what assessment he has made of this scheme; and if he will make a statement. [7190]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Aberdeen and Northern Marts' feasibility study on a voluntary computerised tracing system for Scottish cattle was received around November 1994. Circumstances have changed dramatically since then and the Government and the farming industry ascribe considerable importance to the early introduction of a mandatory national system. Similar views are held by the European Commission. The Government have commissioned their own feasibility study and industry will be consulted shortly on proposals to introduce such a scheme.

School Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate for the former regional and island council areas in Scotland for (a) 1992–92, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1995–96 the total number of (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools, indicating how many have school boards. [6486]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The information held centrally is given in the table. It is taken from statistical returns by education authorities to the Scottish Office on the results of biennial elections in 1991–92 and 1993–94. Information on numbers of schools with school boards following the 1995–96 round of biennial elections is currently being processed for publication.

Adrossan, Saltcoats and Stevenston Bypass

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects work to start on the Ardrossan, Saltcoats and Stevenston bypass. [6408]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 November 1996]: Progress on the project will depend on public reaction to the draft statutory orders recently published and a draft compulsory purchase order which is being prepared for publication next year, and thereafter on the relative priority of the scheme against completing demands for available resources.

Cattle Slaughter

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of cattle in Scotland which (a) would be targeted for selective slaughter (b) would have qualified for selective slaughter and were slaughtered under the 30-month scheme; and if he will make a statement. [7193]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In May this year, the Central Veterinary Laboratory estimated that a selective cull might involve a maximum of some 127,000 cohort animals present on farms in Great Britain, of which some 4,300 might be in Scotland. The CVL has not calculated the overall effect of the over 30-month scheme, but it is reasonable to assume that a significant proportion of the cull animals have already been slaughtered.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cattle have been slaughtered in Scotland as part of the Government's culling programme; and if he will make a statement. [7192]

Mr. Robertson: To 29 November 1996 some 144,200 cattle have been processed in Scotland through the over-30-month scheme. The operation of the scheme in Scotland has been greatly assisted by a high level of co-operation across all sectors of the industry.

Legal Services Ombudsman

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reports were issued by the Scottish legal services ombudsman during (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996; how many of these were issued (i) within two months of, (ii) more than two months and less than four months after, (iii) more than four months and less than six months after and (iv) more than six months after his receipt of the relevant file from the Law Society of Scotland. [6493]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 November 1996]: The information requested is as follows:

	[1]1994	[2]1995	[3]1996
Number of reports issued	105	116	[4]99

[1] In 1994, 89 reports were issued within two months, 15 in 2–4 months, and one in 4–6 months.
[2] In 1995, 18 reports were issued within two months, 97 in 2–4 months and one in 4–6 months.
[3] In 1996, 14 reports were issued within two months, 36 in 2–4 months, 44 in 4–6 months and 5 in over 6 months.
[4] To 26 November.

Methylated Spirits

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy not to proceed with the deregulation order in relation to the Methylated Spirits (Sale By Retail) (Scotland) Act 1937. [6363]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The consultation process is still under way. Responses will be assessed carefully before any final decision is taken.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his Department has received relating to the proposed deregulation order on the Methylated Spirits (Sale By Retail) (Scotland) Act 1937; and when the Department will bring forward its proposals. [6389]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1996]: A number of responses have been received to date from those consulted on the proposed Deregulation Order. The vast majority favour some relaxation of the present restrictions. Comments will now be assessed carefully before we announce our final proposals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Northern Ireland Newspapers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which weekly newspapers from Northern Ireland he (a) receives each week and (b) has cancelled delivery of this year. [7108]

Dr. Liam Fox: None.

MEPs (Pensions and Allowances)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the allowances and the pension arrangements currently available to British Members of the European Parliament. [7111]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Members of the European Parliament may claim expenses that they incur in performance of their parliamentary duties as follows: general office costs; travel within their member state and to official meetings or conferences; subsistence costs while attending official meetings; and costs of employing secretaries or assistants.

Pension arrangements for United Kingdom Members of the European Parliament are analogous to those for Members of the House of Commons. They are financed by the Exchequer and by contributions from individual MEPs at a rate of 6 per cent. of basic salary. MEPs may also subscribe to the European Parliament's additional voluntary pension scheme. Two thirds of payments to the scheme come from the EP budget, one third from participating MEPs.

Venezuela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Venezuela. [7308]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to visit Venezuela in the immediate future.

I visited in May this year and met several Venezuelan Ministers, including the President.

DEFENCE

State Opening of Parliament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 504, what were the numbers and ranks of all service personnel who took part in the state opening of Parliament; what is their (a) individual daily pay rate and (b) total daily pay rates; and how many days each group was involved in preparation and de-briefing for the event. [5854]

Mr. Soames: The numbers and ranks of the military personnel who took part in the state opening of Parliament together with the individual average daily pay rates of the participating ranks and the total daily pay rates, are as follows:

Rank	Numbers (a)	Daily pay rate £(b)	Total daily pay rate £ (a x b)
Major General	1	179.88	179.88
Colonel	3	140.38	421.14
Lieutenant Colonel	3	120.78	362.34
Major	17	89.64	1,523.88
Captain	27	69.48	1,875.96
Lieutenant/2nd Lieutenant	22	53.10	1,168.20
Warrant Officer (1st Class)	7	68.52	479.64
Warrant Officer (2nd Class)	24	64.89	1,557.36
Staff Sergeant	36	60.23	2,168.28
Sergeant	95	52.36	4,974.20
Corporal	166	47.58	7,898.28
Lance Corporal	244	39.43	9,620.92
Private	855	34.59	29,574.45
Total	1,500		61,804.53

These figures represent gross daily rates of pay which are paid to service personnel irrespective of where they are serving or the nature of their duties. They are not additional costs to the MOD in respect of the state opening of Parliament. Participating units spent less than a full day in preparation for this ceremony.

Lease Contracts

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to leasing rather than purchasing the airportable dozer (future purchase number ELWS1A/20, the aircraft potable water/toilet servicing vehicles (future purchase number SMC41C/3457), self-propelled access platforms (future purchase number SMC31ARAF335), helicopter for empire tests pilots school (future purchase number TEBD333307), the crawler dozer (future purchase number EMD1A/151) as listed in MOD contracts bulletin volume 11 number 6. [5169]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 2 December 1996]: In each of the five cases in question, the entry in the contracts bulletin is in the "Future Purchases" section, which is intended to inform companies of MOD's forthcoming requirements at the earliest opportunity. The actual invitations to tender have not yet been finalised and when they are, or even before, there will be an opportunity for companies to submit innovative proposals such as leasing. Any such proposals which are received will be given full consideration. However, in specific cases, it may not be practical or cost-effective to lease instead of buy, as it may be necessary to modify the equipment to accommodate military service needs. For example, in the case of the helicopter requirement, the civil air register calls for different operating requirements from those which apply with the military register.

TRANSPORT

Railtrack (Stevenage Station)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate allegations of payments requested from train operators by Railtrack in respect of trains passing through Stevenage station. [6655]

Mr. Watts: I am not aware of any such allegations.

Aviation Regulation and Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the standards of aviation regulation and safety within United Kingdom airspace; and if he will make a statement. [6966]

Mr. Bowis: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the regulation of civil aviation in the UK. It sets high safety standards and consequently the UK has a good aviation safety record.

Boeing 737s

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 154, what inspections are being undertaken by the Civil Aviation Authority to ensure that Boeing's instructions regarding defective rudders are being implemented. [6967]

Mr. Bowis: No specific inspections by the Civil Aviation Authority are required. The aircraft operator is responsible for ensuring that mandatory inspections, such as those required by US Federal Aviation Administration airworthiness directive 96-23–51, are carried out. UK operators are aware of the importance of complying with airworthiness directives and have always been assiduous in doing so.

An aircraft cannot be released to service by its maintenance organisation until all mandatory action has been carried out and recorded in the maintenance records. CAA control over this process is exercised through regular audits of organisations and their maintenance records.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish an independent review of United Kingdom air traffic control arrangements, with special reference to separation distances, supervision of air traffic control movements, and the inability of those concerned to meet the targets set for them; and if he will ensure that some of the members of such a review are drawn from experts outside Europe. [6965]

Mr. Bowis: The good safety record of the UK National Air Traffic Services does not justify such a review.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 479, what criteria were used to determine that Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute was best qualified to conduct the Phase 2 survey of the MV Derbyshire; what was the role of the European Commission in making the decision; at what stage competitive tendering took place or will take place for the work; which companies have been or will be invited to tender; and if he will make a statement. [7106]

Mr. Bowis: The criterion was the ability to meet the specification for phase 2 of the project drawn up by the three technical assessors, having particular regard to the availability of, and experience of using, the appropriate photographic and sonar technology and the ability to manipulate and present the data recovered. Because of Woods Hole's unique capabilities and experience, which is not matched by any commercial party, it was appointed without a formal tendering exercise. A full assessment of worldwide capabilities in this area was undertaken and the decision to appoint Woods Hole was taken jointly by the Department and the European Commission.

Rainworth Bypass, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the need for the Rainworth bypass, Nottinghamshire; and what plans he has to provide financial assistance for the scheme. [6844]

Mr. Watts: As part of its transport policies and programme submission, Nottinghamshire county council has provided information about Rainworth bypass in line with the guidance issued annually to local authorities by my Department. The case of the bypass will be considered very carefully in the light of competing bids for major new schemes and other areas of spending. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make an announcement shortly.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5964]

Mr. Bowis: This information would be disproportionately costly to compile. Page 1 of the transport report for 1994 summarises the geographical extent of the Secretary of State's main responsibilities, but this is not an exhaustive list. The transport report 1996 contains extensive information about the Secretary of State's responsibilities and expenditure plans. The Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices and the Department of the Environment publish their own reports, which include information on regional and local transport matters. Some regionally disaggregated expenditure figures are also given in "Transport Statistics Great Britain" and in the public expenditure analyses published annually by the Treasury.

A40

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects the road improvement works on the A40 at Gypsy Corner and Western Circus to be completed. [7048]

Mr. Bowis: The timing of construction will be the responsibility of the successful DBFO company. We intend to issue a pre-qualification document shortly to gauge private sector interest.

Coaches

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make it his policy in the period until the end of the derogation, to allow the UK coach industry to operate up to 18-tonne vehicles which comply with the 10.5 tonne rear axle limit. [6769]

Mr. Watts [pursuant to his reply 2 December. Official Report, column 475]: The Department of Transport will shortly be issuing a consultation document looking into the feasibility of allowing coaches to operate at 18 tonnes with a 10.5 tonne maximum drive axle weight. Pending the results of this consultation no decision will be made on whether or not to permit such an increase.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 602, what were the proposed annual savings for the 14 IT projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million, undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6700]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 28 November 1996]: A total of £11.9 million excluding three projects for which estimates are not available. Only one project has so far been completed.

ENVIRONMENT

Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the last six years the average rent registered by rent officers in each region of England for unfurnished lettings by (a) private landlords and (b) housing associations; and if he will list the average percentage increase on the previous registration in relation to the percentage change in (i) house prices and (ii) general inflation over the same period. [6122]

Mr. Curry: Available information is given in the tables. As rents registered by rent officers are typically re-registered every two years, percentage changes in respect of house prices and the retail prices index have also been quoted over a two-year period.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding rough sleepers in the north-west. [6656]

Mr. Clappison: The consultation paper, "Rough Sleepers Initiative—Future Plans," was sent to all local authorities in England and to a number of voluntary and statutory sector agencies working with homeless people. It sought views on the future of the rough sleepers initiative and invited evidence on the extent of rough sleeping. Eighty-six local authorities responded. In the north-west, these were the borough of Blackburn, Copeland borough council, Hyndburn borough council, Manchester city council, South Ribble borough council and Wigan metropolitan borough council. Only Manchester city council indicated any significant problem of rough sleeping.

Manchester city council was invited to take part in a detailed evaluation of the extent of rough sleeping and services available to people sleeping rough in Manchester. Similar evaluations were conducted in 22 other areas around England where consultation responses suggested the existence of a rough sleeping problem. They were co-ordinated by Shelter, on contract to the Department of the Environment. The single night headcount in Manchester, which formed part of the evaluation there, found 31 people sleeping rough. On the basis of these evaluations, the Government are extending help to tackle rough sleeping to a number of areas around England, including Manchester. These were set out in detail in my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 31 October, Official Report, column 187.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the rough sleepers initiative to the north-west; and if he will make a statement. [6657]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 31 October 1996, Official Report, column 187.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (i) how many grants have been paid under the home energy efficiency scheme in 1996–97 to date; and how many of these grants have been paid at the lower rate; [6587]

(2) how many grants he expects to be paid under the home energy efficiency scheme during 1996–97; how many of these are expected to be paid at the lower rate; and if he will make a statement. [6588]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: A total of 288,525 grants were paid between 1 April and 31 October, the most recent date for which figures are available; 1,351 were paid at the lower rate. I estimate that 406,000 grants will be paid in 1996–97 under this scheme, which has already helped over 2 million vulnerable households. A total of 2,300 of these grants are expected to be at the lower rate. The 1997–98 output will be boosted by the proposed 3 per cent. increase in the allocation. I intend soon to announce changes to the structure of the scheme to make it more flexible and even better value for money.

Homelessness (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been housed by each local authority in the north-west during the last five years under housing legislation relating to homelessness. [6658]

Mr. Clappison: There is a table in the Library that shows the numbers of households accepted for re-housing by each local authority under the homelessness legislation, for each year since 1980.

Prisoners (Rents)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce measures to prevent local authorities and housing associations (a) charging rent to tenants who are in custody and (b) charging rent for four weeks to offenders who relinquish tenancy on arrest. [6654]

Mr. Clappison: None. Rent collection is a matter for local authorities and housing associations. The Government encourage local authorities and housing associations to collect rent due and to pursue rent arrears.

Planning Guidance

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the provision in PPG13 in respect of new dwellings for agricultural and forestry workers to give greater priority to the environmental disadvantages of frequent commuting. [6787]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have no plans to do so.

Housing (Fire Safety)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if local authorities which implement a registration scheme for houses in multiple occupation under the Housing Act 1996 will be required to provide the local fire authority with details of all premises registered with them so that the fire service may make such inspections as are necessary under section 1(1)(d) of the Fire Services Act 1947 relating to the siting and layout of the properties. [5714]

Mr. Clappison: Section 1(1)(d) of the Fire Services Act 1947 places a duty on fire authorities to secure efficient arrangements for obtaining information about the character of buildings for fire-fighting purposes. Local housing authorities are required by law to make available for public inspection the information contained in their registers of houses in multiple occupation. Fire authorities will therefore be able to obtain this information if required.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the revised consultation procedures between fire authorities and local authorities under section 75(3) of the Housing Act 1996; and what assessment he has made of whether such procedures will ensure the safety of tenants in such properties, in case of fire. [5715]

Mr. Clappison: The Housing Act 1996 provides for a range of measures to secure improved standards in houses in multiple occupation particularly for fire safety. Local authorities will retain the prime responsibility for enforcing fire safety standards in HMOs but will be required to consult with the fire authorities where enforcement action is required in specified categories of high risk HMOs. I announced on 26 November, Official Report, column 147, the issues of a consultation paper setting out details of the secondary legislation we propose. Copies are available in the Library.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5960]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department of the Environment's responsibilities, which are set out in the Department's annual report, generally relate to England only. The main exceptions are:

England and Wales

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Environment Agency

England, Wales and Scotland

Policy responsibility for the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Countryside research and long-term monitoring programme

Sponsorship of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee

CITES licensing

Registration of birds (Schedule 4 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981)

Monitoring and encouraging action to reduce Government Departments' empty residential properties.

Maintenance of qualification list for building contractors and consultants wishing to undertake Government contracts (NB—the list is available for use in Great Britain and to a limited extent in Northern Ireland.)

Health and Safety Commission/Executive

British Waterways

United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland Policy responsibility and UK lead Department for:

EC Birds Directive

EC Habitats Directive

UK Biodiversity Action Plan

International Conservation Conventions (Bern, Bonn, Ramsar)

Sponsorship of HOMES (Housing Organisation and Mobility Exchange Schemes)

Environmental protection, including leading in international fora, in consultation with the relevant Northern Ireland Departments and the relevant Scottish and Welsh Offices

UK Round Table on Sustainable Development

Panel on Sustainable Development

Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution.

Provision of information on the proportion of time and budget relating to each of the categories could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Show Houses

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) under what statutory provisions local authorities may levy the uniform business rate on show houses; and if he will make a statement; [6772]

(2) if he will make a statement on the steps which he is taking to assist the housebuilding industry with particular regard to reducing the regulatory and local government tax burden. [6773]

Sir Paul Beresford: Show houses are non-domestic under section 66 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. Local authorities are obliged, under paragraphs 1 to 4 of schedule 9 to the 1988 Act, to levy non-domestic rates on all non-domestic property, apart from those which are exempt.

The rates bill on over 1 million small properties in 1997–98 in England and Wales will be held at this year's level under measures recently announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget. Nearly all show houses are likely to benefit from these measures.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the law with respect to the levelling of local government taxes on show houses following the case of Ideal Homes v Ian Walker heard by the rating tribunal in 1995; and if he will make a statement. [6774]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Sir M. Grylls) on Monday 2 December 1996, Official Report, column 487.

Pollution Control

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated, into the use of economic measures in the control of pollution (i) in general and (ii) in the water sector. [7156]

Mr. Clappison: In 1993 the Government published "Making Markets Work for the Environment", a statement of both policy and practice, intended to facilitate the introduction of market-based methods for the improved delivery of environmental policy objectives. This was based on extensive evaluation of research conducted within Government, in academic and other research organisations and in international organisations including the OECD. Since then the Government have kept the extensive body research literature under review, and supplemented this evaluation by specific commissions covering all sectors of environment policy.

Water

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the environmental technology best practice programme is devoted to (a) schemes to reduce effluent discharges and (b) schemes to reduce demand for water. [7159]

Mr. Clappison: Committed expenditure under the environmental technology best practice programme on water and effluent projects is currently 41 per cent. Eight per cent. of this expenditure is on projects with a focus on water minimisation; 22 per cent. is on projects with a focus on effluent reduction; and 11 per cent. is on projects that cover both areas.

Environmental Policy

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the use of economic measures in environmental policy. [7155]

Mr. Clappison: Research is routinely used when considering economic measures in environmental policies as, for example, with the landfill tax. Other recent and continuing areas of research include the use of market-based measures to address sulphur emissions, the environmental effects of pesticide use and volatile organic compounds. Further details of the Department's planned research programmes can be found in the publications "DoE Research Market" and research newsletters.

Planning Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of how many planning schemes he has used his call-in powers in 1996; and how many (i) have been determined and (ii) await determination. [7310]

Sir Paul Beresford: Up to 30 November, my right hon. Friend had called in 130 applications for his determination and had decided 85 applications in 1996. Forty applications were awaiting determination at that date.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of outstanding planning appeals for each district authority in England. [7314]

Sir Paul Beresford: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 2 December 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of outstanding planning appeals in England.

The information is enclosed. As the tables are too long to be printed in the Official Report, arrangements will be made for a copy to be deposited in the Library.

Alkali Regulations

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to repeal the Alkali Etc. Works Regulations Act 1906. [7702]

Mr. Clappison: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 provided for the repeal of the Alkali Act 1906. The Minister for the Environment and Countryside has today signed a commencement order giving effect to this repeal, coming into force on 16 December.

The repeal of this Act marks the end of a chapter of national industrial air pollution legislation which dates back to the first Alkali Act of 1863. The systems of integrated pollution control and local air pollution control, which are implemented under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, supersede the old legislation.

These two new systems are now fully operational, with well over 10,000 industrial processes in England and Wales subject to their control. The repeal of the Alkali Act is a reflection of that success.

This is a further example of the Government's intention to remove redundant legislation from the statute books. This commencement order will have the effect of repealing not only the 1906 Act, but also three separate sets of regulations, and provisions in two other Acts.

Water Leakages

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the total water leakage figures (a) in litres per day and (b) as a percentage of total water distribution input in each year since 1991; [7157]

(2) if he will publish for each water company (i) leakage figures for 1995–96 and (ii) the leakage targets for 1995–96 submitted to the Director General of Water Services in each case (a) as a percentage of distribution input and (b) in litres per day. [7158]

Mr. Clappison: The data on total leakage since 1991–92 are in the table.

	Total losses Ml/d	Total leakage (per cent.)
1991–92	4,439	26.6
1992–93	4,620	28.4
1993–94	4,604	28.5
1994–95	5,061	30.7
1995–96	4,980	29.2

Leakage data for each water company in 1995–96 are shown in the Ofwat annual report "Cost of Water Delivered and Sewage Collected" which was published on 27 November 1996. Water companies have not submitted targets for 1995–96, but are working towards meeting the demanding leakage targets set for 1997–98 which were published in Ofwat's May 1996 report, "Leakage of Water in England and Wales". Copies of both reports are available in the Library.

European Structural Fund

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has completed its review of European structural fund processes in England; and what conclusions it has reached. [7703]

Mr. Curry: We have completed our review of the European structural fund processes in England. In carrying out the work we have been aware of the criticisms and suggestions by numerous bodies both within and outside Government, including those contained in the report, "Efficiency Scrutiny of Financial Information Flows between Central and Local Government", which we published on 14 November.

We intend to revise radically the present administrative arrangements and to delegate to local partnerships considerable responsibility for project selection within an agreed action plan. This will ensure that partnerships are able to take a strategic view of the development of projects to deal with issues facing their areas and can bring to bear the European regional development fund and the European social fund alongside domestic regeneration programmes. Finally we propose to simplify the system of financial accounting for ERDF in England to speed up the payment of grant to successful applicants.

As a result of partnerships of public, private and voluntary bodies will be able, as with the single regeneration budget challenge fund, to bid for resources to achieve key improvements for their areas, or for individual projects. Bids will be judged as now by Government, advised by the Monitoring Committees. Partnerships will need to have in place high quality project appraisal and financial management systems to ensure that the public money is well spent. They will be judged by results.

We will be notifying the new arrangements to the European Commission and will be discussing the detailed implementation with the monitoring committees and others. Our aim is to put in place the system in time for the new objective 2 programmes starting next year. Our objective is high quality and fully integrated regeneration programmes which meet local needs.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary,

Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5957]

Mr. Streeter: The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for promoting general reforms in the civil and family law; the procedures of the civil courts; for legal aid; and the Lord Chancellor is responsible for advising the Crown on the appointment of High Court and circuit judges. He appoints High Court Masters, district judges, magistrates and certain other legal officers in his own right. He also has ministerial responsibility for magistrates' courts, which are administered locally.

The Lord Chancellor's Department has two executive agencies, the Court Service and the Public Trust Office.

The Department's responsibilities, including those of the Court Service and Public Trust Office, relate to England and Wales. Its expenditure in 1995–96 is set out in table 1. Explanatory notes are provided to show where a split may be made between expenditure in England and Wales. A similar split in time spent on the different categories cannot be made. The Department has no responsibilities which relate to England alone or, save in respect of the administration of certain tribunals, to Scotland, and nor do its responsibilities extend to Northern Ireland.

The Lord Chancellor is accountable to Parliament for two separate Government Departments, which are also executive agencies.

The Public Record Office is responsible for maintaining, supervising and co-ordinating the public record system of the Government of the United Kingdom. Its responsibilities and therefore all of its time and budget relate to the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. In practice, most of its work concerns England and Wales since records of Government Departments, courts, tribunals and other bodies relating wholly or mainly to Scotland or to Northern Ireland are administered by the Scottish Record Office or by the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, as appropriate. However, it has no method of attributing its expenditure on a territorial basis. The Public Record Office's budget—less extraordinary items—for 1995–96 was £26,735,000.

The main statutory function of Her Majesty's land Registry, which was also established as a trading fund in April 1993, is to keep a register of title to freehold and leasehold land throughout England and Wales. On behalf of the Crown, the registry guarantees title to registered estates and interests in land. The registry's responsibilities apply equally to both England and Wales. Its expenditure is set out in table 2.

The Lord Chancellor also has separate responsibility for the administration of justice in Northern Ireland, and for advising the Crown on judicial appointments and making certain appointments himself on a similar basis to that in England and Wales. These responsibilities are exercised through the Northern Ireland Court Service and in consultation with the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Court Service was created under the Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 as a "unified and distinct civil service of the Crown". Its principal functions are facilitating the business of the Supreme Court, county courts, magistrates' courts and coroners' courts; providing a facility for the enforcement of civil judgments; overseeing the administration of civil and criminal legal aid; and administering the office of the social security commissioners and child support commissioners. Its expenditure in 1995–96 is set out in table 3.

Table 1: 1995–96 spend by territory for vote categories

H (Magistrates Courts grants on loan charges)	16,214,760	1,565,681	17,780,441
Total			2,460,660,514

[1] All HQ expenditure is made in England, however it could be argued that part of it (e.g. policy, personnel, pay unit) is on behalf of the Court Service for Wales. We have no method of attributing the expenditure on a territorial basis and can only provide a total figure.

[2] The Court Service split has been done on a circuit basis. The Wales figure is simply the expenditure for Wales and Chester circuit: this includes part of Cheshire.

[3] All of the PTO expenditure should be attributed to England.

[4] Expenditure on Legal Aid cannot be identified separately. The Legal Aid Board administers applications and bills regionally and payments to Welsh practitioners could only be identified by scrutinising each bill at the regional offices that cover Wales. Legal aid payments through the Crown Court are not separately recorded at county level.

[5] Costs from central funds: payments are made through the magistrates courts and the Crown Court. Payments are not recorded separately at county level and could only be identified by examining each claim.

HM Land Registry figures for spend in Wales represent the expenditure for Swansea District Land Registry. This office is responsible for all land registration services in Wales and also for the land registration services in the County of Hereford and Worcester and certain London boroughs. It is not possible to attribute expenditure on a territorial basis and therefore only a total figure can be provided.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

EU Development Council

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Union Development Council meeting on 22 November. [7459]

Dr. Liam Fox: Initial discussions were held on the future of EC trade and development relations with the African, Caribbean and Pacific states after the year 2000. The Council adopted a decision and a joint action on Zaire and the Great Lakes, underlining EU commitment to the objectives of the UN resolutions, and giving priority to the return of refugees to their country of origin.

The Council also adopted two regulations, setting a framework for EC rehabilitation and reconstruction operations and for EC development cooperation with South Africa. Common positions were agreed on two draft regulations governing assistance for programmes against drugs and drug addiction, and on population policies and programmes in developing countries. The Council adopted resolutions setting out policy guidelines for EC and member state programmes in the field of human and social development; and guidance for EC development programmes targeted at anti-personnel land mines. Conclusions were agreed on gender issues in crisis prevention and an evaluation of EC humanitarian aid from 1991–96.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussion he has had with the computer industry on the requirement for all appropriate products offered for sale to be clearly labelled as millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [6669]

Mr. Ian Taylor: At the Taskforce 2000 conference held on 18 October I challenged all computer companies still selling non-millennium compliant software and services to make their position clear. Following this I am pleased to note that Computing Services and Software Association, acting with Taskforce 2000, have written to all UK software suppliers. They are now making available a millennium directory of suppliers who offer services and products for the millennium date change issue.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the outcome of the informal task force of the European Commission to consult and report on the problem of the effect of the century date change on computer systems; and if he will make a statement. [6668]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I first raised the year 200 issue at the Telecoms Council on 27 June.

I am not aware of any informal taskforce of the European Commission dealing with the century date change problem. However, I understand from the Commission that, using the established senior officials group for IT standards public procurement group, the Commission has been considering the implications of the century date change issue. As recently as 26 November the group met to exchange ideas on alleviating the problem both in member states own Administrations and within private sector businesses within Europe.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Post Office is taking to ensure that millennium compliance of its computer systems and those with which they are connected; what is its budget for this purpose; and if he will make a statement. [6666]

Mr. Taylor: I understand from the Post Office that it has had a dedicated year 2000 project team in place for the past six months. The project is working closely with all Post Office businesses to both understand the impact and implement system changes to ensure compliancy.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the recent increase in petrol prices; and if he will make a statement. [6393]

Mr. Page: I have received a number of representations regarding those increases in petrol prices that pre-dated the increase in duty in the Budget. Those were due to a slackening in the intense price competition of earlier this year, coupled with increases in international oil prices.

Gross margins have, however, still not recovered to the levels of 1995.

IRA Explosions (Costs)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost to private individuals and businesses of IRA explosions in Great Britain over the last five years; and if he will make it his policy to extend the Northern Ireland terrorist criminal injury and criminal damage legislation to the mainland. [7203]

Mr. Nelson: There is no justification for extending the Northern Ireland terrorism compensation arrangements because insurance cover is readily available in Great Britain. No estimate has been made of the costs to individuals and businesses of terrorist explosions in the last five years.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental audits have been conducted at oil and gas drilling rigs and storage platforms operated by companies licensed to drill in United Kingdom coastal waters or designated areas of the North sea and Atlantic ocean. [7014]

Mr. Page: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier response to a similar question on 31 October, Official Report, column 184. Figures for the number of environmental inspections or audits will, in future, be published in my Department's annual energy report, copies of which will be held in the Library of the House.

Oil Discharges

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the largest single discharge of oil from an oil drilling or storage platform in the United Kingdom sector since 1979. [7022]

Mr. Page: The single largest spillage of oil from an oil drilling or storage platform in the United Kingdom sector since 1979 was from the Piper Alpha installation in 1988, when 750 tonnes of oil was lost following the fatal explosion.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the percentage change in British export unit values for the latest available year over (a) 1973, (b) 1978 and (c) 1990. [7232]

Mr. Nelson: Information on UK export price indices for the latest 10 years is published by the Office for National Statistics in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", which is available in the Library of the House. Figures for earlier periods may be obtained from the central shared database, which may be accessed from the Library.

Information and Communication Technologies

Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Government are taking to improve public access to new information and communication technologies. [7638]

Mr. Lang: Today, as part of the Government's information society initiative, I launched "IT for All", a four-year programme, taking us to the millennium. The information society initiative is the Government's strategy to take the United Kingdom forward into the information age. It is the single identity used for all Government activities in this area, whether they involve the Government's own delivery of services, business support, education, libraries or giving hands-on experience to private citizens. I have today published "Building the Information Society: a National Strategy" which sets out the Government's overall aims and policies for the information society, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

"IT for All" will underpin all parts of the information society initiative by focusing on the use of technology by individuals. We want to help those who are unconvinced by the benefits of information and communication technologies or are not confident about using them. "IT for All" will raise awareness of these new technologies among the general public and facilitate direct access to them. "IT for All" will show the benefits and opportunities they offer and the many ways in which they can already be used to improve the quality of daily life. The campaign aims to build positive well-informed public attitudes to the information society, particularly among those who have little or no direct contact with interactive applications at present. There will be opportunities throughout the country for people to get direct, hands-on experience, whether in libraries, shops or schools.

"IT for All" is based on a close partnership between business, central and local government and voluntary sector organisations. It involves many Government Departments, including the Department for Trade and Industry, Department for Education and Employment, Department of National Heritage, Cabinet Office, Department of Transport, Department of Health, Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Northern Ireland Office.

Further details can be found on the "IT for All" website at http://www.itforall.gov.uk.

Consumers Council

Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Consumers Council held on 25 November. [7639]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Council held an orientation debate on a proposal for a directive on injunctions for the protection of consumers interest.

The Council also held an orientation debate in which broad agreement was reached on proposed amendments to the part of the directive on consumer credit dealing with annual percentage rates.

The Council agreed conclusions on an access to justice action plan for co-operation to help consumers achieve settlement in cross-boarder disputes through out-of-court and small claims procedures.

There was an open debate on consumers and the information society in which the wide ranging impact and speed of technological development in the information society were fully acknowledged. The Commission will examine existing legislation to identify the, possibly limited, scope for specifically consumer oriented action.

The Commission gave presentations on the:

Green Paper on Financial Services

Green Paper on Commercial Communications

Proposed Directive on Consumer Guarantees

There was an informal discussion on:

the Commission guide on bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

preparation for the intergovernmental conference, with particular reference to the treaty provisions for consumer affairs;

the implications for consumers of the proposals for a single European Currency.

national policies on vulnerable groups of consumers; and on consumer protection in relation to novel foods.

Extra-territorial Jurisdiction

Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the EC regulation designed to counter assertions of extra-territorial jurisdiction by the United States of America in respect of Cuba, Iran and Libya to be adopted. [7640]

Mr. Nelson: The General Affairs Council on 28 October agreed the text of an EC regulation which is designed to protect against the effects of the extraterritorial application of legislation adopted by a third country. The regulation specifically identifies the US Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity Act 1996 and other legislation relating to Cuba, and the Iran and Libya Sanctions Act 1996. It was adopted on 22 November 1996 and entered into force on 29 November 1996.

The regulation applies to all legal persons incorporated within the Community and to all natural persons resident in the Community whether or not they are EC nationals as well as certain other categories of persons, for example certain shipping companies.

Those covered by the regulation are obliged to inform the European Commission either directly or through their national authorities if their financial and economic interests are directly or indirectly affected by the operation of the foreign legislation in question and they are prohibited from complying with any requirements or prohibitions which may be imposed on them under the legislation. Procedures have been established whereby those affected may seek waivers allowing them to comply in circumstances where non-compliance with the foreign legislation would seriously damage their interests or those of the European Community.

The regulation also provides that judgments given by foreign courts under the specified foreign legislation will not be enforceable within the European Community and that those persons covered by the regulation can recover any damages, including legal costs, caused to them by the application of that legislation or by actions based thereon or resulting therefrom. This recovery may be obtained, anywhere in the European Community where there are assets, from the natural or legal person or any other entity causing the damages or from any person acting on its behalf or from an intermediary.

Member states are obliged to provide for sanctions for breaches of the notification and non-compliance obligations. We shall be proposing an appropriate order to Her Majesty in Council to accomplish this which will then be laid before Parliament.

A joint action commitment agreed in parallel to the regulation commits member states to protect the interests of those natural and legal persons covered by the regulation to the extent that the regulation itself does not do so.

Budget Reductions

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the areas within his Department which will be affected by the Budget reductions set out in table 5A.4 of the Red Book for 1997 to 2000. [7151]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Details underlying the figures in table 5A.4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98" will, as usual, be contained in Departments' expenditure plans reports to be presented to Parliament in March next year.

Office of Science and Technology

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the implications of the Budget statement for the OST. [7152]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The science budget—the funding available for distribution to the research councils, the Royal Society, the Royal Academy of Engineering and a number of other small programmes—has been maintained at the planning level announced in November last year (£1,330 million) for 1997–98 and represents an increase of £18 million over the level for the current year. The planning figures are shown in the table:

Science budget	£ million
1996–97 estimated outturn	1,312
1997–98 budget	1,330
1998–99 planning	1,338
1999–00 figures	1,333

Child Labour

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the US Government in respect of the abolition of child labour. [7007]

Mr. Paice: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has received no such representations, but the US Government are amongst those joining with the UK in supporting the International Labour Organisation's proposal to draw up a new international instrument to tackle the problem of child labour.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many children under the age of 14 years work (a) full and (b) part-time in the United Kingdom. [7011]

Mr. Burns: I have been asked to reply.

Children under the minimum school leaving age are not permitted to work full-time. Children are permitted to work for a limited number of hours in suitable types of job. Statistics on the number of children working are not collected centrally. Such information as is available was published in the April 1995 edition of the "Employment Gazette", copies of which are available in the Library. Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland, and for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Agency Letters

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on how many occasions (a) non-departmental public bodies and (b) executive agencies responsible to her Department, have provided answers by letter, copies to the Library but not published in the Official Report in each of the latest available two years. [3158]

Mr. Sproat: When appropriate, Ministers will ask non-departmental public bodies to reply by letter to hon. Members and place copies of their replies in the Libraries of the House. These requests are recorded in the answer given to hon. Members which is published in the Official Report.

When hon. Members ask questions relating to the operations of the Department's executive agencies, the Minister will ask the chief executive to reply and a copy of the letter will be published in the Official Report.

On occasions where we are unable to provide the information requested before the House rises for recess, the Minister will ask the chief executive to reply and place copies of their reply in the Libraries of the House. This request will be published in the Official Report. Records of the number of such answers are not readily available.

Millennium Funding

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what is the total value of (a) bids received from and (b) awards made to the Asian community for millennium funding; [4927]

(2) how many visits have been made by each of the millennium commissioners to ethnic minority projects bidding for millennium funding; [4926]

(3) how many awards of millennium funds have been made to projects proposed by members of the Asian community; [4928]

(4) how many bids for millennium funds were received from the Asian community in each round; and if she will list them. [4910]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Projects (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what amount she expects to spend on millennium projects in Wales for each year until 2000; and if she will make a statement. [5320]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Television Licences

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to lay the consolidated regulations on television licences. [6616]

Mr. Sproat: The Government intend that the new regulations will come into force from 1 April 1997. My right hon. Friend expects to announce next month details of the changes to be effected in the regulations and the level of the licence fee also coming into force from 1 April. The regulations themselves will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the annual expenditure since 1991 on (a) refunds and (b) administrative costs of refunding television licence holders for unused portions of the licence. [6557]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: We do not hold this information. Since 1 April 1991 the administration of the television licensing system, including refund arrangements, has been the statutory responsibility of the BBC.

Broadcasting Council for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to make an announcement concerning the appointment of the chairman of the BBC Broadcasting Council for Wales. [6624]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to make such an announcement before the end of the year.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many women are currently employed by her Department at each civil service grade. [6439]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The number of women currently employed within the Department of National Heritage is shown in the table, listed by DNH grade with the most senior at the top.

Serving Grade	Number
Senior civil service	7
A (upper band)	2
A (lower band)	20
B	42
AT/HEOD	2
C	39
D (upper band)	38
D (lower band)	26
Total	176

The grade equivalents for the above are:
Senior Civil Service: Grade 5 and above
A (upper band): Grade 6 and equivalents
A (lower band): Grade 7 and equivalents
B: HEO/SEO and equivalents
AT/HEOD: Fast stream
C: EO and equivalents
D (upper band): AO and equivalents
D(lower band): AA and equivalents.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of those employed by her Department in 1992–93 were women. [6468]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The Department of National Heritage was still in the process of being set-up during 1992–93 and information on the gender of staff employed in that year is unavailable.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 621, what are the proposed annual savings for the seven IT projects planned for 1996–97. [6705]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The seven IT projects proposed for 1996–97 are aimed at constraining future costs rather than reducing current expenditure. One project is budgeted at less than £500,000, the others are less than £50,000 in value. The annual savings against projected future maintenance and staff costs are 5–10 per cent.

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 621, what were the proposed annual savings for IT projects, in the band £500,000 to £1 million, undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6704]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: None of the projects identified in the previous answer fell into the band £500,000 to £1 million.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what child care facilities her Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6465]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 November 1996]: My Department, excluding agencies, offers employees a subsidised nursery place and a subsidised holiday play scheme. The nursery place has been available since November 1993. Two members of staff have made use of the place.

The Westminster play scheme, which caters for children aged between five and 12 years during main school holidays, has been used by staff since the summer of 1994. Staff used the scheme on two occasions in 1994, five in 1995 and twice this year.

Philoxenia European Tourism Programme

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage for what reasons no funding tenders for the Philoxenia European tourism programme will be issued in January 1997; and if she will make a statement. [6990]

Mr. Sproat: The Council of Ministers has not yet discussed the Commission's Philoxenia proposal. Like several other Member states, we have reservations about whether it represents good value for money. The Government want to see the tourism unit in the Commission ensuring that throughout the Commission the interests of tourism are taken into account when policy decisions are being considered. But we remain to be convinced that any extra funding is necessary to achieve this.

D'Oyly Carte Opera Company

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations she has received about the future of the D'Oyly Carte opera company; and if she will promote partnerships with the private sector as a means of securing its future. [7173]

Mr. Sproat: I have received a number of recent representations about the D'Oyly Carte opera company. Decisions about its future are a matter for the company itself, in the light of the available options. Private sector support is clearly an important part of such considerations for any organisation.

Channel 5

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what areas of Northern Ireland will not be able to receive Channel 5; and for what reasons. [7191]

Mr. Sproat: Viewers in several parts of the country will not be able to receive Channel 5 by means of traditional transmission across the airwaves because of a shortage of available frequencies. Maps prepared by the Independent Television Commission, indicating the predicted coverage of Channel 5 via terrestrial transmission across the UK, were placed in the Library of the House in October. Channel 5 Broadcasting Ltd., expects its coverage to exceed 70 per cent. of the UK population, and 64 per cent.

of the population of Northern Ireland using the transmitters at Black Mountain and Londonderry in Northern Ireland. It is open to Channel 5 Broadcasting Ltd. to extend its coverage by supplementing terrestrial transmission by cable and satellite delivery.

Publicity

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what promotional and public information campaigns her Department is (a) currently running and (b) planning to run during the next six months; and for each campaign (i) how much it will cost, (1) in total and (2) to her Department, (ii) what agencies or bodies are undertaking the work and (iii) what is its planned duration. [7418]

Mr. Sproat: Beyond its normal day-to-day activities, my Department has no plans for such campaigns. It is not, therefore, incurring any such costs or employing any outside agencies.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of her Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5961]

The responsibilities and functions of the Sports Council are soon to be transferred to the United Kingdom Sports Council and the English Sports Council which received royal charters of incorporation on 19 September 1996. The English Sports Council will take on the Sports Council's responsibility for the lottery sports fund.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibitions

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what assessment the Committee has made of the necessity for hon. Members successful in the ballot for an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to table a parliamentary question. [6993]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: At its meeting on 17 November the Administration Committee considered, and endorsed, a proposal from the Serjeant at Arms that the existing requirement for hon. Members successful in the ballot for an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to table a parliamentary question be ended.

The Committee has therefore instructed the Serjeant at Arms to amend the relevant paragraphs of the existing regulations as follows:

> "After the ballot has taken place the Serjeant at Arms will place a notice in the All Party Notices announcing the titles of the successful exhibition bookings and names of the sponsoring Members."

In addition, details of forthcoming exhibitions will continue to be available on the PDVN bulletin board service.

This revision does not affect the requirement for hon. Members to consult the appropriate Government Department in order to obtain written advice on applications, which will continue to be submitted to the Committee.

This new arrangement will come into force in time for the ballot for the spring period, due to be held on 9 December.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Employment Contracts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) full-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed-term contracts, (d) part-time jobs which are on (i) renewable and (ii) unrenewable fixed—term contracts, (e) temporary jobs and (f) jobs classified as casual there have been in (1) his Department and (2) executive agencies of his Department for each year since 1992. [5416]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The tables set out avilable information for the Home Office and the executive agencies. The information for the agencies has been provided by the chief executives of the United Kingdom Passport Agency and the Fire Service College, and the Directors General of the Forensic Science Service and the Prison Service. Information under (c), (d), (e) and (f) for the years prior to 1996 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The breakdown of data under (c) and (d) is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fire Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the cost of accidents within the fire service in the last available year; and if he will make a statement; [6818]

(2) what measures he is assessing to reduce the cost of accidents in the fire service; and if he will make a statement. [6817]

Mr. Sackville: Information on the cost of accidents within the fire service is not collected centrally, although details on firefighter deaths and serious injuries are published in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales. Safeguarding the health and safety of firefighters is a key priority for the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council and its committees. Guidance has recently been issued on the application of risk assessment in the fire service, and consideration is being given to ways of improving accident reporting arrangements.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what occupational health schemes are in place in the fire service; and if he will make a statement. [6816]

Mr. Sackville: Guidance was issued by the Home Office in 1991 to chief fire officers in England and Wales commending the use of occupational health schemes. Subsequently in its report "In the Line of Fire" in 1995 the Audit Commission endorsed such schemes, which could help reduce the numbers of ill-health retirements in the fire service. Almost all fire authorities now have such schemes, but the details of the arrangements are a matter for the individual authority.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet North Staffordshire Racial Equality Council to discuss the future of section 11 funding; and if he will make a statement. [6989]

Mr. Kirkhope: The point which I understand has been of particular interest to North Staffordshire Racial Equality Council was answered by my announcement on 13 November, Official Report, column 242, that the current level of section 11 funding will be maintained until August 1998. Grant recipients have been informed, and we have also written to both Staffordshire and Stoke-on-Trent councils about the implications of local government reorganisation.

Police (Corruption)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) the Metropolitan police force, (b) the south-east regional crime squad and (c) the National Criminal Intelligence Service, for each of the last 10 years (i) how many officers were investigated for corruption, (ii) for how long officers under investigation were suspended, broken down by three-month intervals, (iii) the outcome of the investigation and (iv) how many officers investigated for corruption resigned their position (1) while suspended and (2) within a year of investigations being completed or discontinued. [6689]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Information on the number of officers investigated for corruption is not available for the period requested as records were not kept by type of allegation.

Table 1 sets out, from 1990 onwards, the numbers of Metropolitan police officers who were suspended for corruption, and the breakdown of the length of the suspension. Table 1 also gives details of the outcome of the investigations, including the numbers of those under investigation who were required to resign or who resigned from the service before their case was heard by a disciplinary board.

The information requested at iv. (2) is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The National Criminal Intelligence Service was formed on 1 April 1992 and the south-east regional crime squad was formed on 1 April 1993. Police officers are seconded to these organisations from the Metropolitan police service and from provincial forces. The responsibility for the conduct of any criminal or disciplinary investigation and, if appropriate, for the suspension of seconded officers rests with an officer's home force. Figures for NCIS and SERCS are included, therefore, within the Metropolitan police service figures. I understand that there have been no other corruption investigations or suspensions relating to officers seconded to these organisations from other forces.

Table 1: Metropolitan police officers suspended for corruption 1990 to 1996

[1]These figures are made up of two officers from the Regional Crime Squad and one from NCIS. The NCIS officer was reinstated and of the Regional Crime Squad officers one resigned, the other was dismissed.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many investigations into allegations of corruption involving officers (a) of the Metropolitan police, (b) serving with the the National Criminal Intelligence Service and (c) serving with the south-east regional crime squad have been (i) started and (ii) concluded in each of the past 10 years and in the current year. [6691]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Tables 1(i) and 1(ii) set out the numbers of investigations into allegations of corrupt practice against Metropolitan police officers arising from complaints from members of the public or arising from internal sources or internal investigations into corrupt practice, and the outcome of the investigations.

The National Criminal Intelligence Service was formed 1 April 1992 and the south-east regional crime squad was set up on 1 April 1993. Police officers are seconded to these organisations from the Metropolitan police service and from provincial forces. The responsibility for the conduct of any criminal or disciplinary investigation and, if appropriate, the suspension of seconded officers, rests with an officer's home force. Figures for NCIS and SERCS are included, therefore within the Metropolitan police service figures. I understand that there have been no other corruption investigations or allegations relating to officers seconded to these organisations from other forces.

Table 1(i) and 1(ii) give figures from 1987 and 1994 onwards. Figures before these years are not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A recorded case may include more than one allegation. In general terms, because of the nature of the investigations, an investigated case is unlikely to be completed in the year in which it is recorded.

Table 1(i): Complaints from the public of corrupt practice against Metropolitan police officers between 1987 and 1996

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1st half 1996

These figures start at 1987 as this was when the system was computerised previous to this the accuracy of figures cannot be guaranteed.

Previous to 1994 computer records of internal investigations were not held, so reliable figures cannot be collected without reference to the original files.

Police (Suspensions)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers serving with (a) the Metropolitan police force, (b) the south-east regional crime squad and (c) National Criminal Intelligence Service are currently suspended (1) on full pay and (2) without pay; and how many of those suspended have been suspended for (i) less than one month, (ii) between one and three months, (iii) between three and six months, (iv) between six and nine months, (v) between nine and 12 months, (vi) between 12 months and two years and (vii) more than two years. [6690]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Police officers who may have committed a disciplinary or criminal offence may be suspended by a chief officer. Officers are suspended on full pay except where they may be detained in pursuance of a sentence of a court or are in custody between conviction of a court and sentence, or in circumstances where they may have absented themselves from duty and their whereabouts are unknown to the chief officer.

Table 1 gives details of the numbers of Metropolitan police officers, including those attached to the south-east regional crime squad, who are currently suspended, and the length of the suspension. All are on full pay. No officers attached to the National Criminal Intelligence Service are currently suspended.

Table 1: Metropolitan police officers currently suspended as of 27 November 1996

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers with (a) the Metropolitan police, (b) the National Criminal Intelligence Service and (c) the south-east regional crime squad have been suspended from duty in each of the past 10 years and in the current year, broken down by rank in each case. [6692]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 December 1996]: This information is available only from 1990 onwards. Table 1 gives details for the Metropolitan police service and for the south-east regional crime squad. One Metropolitan police officer, who was attached to the National Criminal Intelligence Service at the relevant time, is included within the Metropolitan police service figures.

Bradford Commission

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he received in advance of the publication of the Bradford commission report on 20 November of the claim made at paragraph 4.5.2 in respect of the view expressed by the then parliamentary Under-Secretary of State in the House on 21 June 1995 about the scope of the Police Complaints Authority inquiry; what response he made; what response he has made since the publication of the Bradford commission report; and if he will make a statement. [6715]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 December 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend was not aware of the contents of the Bradford commission report before it was published. The report suggested that the statement made by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Office was wrong and misleading in suggesting that the inquiry by the Police Complaints Authority would investigate all the circumstances surrounding the complaints against the police. This claim is unfounded; the West Yorkshire force referred the complaints which had been received and the circumstances surrounding them to the PCA for supervision of the investigation.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5958]

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters dated 27 August, 25 September and 24 October, with regard to Mr. Kahaiko Matureh-Wali of 3 Martlot close, Manchester, from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton. [7288]

Mr. Howard: I replied to the right hon. Member today.

Anglo-American Legal Assistance Treaty

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the treaty between the United Kingdom and the United States of America on mutual legal assistance in criminal matters comes into force; and if he will make a statement. [7510]

Mr. Howard: I and the United States ambassador, His Excellency Admiral William J. Crowe Jnr., signed the protocols of exchange when we exchanged instruments of ratification of the treaty at a ceremony in London yesterday. The United States Attorney General, Ms Janet Reno, also attended. The treaty, which entered into force upon the exchange of instruments of ratification, continues in force the drugs agreement entered into by the United Kingdom with the United States of America in 1988 and provides a binding framework within which the United Kingdom and the United States of America may provide a full range of mutual legal assistance covering all crimes. The United States of America is one of the United Kingdom's largest and most important mutual legal assistance partners and in the past three years the United Kingdom and the United States of America have jointly handled about 400 requests for mutual legal assistance. The treaty is a major step forward in the continuing process of collaboration between our two countries in the fight against serious and international crime.

Asylum and Immigration Act

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 will be brought into effect; and if he will make a statement. [7511]

Miss Widdecombe: The Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 (Commencement No. 3 and Transitional Provisions) Order 1996 brings section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 into force on 27 January 1997. The order makes it clear that section 8 will not apply to any employment which began before that date.

A further order will be laid shortly which will specify the documents which will provide an employer with a defence; state how copies or other records of such documents are to be made; and specify other conditions which may be satisfied if an employee is to be employed without the commission of an offence.

Written guidance about section 8 will be sent direct to over 1.1 million employers during December. The first copies are being sent out today; all employers should expect to have received a copy before Christmas. The guidance will also be available on the Internet world wide web at address http://www.open.gov.uk/home_off/ind.htm. Copies of the guidance have been placed in the library.

The guidance has been drawn up with the assistance of the Commission for Racial Equality, individual employers and employers' and trade organisations.

A telephone helpline will be available from 6 January on 0181 649 7878. Further information about the helpline is provided in the written guidance.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Security Facilities Executive

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for the future of the security facilities executive following the privatisation of its custody services business early next year. [5772]

Mr. Freeman: I intend to set up a new agency from 1 April 1997 comprising the Government car service and the interdespatch service which provide secure transport and mail services. The chief executive will be recruited by open competition. These businesses will be financially separate but operate within one agency.

From 1 April the special services group, which provides advice and technical security services to Government Departments and other public sector customers, will then be the sole remaining business of the security facilities executive. From this date I intend that it will continue as an agency of the Office of Public Service. The precise scope of its work is to be determined in the light of a study of its services and the related interests of other Government Departments.

The staff of SAFE and the customers of the three businesses will be consulted very carefully about the implementation of these changes.

European Parliament

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much was spent in pounds sterling by the European Parliament (a) in 1995 and (b) so far in 1996 in subsidising the visits of parties organised by MEPs to the European Parliament; how many visits were subsidised during these periods; how much was spent in organising visits to the European Parliament by British MEPs; and how many such visits were organised. [6356]

Mr. David Davis: I have been asked to reply.

The 1995 budget provision for subsidising group visits to the European Parliament was 7.88 million ecu or £6.1 million. Provision in the 1996 budget is 9.2 million ecu or £7.1 million. Final outturn figures for 1995 and details of expenditure so far in 1996 are not yet available. A total of 3,057 group visits were subsidised in 1995, of which 341 were by British groups; 1,134 of these visits were sponsored by individual MEPs, of which 341 were sponsored by British MEPs. Detailed figures for group visits so far in 1996 are not readily available, but the EP secretariat advises that by the end of November 1996 170 group visits had been sponsored by British MEPs.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5966]

Mr. Willetts: The responsibilities of the Cabinet Office and the Office of Public Service relate to the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The responsibilities of the Central Office of Information relate to England; work undertaken in the other countries is as an agent of the Scottish, Welsh or Northern Ireland Office.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6023]

Mr. Willetts [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The work of the Cabinet Office is directed to the servicing of Cabinet and its committees. The Cabinet Office also provides staff and support services for the Prime Minister's office at 10 Downing street, for the offices of the Government Whips, and for the Parliamentary Counsel Office, the function of which is to draft Government Bills and advise Departments on parliamentary procedure. Within the Cabinet Office, the Office of Public Service has responsibility for improving the efficiency of government and public services and the competitiveness of business.

Apart from management decisions concerned with the staffing of his Department, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is not called upon to take administrative decisions directly affecting individual United Kingdom citizens or non-citizens.

WALES

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant-maintained (a) secondary and (b) primary schools there are in Wales; and how many outstanding applications for grant-maintained status there are. [6644]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: There are 11 secondary and five primary grant-maintained schools in Wales as well as—one grant-maintained school of mixed age range—3 to 18—years. There are no applications for grant-maintained status from LEA maintained schools currently under consideration.

Proposals have been received for the establishment of a new grant-maintained secondary school in Usk. Governors of Westfield lower special school, Newport, where a successful ballot was announced on 1 August, have until 1 December to publish proposals.

Wrexham Central Station

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with the North West Regional Railways concerning the company's plan to relocate Wrexham central station. [6598]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In accordance with the provisions of the Railways Act 1993 North West Regional Railways and Railtrack, as operator and owner of the station, jointly applied to the Office of Passenger and Rail Franchising for permission to close a short length of track and to relocate the existing station.

Consultation on such matters is the responsibility of the Rail Regulator and a public hearing was held on 27 November 1996. The Rail Regulator is to issue his formal decision by 26 February 1997.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The policy on mixed-sex wards is as set out in the patients charter.

Cattle Slaughter

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that cattle in Alyn and Deeside are allocated a regular slot in an abattoir under the BSE slaughter programme; and if he will make a statement. [6596]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Intervention Board executive agency is ensuring that an appropriate proportion of cattle from Wales is slaughtered each week at both Welsh and English abattoirs.

West Wales Task Force Initiative

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the projects funded by the Welsh Office under the West Wales task force initiative since 1992, indicating the cost of each such project. [7285]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Papers

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Prime Minister how many Cabinet papers were submitted to the full Cabinet in each year from 1991 to 1995. [7042]

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 3 December. [5825]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 3 December. [5824]

Cabinet Ministers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many former Cabinet Ministers receive (a) police protection and (b) at what cost to public funds. [7309]

The Prime Minister: For security reasons it is established policy that information of this kind is not published.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Grammar Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the grammar schools in England, grouping them by parliamentary constituency and (b) the percentage of secondary school age children attending grammar schools in each parliamentary constituency. [5898]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 2 December 1996]: The following table lists for each parliamentary constituency in England the maintained secondary schools which classified themselves as selective in the 1996 performance tables. Language Issues

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many people have been trained in the clear writing of national vocational qualification standards since the publication of the Government's action plan on the recommendations of the Beaumont report; and of these how many are (a) members of her Department's staff and (b) outside consultants; [6939]

(2) pursuant to the action plan on the recommendations of the Beaumont report, how many standards development consultants have been trained in the use of plain English and Welsh; and what was the cost of this training. [6946]

Mr. Paice: To date, a total of 130 people have attended workshops on language issues as part of a programme in standards development. Of these, 27 were departmental staff, 56 from the accrediting bodies and 47 industry body representatives including 12 consultants. Costs for this financial year and next are anticipated to be £116,321.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many national vocational qualifications awarded by the end of December 1995 were gained through programmes and assessment in (a) schools or further education and sixth form colleges and (b) workplaces. [6943]

Mr. Paice: According to the National Council for Vocational Qualifications 1,045,687 national vocational qualifications—NVQs—had been awarded by the end of December 1995.

Comprehensive information on the number of NVQs gained through programmes and assessment by type of centre is not available. However the national information system for vocational qualifications collects data on all vocational qualifications from four of the largest awarding bodies and so can provide information on about half of NVQs. A total of 29 per cent. of awards of these NVQs in the academic year 1994–95 were assessed in schools or further education, sixth form and tertiary colleges. Workplaces cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individuals had been awarded national vocational qualifications by the end of December 1995. [6940]

Mr. Paice: According to the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and the Scottish Vocational Eduation Council there have been 1,045,687 national vocational qualifications and 24,533 Scottish vocational qualifications awarded by the end of December 1995.

Estimates form the autumn 1995—September to November 1995—labour force survey show that 1.2 million people in the UK reported that they held an NVQ or SVQ.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the action plan on the implementation of the recommendations of the Beaumont report, what progress has been made with the development of a strategy for more complete and comparable statistics on vocational qualifications; and what changes to previous data collection and presentation procedures have been established. [6948]

Mr. Paice: The officials have worked with representatives from the National Council for Vocational Qualifications, the Scottish Vocational Education council, the Further Education Funding Council, the National Advisory Council for Education and Training Targets, the Welsh and Scottish Offices and the Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency to draw up an information strategy for collecting and disseminating more comprehensive data about vocational qualifications. Consultation papers about this strategy were issued in November to a range of data providers and data users. Changes to data collection procedures will be agreed in consultation with data providers. The Department has continued to publish data on vocational qualifications in DfEE statistical bulletins.

Educational Institutions (Bills)

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Educationa and Employment if she will list for each grant-maintained school further education college and university in 1995–96 the percentage of bills paid within 30 days or in accordance with agreed terms. [6720]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available.

Literacy and Numeracy

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will ensure mandatory baseline assessment provides effective screening for children at risk of literacy and numeracy difficulties. [6764]

Mrs. Gillan: The School Curriculum and Assessment Authority—SCAA—has been consulting widely about baseline assessment. One of its proposals was that any statutory requirements should provide equal entitlement for all children to be assessed on entry to school. SCAA's consultation document proposed, among other things, that any assessment should be meaningful to children with special educational needs. SCAA is due to offer advice on baseline assessment to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the new year.

The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs, to which all schools already must have regard, emphasises that all children with special educational needs should be identified and assessed as early as possible.

Teachers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what priority she gives to, and what measures she is taking in respect of (a) the encouragement of men to enter or stay in the teaching profession and (b) the facilitation of women to obtain suitable headships. [6910]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for promoting teaching as a profession rests with the Teacher Training agency—TTA. One of the main aims of the agency is to ensure that the profession attracts high quality candidates in sufficient numbers to meet the needs of schools. The agency's recently published strategy paper on teacher recruitment sets out its plans for promoting teaching generally, and the ways in which more men might be attracted into the profession.

The Government place a high priority on training for headship. The national professional qualification for headship, available nationally from September 1997, will equip all those aspiring to headship with the necessary skills to become effective headteachers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the current age profile of teachers. [7180]

Mrs. Gillan: The following table shows the numbers of teachers in full-time service in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools as at 31 March 1995.

Database of teachers' records

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of (a) males and (b) females in the teaching profession (i) in 1985 and (ii) at the latest available date. [6911]

Mr. Forth: The information is as follows:

Full-time and part-time teacher numbers in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary[1] and special education sector in England and Wales

	Men	Women
March 1985	172,100	285,300

Nursery Education

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children under five years of age in Norfolk were in private nursery schools and playgroups (a) before the introduction of nursery vouchers and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available. [6738]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on children under five years of age in private nursery schools and play groups is not collected centrally.

In the summer term 1996 some 3,660 four-year-olds attended private and voluntary providers in Norfolk under phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme. Further details are given in chapter 6 of the Department's report on phase 1, published on 13 November. Copies are in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average salary of a chief executive of a training and enterprise council. [6803]

Mr. Paice: In line with other private companies, the salaries of chief executives is a matter for individual TECs to decide.

Student Loans

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the expected total income from the sale of student loan debt; and what is the estimated effect on public sector borrowing requirement in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [7133]

Mr. Forth: The total income is dependent on the outcome of the forthcoming competition and negotiations. The Government's plans assume that some £1,500 million of debt will be sold in each of the three years. The effect on the public sector borrowing requirement and the exact quantum sold will depend on the final structure of the sale.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of total outstanding student loan debt will be sold to the private sector in 1997–98 and in each subsequent year. [7132]

Mr. Forth: The total to be sold will depend on the forthcoming competition. Current plans assume that about half the debt then outstanding will be sold by the end of 1997–98 and about 80 per cent. of total accrued debt by 1999–2000.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimates she has made of the (a) gross outlay on student loans and (b) repayment of student loans in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [7130]

Mr. Forth: The estimated England and Wales, rounded, figures are:

£ millions

Financial year	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Gross loan outlay	895.8	973.2	994.5
Repayments of principal	93.8	144.1	211.2

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision will be made in her plans for the sale of student loan debt for (a) default and (b) deferment rates on repayments. [7131]

Mr. Forth: The financial impact of projected default and deferment rates will be subject to negotiation with prospective bidders.

Teachers (New Entrants)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new entrants to teaching posts there were in (a) primary or (b) secondary schools in each of the last five years. [7179]

Mr. Forth: The numbers of new entrants to teaching, in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England and Wales, are given in the following table.

New entrants[2] to	March 1991	March 1992	March 1993	March 1994	March 1995[1]
Nursery, primary sector	8,266	8,481	8,684	9,444	10,100
Secondary sector[3]	6,472	6,810	7,800	9,196	9,900

[1] Provisional data.
[2] Those in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary sector at 31 March of the year shown who first entered teaching in the preceding year.
[3] Excludes sixth form colleges.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the annual efficiency gain required of colleges of further education in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [7134]

Mr. Paice: The efficiency gains implied in the spending plans for the further education sector announced in last week's Budget are estimated at 5.6 per cent. in 1997–98, 4.9 per cent. in 1998–99, and 5.3 per cent. in 1999–2000.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the projected total grant to the Further Education Funding Council in 1996–97, 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, using the current GDP deflator; and what is the percentage change from year to year in each case. [7135]

Mr. Paice: The information requested on the projected total grant to the FEFC for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000 is set out in the following table:

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Total grant (cash terms)	3,070.5	3,072.2	3,053.3	3,010.9

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the number of teachers likely to apply for early retirement in 1996–97 and 1997–98 in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools. [7181]

Mrs. Gillan: None. The Department collects data on the number of premature retirements granted by teachers' employers, but not on the number of applications made by teachers to their employers. Premature retirement is at the discretion of the employer.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school teachers have accepted early retirement in each of the last five years. [7178]

Mrs. Gillan: The following table shows the numbers of teachers who have been granted premature and ill health retirement in England and Wales from 1991–92 to 1995–96.

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96

The secondary sector does not include sixth form colleges throughout.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the impact on (a) class sizes and (b) school budgets of the proposed changes to the early retirement provisions for teachers; and if she will make a statement. [7104]

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the estimated salary costs to school budgets from the withdrawal of the premature retirement scheme for teachers. [7261]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend does not expect these proposals to alter the overall size of the teaching force, and she does not expect them to affect class sizes. The local government finance settlement allows for the effect of the proposals, so that the effect on school budgets will be broadly neutral.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received in respect of the proposed changes to early retirement provisions for teachers. [7100]

Mrs. Gillan: In the last few weeks my right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations in respect of the proposed changes to early retirement provisions for teachers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will reject the proposal to transfer funding of early retirement pensions contributions for teachers to schools; and if she will make a statement. [7102]

Mrs. Gillan: The proposals have been issued for consultation, with a closing date for responses of 17 January 1997. My right hon. Friend will take final decisions after that date.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements govern the contributions to the cost of the early retirement of teachers by teachers' employers; and if she will make a statement. [7101]

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the future of the teachers' premature retirement scheme. [7263]

Mrs. Gillan: Under current arrangements, the cost of early retirement for teachers is met by employers' contributions to the teachers' superannuation scheme, so that all employers pay for premature retirement at the same rate, irrespective of the rate at which they grant premature retirement. Under the proposed arrangements, employers will pay only for those premature retirements that they have granted, and will do so as and when they grant them.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she last met teacher representatives to discuss the premature retirement scheme; and if she will make a statement. [7262]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend has not met teacher representatives to discuss the premature retirement arrangements for teachers.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the non-financial consequences for older teachers of the withdrawal of the premature retirement scheme; and if she will make a statement. [7256]

Mrs. Gillan: None. The premature retirement scheme for teachers is not being withdrawn.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations she has received from teaching unions regarding early retirement amongst teachers. [6960]

Mrs. Gillan: In the last few weeks my right hon. Friend has received a number of written representations from teachers' unions regarding early retirement amongst teachers.

Graduates

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of graduates who qualified in 1995 were employed in the United Kingdom six months after graduation; and what percentage of graduates in each member state of the European Union each year since 1990 found employment in their country of origin within six months of graduation. [7305]

Mr. Forth: The available information for graduates in the United Kingdom is given in the following table. Corresponding information for other European Union member states is not available centrally.

[2] Great Britain only.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of her Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5962]

Mr. Robin Squire: The responsibilities and the approximate proportions of the budget are set out in the following table showing the position for the different groupings of countries. Data for the proportion of time are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The data shown under the Education heading reflect the Department's spending on schools, higher and further education and other education services; Employment Service data include provision for helping unemployed people into work; and the training and employment data include youth and adult advice, guidance and training including expenditure on training and enterprise councils, the careers service and employment policy.

Teachers Training Agency

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the Teacher Training Agency's target for recruitment for each year since 1992, expressing the figures as a percentage change on the previous year; [6957]

(2) how much of the Teacher Training Agency's target for recruitment was achieved for each year since 1992, and if he will express the figures to indicate the percentage change on the previous year. [6958]

Mr. Forth: Targets for entry to courses of initial teacher training are set by the Secretary of State. Targets, and percentage changes from the previous year's targets, are given in table 1. Actual recruitment by institutions is set out on the same basis in table 2.

Table 1: Targets for entry to ITT Courses

1995–96	13,603	–1	15,226	No change

1996–97 recruitment figures will be available in late December.

Senior Teachers (Training)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to improve the training provided for senior teachers in order to carry out their duties effectively. [6959]

Mr. Forth: In September, my right. hon Friend asked the Teacher Training Agency to develop a professional framework of national standards for teachers, underpinned by qualifications and training. The framework will ensure that teachers' in-service training is more clearly focused. The TTA will, this week, be issuing a consultation paper on standards and a qualification for subject leaders. A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library. The TTA will consult on standards for expert classroom teachers in the new year.

Playground Accidents

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children were injured last year as a result of playground accidents; what measures she has put in place to prevent playground accidents; and if she will make a statement. [7216]

Mrs. Gillan: Between 1 April 1995 and 31 March 1996, an estimated 724 accidents in Great Britain, involving children aged 16 and under, in playgrounds and indoor play areas at educational establishments were reported to the Health and Safety Executive. The majority of these accidents were fractures; none were fatal.

Schools must take appropriate steps to ensure that playground areas are safe. The Department has recently published "Area Guidelines for Schools" which contains general safety guidance. More detailed safety information on school playgrounds will be available shortly.

SCOTLAND

Sheep Dips

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that farmers and landowners in Scotland are informed of the danger to the environment involved in the use of sheep dips based on synthetic pyrethroids. [6255]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given yesterday by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary of State, the Minister for Food, Official Report, column 526.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the significant differences between his proposed conditions for the construction of electricity transmission lines in Ayrshire and the recommendations of the reporter at the public inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [6675]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The reporter considered that the undergrounding of any part of the proposed line was unnecessary. My right hon. Friend has taken a different view and is minded to decide that undergrounding is appropriate in four sections of the proposed route. These sections are Water of Girvan, Nick of the Balloch, Duisk Valley, and Water of Tig/Dunnach Burn.

A1 Dualling

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his policy to dual the A1 between Haddington and the Borders. [7172]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 27 November 1996, Official Report, column 281.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy for dualling the remaining single carriageway sections of the A1 trunk road. [6997]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 December 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 27 November 1996, Official Report, column 281.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total incidence of (a) E. coli 0157 and (b) campylobacter in (i) humans and (ii) animals in (1) Scotland and (2) each region of Scotland in each year since 1990, and from 1 January to date. [7205]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 2 December 1996]: The information requested is available only at health board level for humans and for animals only a Scottish figure is available, the details of which are set out in the tables.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will conduct an urgent investigation into the recent outbreak of E. coli in Scotland. [7194]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 2 December 1996]: My right hon. Friend has decided to appoint an expert group under the chairmanship of Professor Hugh Pennington, Professor of Microbiology at Aberdeen royal hospital NHS trust, to examine the circumstances which led to the outbreak in the central belt of Scotland and to advise on the implications for food safety and the general lessons to be learned.

East Ayrshire Community Hospital

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make a decision about the funding of East Ayrshire community hospital; what has caused the delay in making the decision; and if he will make a statement. [7311]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A decision about the funding of the East Ayrshire community hospital will be made shortly. The detailed financial information provided by the Ayrshire and Arran community health trust is still being considered and an announcement will be made once a decision has been reached.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Consumption

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), of 6 November, Official Report, column 583, how much beef was held in interventions on 27 March; how much of this has been incinerated; and how much of that which (a) has and (b) has not been incinerated originated in Scotland. [6592]

Mr. Baldry: A total of 5,341 tonnes of UK beef was held in intervention on 27 March 1996. None of these stocks have been incinerated.

Three hundred and sixty-six tonnes of the above total was offered into intervention by offerers located in Scotland although this does not necessarily mean that the beef itself originated from Scottish herds.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what measures he has taken to ensure that vehicles carrying live animal exports do not exceed the journey plans; and if he will make a statement; [6610]

(2) how many United Kingdom vehicles carrying live animal exports have been delayed by the French lorry drivers' blockades; [6609]

(3) what advice he has issued to live animal exporters in respect of the French lorry drivers' blockades. [6611]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The Government have advised commercial vehicle operators not to travel through France. The Ministry is maintaining a close watch on the situation and we have not received any reports of British livestock trapped on French roads.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5965]

Mr. Boswell: Approximately two thirds of the Department's budget relates to England, including research and development, flood defence, agri-environment schemes, hill livestock compensatory allowances and departmental administration. The remainder of MAFF's budget relates to Great Britain—notably animal health work—or to the whole of the United Kingdom, principally support to the rendering and slaughterhouse industries. Information on the allocation of time is not readily available.

Research and Development

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a breakdown of the savings on research and development expenditure by his Department announced in the Budget. [7154]

Mr. Boswell: Funding for BSE-related research is being increased and this will involve some redirection from other areas of the Department's research, MAFF funds a wide and varied research programme. Small savings will be made from lower priority work across the whole programme, but it is not possible to provide a detailed programme.

Fishing Regulations

Mr. Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the decision was made, and by what process, to make it legal under fishing regulations for individuals and companies to buy and sell fishing quotas and licences; and if he will make a statement. [6771]

Mr. Baldry: Fishing vessel licences are granted at the discretion of Fisheries Ministers under the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967, as amended. No new licences are issued so that the owner of a new vessel entering the UK fleet may fish only by obtaining a licence from a previously licensed vessel.

For vessels over 10m quotas are allocated to fishermen's groups, primarily producer organisations, in proportion to the catches made over the previous three years by the vessels in membership of each group. Those catches, which are attached to licences for quota management purposes, are usually referred to as track records. No charges are currently made by the Fisheries Departments for either the issue of licences or the allocation of quota.

Subject to the agreement of the Fisheries Departments, Fishermen's groups may exchange quota with each other and vessel owners are permitted to transfer entitlements to apply for licences to other people. Any commercial considerations that occur are matters for the fishermen or vessel owners involved.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Salting

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the roads in each of the council areas of Coleraine, Limavady and Magherafelt which will no longer be salted after the most recent review; how many miles of road are affected by the decision: how many of them are school bus routes; and what are the savings expected in each of the council areas. [5853]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Road Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. William Ross, dated 28 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your question about roads which will no longer be salted following the recent review of the winter maintenance programme and in his absence I am replying on his behalf.

The information requested is as follows:

Council area	Roads no longer salted	Length km	Estimated annual savings £
Coleraine	B66 Craigmore Road[1]/Greenhill Road/Ardreagh Road	8.5	6,375
Limavady	C520 Glenhead Road[1]	4.3	11,625
	C523 Magheramore Road[1]	5.0
	B44 Altinure Road	2.2
	B202 Point Road	4.0
Magherafelt	B162 Doon Road[1] (part of)	3.0	2,250

[1]Denotes school bus route.

You may also be interested to know that, as a result of the review, a number of roads in these 3 council areas have been added to the salting schedule at an estimated annual cost of £7,800.

I do hope you find this information helpful.

Sheep Dips

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that farmers and landowners in Northern Ireland are informed of the danger to the environment involved in the use of sheep dips based on synthetic pyrethroids. [6253]

Mr. Ancram: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Official Report, column 526.

Prisoner Transfers (Irish Republic)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information his Department is collating about early releases of prisoners transferred to the Irish Republic; if it will be made public; and if he will make a statement on such releases to date. [6380]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Shannon to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 2 December 1996:

In the absence of the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Prison Service, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your parliamentary question on the collation of information about early release of prisoners transferred to the Republic of Ireland.

The Republic of Ireland ratified the Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons in November 1995 making it possible for the first time to repatriate prisoners between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. Since that date no prisoners, for whom the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has responsibility, have been repatriated to the Republic of Ireland.

Bangor to Belfast Road

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the number of accidents in terms of deaths and injuries and (b) the vehicle flow on the Bangor to Belfast road in the last three years for which figures are available. [6382]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 28 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your question about accident levels and traffic volumes on the Bangor to Belfast road and in his absence I am replying on his behalf.

The RUC, which is responsible for the collation of data on traffic accidents, has advised me that in the 4-year period 1992–1995 the information requested for this road between the Springhill flyover and Tillysburn junction is as follows:–

Number of injury accident: 213

Persons killed: 6

Persons seriously injured: 76

Persons slightly injured: 304

Information for the last 3 years is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

With regard to traffic flow, Roads Service has 3 automatic traffic counters on the Bangor/Belfast road between Springhill and Tillysburn. The relevant information for the last 3 years is as follows:—

Location	1993	1994	1995
Holywood By-pass	31,930	33,090	34,960
Bangor/Belfast at Cultra	34,620	34,590	34,410
Bangor/Belfast at Springhill	21,240	21,960	21,020

The above figures are 24 hour average annual daily traffic flows (2 ways). I do hope you find this information helpful.

Irish Gaelic

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ask the census question on knowledge of the Irish language in Gaelic, requesting the written response in the same language, if affirmative; and if he will make a statement. [6379]

Sir John Wheeler: A census test will be held in 1997 in Northern Ireland as in other areas of the United Kingdom. The Northern Ireland census test form will include a question on whether individuals can read, speak or write in the Irish language, or have no knowledge of the language. The question will be worded in English. The results of the test will be evaluated and in due course the Government will bring forward proposals to be asked in the 2001 census for parliamentary approval.

Magheramorne Landfill Inquiry

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the result of the Magheramorne landfill public inquiry will be made known. [6370]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 29 November 1996:

Mr Moss has asked me to reply to your recent question about the result of the public inquiry into the proposed landfill site at Magheramorne, Co Antrim

The Planning Service hopes to issue a decision on the planning application for a landfill site at Magheramorne early in 1997.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the Larne sewerage scheme modelling study is deemed suitable for tidal flow predications in the Magheramorne landfill inquiry; and what account will be taken of the use of a different discharge point in the Magheramorne scheme. [6369]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Environment and Heritage Service under its chief executive, Mr. Robert C. Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert C. Martin to Mr. J. Dowd, dated 29 November 1996:

As Chief Executive of Environment and Heritage Service, I am responsible for all operational aspects of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland's environmental policies.

I am therefore responding to the Parliamentary Question which you put down in the House of Commons on 26 November 1996 "to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, for what reasons the Larne Sewage Scheme modelling study is deemed suitable for tidal flow predictions in the Magheramorne landfill inquiry; and what account will be taken of the use of a different discharge point in the Magheramorne scheme".

The modelling studies for both the Larne Sewage scheme and the predicted release of leachate from the proposed landfill site at Magheramorne Quarry, Larne used the same modelling package. Part of the package included a hydrodynamic model of Larne Lough, which was constructed to predict tidal flow characteristics within the Lough.

The Magheramorne study considered what the effects would be from each of two possible identified discharge points into the Lough. Validation data for the hydrodynamic model was included as part of the study.

Evidence on the adequacy of the model, including the need for a third party audit, was presented at the Public Inquiry into the planning application for the proposed landfill site. The inquiry sat for approximately seven weeks in May and June of this year and heard evidence on a wide range of issues. The report of the Planning Appeals Commissioner has not, as yet, been published.

This Service is currently in receipt of an application for a discharge consent under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and will be guided by the findings of the report on the modelling issue. In order not to be seen to prejudge the Commissioner's report we will decide, after consideration of the report, what is any additional information may be required from the application in order to assist in the determination of the application.

I trust you will find this reply helpful.

Community Work Programme

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many places on the ACE action for community scheme in Northern Ireland have been lost as a consequence of spending reductions in the year 1995–96; [6372]

(2) what has been the reduction in the number of new training places made available on the pilot community work programme. [6373]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Ms Majorie Mowlam, dated 27 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the Action for Community Employment (ACE) and Community Work Programme.

As a result of the reduction in funding for ACE in 1996–97, the number of places was reduced by 2,200, ie from 9,400 in 1995–96 to 7,200.

The pilot Community Work Programme offers 1,000 new places for the long term unemployed. There has been no reduction in this allocation.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Job Creation

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate (a) the number of new jobs created in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years and (b) the proportion of those jobs which are part-time. [6374]

Mr. Ancram: The net creation of jobs over the past five years can be demonstrated by the change in the number of employees in employment. This is shown in the table.

Northern Ireland employees in employment[1] at September of each year

	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Change over year
1991	402,660	139,830	542,490
1992	[2]—	[2]—	545,060	+ 2,570
1993	395,810	154,680	550,490	+ 5,430
1994	398,710	161,670	560,370	+ 9,880
1995	402,690	169,670	572,370	+ 11,990
1996[3]	396,900	176,190	573,090	+ 720

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest 10 and may not sum due to rounding.

[2] Full-time/part-time split not available.

[3] The most recent figures available for 1996 are at June. September estimates will be published on 18 December 1996.

Does not include self-employed.

This net change is comprised of both employment growth and decline in different categories. As a result, it would be inappropriate to apportion this specifically to either full or part-time employment.

Unemployment

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people among those currently unemployed in Northern Ireland are (a) 16 to 17, (b) 18 to 25, (c) 26 to 35, (d) 36 to 45, (e) 46 to 55 and (f) 56 to 65 years old. [6375]

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available for the age groups requested. However, figures are available for similar age groups as follows:

Age	Unemployment at 10 October
16–17	118
18–24	20,407
25–34	23,647
35–44	17,010
45–54	14,013
55+	6,369

EU Peace and Reconciliation Funds

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the European Union special support programme for peace and reconciliation has been distributed to date by (a) each of the district partnership boards, (b) Co-operation North and (c) other funding bodies. [6376]

Sir John Wheeler: The current figures—including EU and matching Government funding—and (a) no funding has been distributed by district partnerships, (b) Co-operation North has distributed just over £0.5 million and (c) about £56 million has been distributed by the other funding bodies involved in the programme.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people registered for jobseeker's allowance on 7 October at each social security office covering the constituency of South Down; and of these how many were considered eligible; [6395]

(2) how many people were in receipt of unemployment benefit on 4 October at each social security agency covering the constituency of South Down; of these how many applied for jobseeker's allowance on 7 October and of these how may were considered eligible for this allowance. [6396]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie and I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Mr. Alex Wylie to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 29 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions on Jobseeker's Allowance and Unemployment Benefit.

The number of people registered for Jobseeker's Allowance on 7 October 1996 at each Social Security Office covering the constituency of South down and the number considered eligible is set out on the attached table (APPENDIX A).

I have also attached a table (APPENDIX B) illustrating the number of people claiming Unemployment Benefit on 4 October 1996 in the same Social Security Offices. These customers were not required to terminate their claim to register for Jobseeker's Allowance on 7 October 1996. However, from 7 October 1996, all Unemployment Benefit claims will be dealt with in accordance with Jobseeker's Allowance rules and regulations.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the report prepared by the Northern Ireland Audit Commission into the incidence of coronary heart disease in Northern Ireland. [6401]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland Office report "Coronary Heart Disease in Northern Ireland" was published on 14 November 1996 and will be examined by the Public Accounts Committee on 4 December 1996. The Department of Health and Social Services is fully aware of the contents of the report, and is giving them careful consideration. The established protocol is that Departments refrain from commenting on the issues raised in such reports until after the PAC has reached its conclusions.

Cavity Wall Discount Incentive

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce a cavity wall discount incentive for home owners in Northern Ireland on the same terms as the scheme in Great Britain. [6550]

Mr. Moss: The Energy Saving Trust, an independent body, grant aided by Government, is helping to stimulate the cavity wall insulation market throughout the United Kingdom. A grant from the trust is enabling the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to offer a discount of £100 for homeowners who install cavity wall insulation. The operation of this scheme is a matter for the Housing Executive.

Security Forces

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy with respect to security forces effecting hot pursuit beyond the United Kingdom's land frontiers. [7200]

Sir John Wheeler: Arrangements have existed for some time which permit British aircraft to fly a short distance into the Republic of Ireland, subject to strict conditions, to help in dealing with specific incidents. It would not be appropriate for me to discuss the fine details of such arrangements, as this may blunt their effectiveness in dealing with terrorism.

School Pupil Costs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 258, what was the recurrent cost per pupil in primary and secondary education (i) in 1992–93 and (ii) at the latest available date, excluding staffing costs, in constant price terms. [6842]

Mr. Ancram: Expenditure per pupil figures excluding staffing costs in constant prices—1992–93 base—are estimated as follows:

	Primary £	Secondary £
(i) 1992–93	223	406
(ii) 1994–95	231	469

Grammar Schools

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 662, if he will list the grammar schools with preparatory departments indicating the number of children in those preparatory departments, the number for whom there is a financial contribution from public funds, the amount of that financial contribution to the school, the public contribution per capita and the fees paid by parents to each school per child. [6841]

Mr. Ancram: The most recent year for which figures are available is the 1995–96 financial year and the number of pupils receiving assistance from public funds and details of the grant allocations to individual schools are given in the following table. Information on fees paid by parents and the number of parents paying the full economic fee is not readily available.

HEALTH

Casualty Units (London)

10. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many casualty units he estimates will be open in London in 1997–98. [5619]

Mr. Malone: It is for health authorities and national health service trusts to ensure that there is sufficient provision of accident and emergency services.

Health Services (London)

15. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning health services in London following the Budget statement. [5624]

Mr. Malone: None.

Private Finance Initiative

16. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's latest PFI approved schemes. [5625]

Mr. Horam: Contracts have been signed for 42 schemes with a total capital value of £303 million, the latest being one for Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare NHS trust to provide a new district general hospital.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

17. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage change in the annual incidence of MRSA in hospitals from 1990–91 to 1995–96. [5626]

Mr. Horam: Data on the occurrence of MRSA compiled by the public health laboratory service from isolates submitted by hospitals in England and Wales for specialist typing show a total of 2,286 confirmed reports from hospital incidents in 1992 and 17,063 in 1995. An incident is three or more patients with the same strain in a month from the same hospital. These figures represent the number of patients affected by MRSA incidents, not the number infected—about 80 per cent. of people who acquire MRSA carry it and do not suffer infection. Prior to 1992, a different surveillance system operated and previous data are not directly comparable.

Dental Provision

18. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the British Dental Association concerning dental provision within the national health service. [5627]

Mr. Malone: We are in regular contact with the British Dental Association on a wide range of current issues.

GP Fundholding

19. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation has been made of the results of the general practitioner fundholding initiative. [5628]

Mr. Malone: The National Audit Office, the Audit Commission and many other independent agencies have called for the benefits of fundholding to be extended as widely as possible: 52 per cent. of the population already have a fundholding general practitioner, and more GPs are planning to join the scheme next year.

Prescription Charges

20. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the real terms increase in the prescription charge since 1979. [5629]

Mr. Malone: The annual average increase in the prescription charge in real terms from 1979–80 to 1996–97 was 14.8 per cent., based on the charge at 1 April each year. During the same period, prescribed items attracting a prescription charge, excluding items covered by pre-payment certificates, reduced from 36 per cent. to 11 per cent.

In 1996–97, the income from charges is expected to raise about £310 million additional income for the national health service.

Cossham Hospital, Kingswood

21. Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the future of Cossham hospital, Kingswood; and if he will make a statement. [5630]

Mr. Horam: Ministers have received nine letters about the future of Cossham hospital. The outcomes of the recent consultation exercise were discussed at a meeting of the Avon health authority on 28 November.

Redbridge Healthcare Trust

22. Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of the Redbridge Healthcare trust. [5631]

Mr. Horam: Redbridge Healthcare National Health Service trust is providing a comprehensive range of good quality services to more patients than ever before.

NHS Administration

23. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the NHS budget was spent on administration in (a) 1989 and (b) at the latest available date. [5632]

Mr. Malone: The information is provided in the table. Changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of family health service authorities, district health authorities and regional health authorities, and the transfer of funds to national health service trusts, mean that the figures are not comparable.

Administration costs as a percentage of NHS total gross spend

	Administration Expenditure £ million	NHS total revenue expenditure £ million	Percentage of NHS total gross spend on administration
1989–90	731	18,276	4.0
1995–96	1,303	32,232	4.0

1. Administration expenditure is made up of the administration costs of district health authorities, regional health authorities, family health service authorities, special health authorities, prescription pricing authority, dental practice board.

2. The figures for 1995–96 are provisional.

24. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to improve the efficiency of the administration of the NHS. [5633]

Mr. Malone: There is a drive to improve efficiency in the national health service through reductions in health authority costs and trust management costs, abolishing the regional health authorities and streamlining the Department of Health. Actions taken by the end of 1997 will release some £300 million from NHS administration costs into direct patient care.

Ambulance Services

25. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of ambulance services which have become NHS trusts. [5634]

Mr. Horam: All 37 ambulance services in England are now national health service trusts.

NHS Expenditure

26. Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of NHS expenditure in 1989–90 and in 1996–97; and what percentage increase this is in real terms. [5635]

Mr. Horam: The information is in the table.

National health service total gross expenditure

Year	£ million	Real terms growth percentage
1989–90	21,132	—
1996–97 (estimated outturn)	34,798	25.1

NHS Trusts (Financial Targets)

27. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts are meeting the financial targets set by his Department; and if he will make a statement on the impact of financial targets on medical care. [5636]

Mr. Horam: Trusts currently have three financial targets set by the Department. From the latest estimates available, the number of trusts forecasting to achieve the targets are:

(a) 335 trusts will break even on income and expenditure.

(b) 283 trusts will make a return on capital of 6 per cent.

(c) 416 trusts will meet their external financing limit.

Financial targets in the national health service are making a real contribution to the efficient running of the service. The targets ensure that financial planning is performed effectively to deliver continual improvements in medical care throughout the year.

Health Authority Funding

28. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he makes of the health needs of different areas in determining funding for health authorities. [5637]

Mr. Horam: The national weighted capitation formula uses forecast resident population figures which are then weighted for relative levels of health need. First, an adjustment is made to take account of the age structure of the population. Secondly, an adjustment is made to take account of residual need over and above that already accounted for by age. This takes the form of two separate needs indices, one for general and acute services, and another for psychiatric services which reflect a number of socio-economic factors associated with the demand for health care.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities with a revenue funding surplus at the end of the financial year 1995–96 and those his Department estimates will record a surplus at the end of the current financial year. [4235]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The health authorities and family health services authorities which underspent on their cash limits in 1995–96 are listed.

It is too early to make a meaningful estimate for 1996–97.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the distribution of additional money to area health authorities indicating the allocations to each area health authority. [6266]

North East Thames Health Authority

29. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about the level of funding for the North East Thames regional health authority. [5638]

Mr. Horam: My hon. Friend the Minister for Health recently met Members of Parliament from south Essex to discuss the level of funding of the South Essex health authority. Since the abolition of regional health authorities on 31 March 1996, national health service funding has been allocated directly to health authorities. In 1997–98, South Essex health authority is to receive £302 million, which is a real terms increase of 2.88 per cent.—the third highest in the country.

South Essex Health Authority

30. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the relative funding of the South Essex health authority. [5639]

Mr. Horam: In 1997–98, South Essex health authority will receive an integrated allocation of £301,832,000—a cash increase of £14,203,000 (+ 4.94 per cent.). This represents real terms growth of £8,285,000 (+ 2.88 per cent.). This is the third highest increase in the country.

In 1997–98, South Essex HA will receive a general allocation of £288,089,000—the second highest increase in the country.

Details of 1997–98 health authority integrated allocations showing the cash increase and real terms growth, and 1997–98 health authority general allocations showing cash increase and real terms growth and health authority distances from target, have been placed in the Library.

South Essex HA has moved significantly closer to its weighted capitation target from 7.88 per cent. under target in 1996–97 to 4.41 per cent. under target in 1997–98 as a result of this year's allocation process. We will continue to move South Essex closer to target.

NHS Supplies List

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the NHS supplies list is not available to the public; and if he will make a statement. [3774]

Mr. Horam: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the catalogues which list the goods available to national health service bodies through the NHS supplies authority's wholesaling service. Copies of the catalogues are deposited in the Library, where they are freely available. Copies are also distributed to all NHS trusts and special health authorities that make use of the authority's wholesaling service.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to the recent executive letter issued to trusts and health authorities, what plans he has for reducing the transaction costs relating to secondary and tertiary extra-contractual referrals. [5377]

Mr. Horam: The executive letters issued in July (EL(96)56 and November (EL(96)94) announced significant deregulation measures to reduce transaction costs while retaining clinicians' freedom of referral. Health authorities and general practitioners will implement the changes by harmonising their referral preferences, minimising the need for extra-contractual referrals. Officials will be disseminating examples of good practice to aid implementation.

Patient Treatments

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in NHS hospitals in (a) 1989 and (b) 1996. [6546]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of patient cases treated each year is published annually in "NHS Hospital Activity Statistics, England", copies of which are available in the Library. The number of finished consultants episodes rose from 8.639 million in 1989–90 to 11.224 million in 1995–96.

Bills (Payments)

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each national health service trust and hospital in 1995–96 the percentage of bills paid within 30 days or in accordance with agreed terms. [6721]

Mr. Horam: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the original research projects his Department has (i) wholly and (ii) part funded into the long-term health effects of ingesting (a) fluoride, (b) lead, (c) chloride, (d) phosphate and (e) sulphate in areas of fluoridated water supplies. [6795]

Mr. Malone: Initial studies of water fluoridation were undertaken on behalf of Government Departments, including the Department of Health and Social Security and its predecessor, the Ministry of Health. DHSS also part funded studies of fluoride and cancer and fluoride and mutagenicity. The Department has not funded any studies of the long-term health effects of lead, chloride, phosphate and sulphate in relation to fluoridation of water supplies.

Treatment Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the annual cost to the national health service of treating (i) obesity, (ii) diabetes mellitus, (iii) coronary heart disease, (iv) appendicitis, (v) haemorrhoids, (vi) varicose veins, (vii) deep vein thrombosis, (viii) intestinal cancer, (ix) diverticular disease of the colon, (x) gallstones, (xi) dental caries, (xii) hypertension, (xiii) angina, and (xiv) constipation for each year since 1979; if he will list these figures as a percentage of the national health service's total gross expenditure for each year; and if he will make a statement. [6814]

Mr. Horam: Information is not available in the form requested. However, a recent publication from the national health service executive entitled "Burdens of Disease: A Discussion Document", copies of which are available in the Library, provides expenditure information for individual diseases and groups of diseases, based on data for 1992–93.

Eye Tests

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eye tests were carried out on people over 65 years of age in each year since 1989. [7099]

Mr. Malone: The estimated total number of national health service and private sight tests received by people over 65 is:

1993–94: 3.033 million

1994–95: 3.425 million

1995–96: 3.481 million.

Information on private sight tests undertaken between 1989 and 1992 is not available.

Edgware General Hospital

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he plans to respond to the proposals sent to him recently by the hon. Member for Hendon, North (Sir J. Gorst) and the hon. Member for Harrow, East for the future maintenance of emergency treatment facilities at Edgware general hospital. [5609]

Sir J. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his further proposals for the development of emergency facilities at Edgware general hospital after the closure of the existing accident and emergency department. [6416]

Mr. Dorrell: Barnet health authority decided on 25 September to submit an application for central funding for a demonstrator project at Edgware general hospital with the following key elements:

The casualty service at Edgware, originally planned as a nurse-led service open 13 hours a day, should instead open 24 hours and be staffed by doctors;

A low-risk maternity unit should be provided to allow mothers to give birth close to home;

A GP-type admissions unit should provide in-patient beds to meet the immediate needs of elderly people living locally.

These proposals are currently being developed, and my right hon. Friend has indicated to Barnet health authority his willingness to support this project at Edgware to ensure that these ideas are properly evaluated in practice.

Single-Sex Wards

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further steps he is taking to establish more single-sex wards; and if he will make a statement. [5823]

Mr. Horam: It is for trusts and health authorities to manage their local priorities.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England, Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of the above categories. [5963]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health is responsible for supporting Ministers in achieving their overall aims, which are to improve the health and well-being of the people of England, and to secure provision of high-quality health and social care for those who need it. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's statutory responsibilities include:

Promoting and protecting the health of the nation.

Providing a national health service in England.

Social care, including oversight of personal social services provided by local authorities in England.

The Department works closely with the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices on health and social services issues. This is normally incorporated into its day-to-day activities. The Department does not have the time logging facilities and procedures in place which would allow the proportion of the time and budget which exclusively relates to the categories requested to be identified.

Further details of the responsibilities of the Department of Health may be found in its statement of responsibilities and accountabilities, copies of which are available in the Library.

Liver Disease

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of liver disease among children were diagnosed in each year since 1992, indicating the figure as the year on year percentage change. [6961]

Mr. Horam: The information up to 1994–95 (the latest available) is as follows:

Total number of finished consultant episodes[1] in NHS hospitals in England for children aged under 15 at the end of the episode of care—primary diagnosis of liver disease

Year	Number of cases	Percentage change on previous year
1991–92	383	n/a
1992–93	454	18.5
1993–94	401	−11.7
1994–95	458	14.2

Source:
Hospital episode statistics, Department of Health—copies available in the Library.
Note:
[1] A consultant episode is the period that a patient spends under the continuous care of a specific consultant in a specific health care provider.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department has given to liver disease research in each year since 1992 indicating the year-on-year percentage change in total funding in real terms; and what plans he has for the future funding of liver disease research. [6963]

Mr. Horam: Funding related to liver disease from the Department's policy research programme from 1992 onwards appears in the table.

1992–93	60
1993–94	99
1994–95	127
1995–96	134

1997–98	[1]686

Hepatitis B

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement the World Health Organisation's recommendation to introduce a universal vaccination policy to protect children from hepatitis B. [6962]

Mr. Horam: In view of the very low incidence of hepatitis B in the United Kingdom, our current policy is to target immunisation at groups at increased risk of infection. However, the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation, which provides the Government with independent expert advice on these matters, keeps our immunisation policies under review, taking account of all relevant factors including any recommendations from the World Health Organisation.

ENVIRONMENT

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to develop the home energy efficiency scheme. [6897]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I intend to build on the strengths of the home energy efficiency scheme, on which we have spent about £350 million over almost six years, by making changes based on the proposals we published earlier this year. The scheme is popular and well-regarded, and has improved living conditions for 2 million of the most vulnerable households.

I have taken careful account of the comments made on our proposals. The revised scheme will offer greater benefits and more choice. The present range of basic insulation measures will be extended, allowing the scheme to offer the measures best suited to individual homes. Energy rating techniques will be used to monitor the scheme's overall performance.

Under the changes, the range of energy efficiency measures on offer will be widened. Householders will be able to choose from a list of approved measures, which will include draught-proofing of doors and windows, loft insulation, cavity wall insulation and better heating system controls. Energy-efficient lamps, hot water tank insulation and personal advice about how to increase comfort and save energy in the home will also be available.

Eligibility will remain the same. There will be two rates of grant—a standard rate for householders who qualify because they receive an income-related benefit or a disability allowance; and a 25 per cent. rate for people who qualify because they are aged 60 or more. The amount of grant will depend on the measures chosen, but, as now, the standard rate grant should cover the full cost of the work in all homes except those which are large or unusual.

There will be no changes to the way householders apply for grants. Eaga Ltd., based in Newcastle upon Tyne, will continue to manage the scheme, and it will appoint installers to work throughout the country to high standards of workmanship and customer care. Householders will still be able to install some energy efficiency measures themselves, with grant available towards the cost of the necessary materials.

The changes to the scheme will happen from April 1997. The existing format will continue until then, and transitional arrangements will be made for people aged over 60 who are still eligible for a grant under the scheme as it operated before April 1996.

Recycling

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the percentage of (a) glass and (b) steel recycled in the United Kingdom in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995; and if he will list such data as are available on recycling rates for (1) the United Kingdom and (2) other European Union member states. [6995]

Mr. Clappison: No definitive information is held centrally on the amount of glass and steel recycled in the United Kingdom. The latest estimates that my Department has on the amount of glass cullet and ferrous scrap that is recycled as a percentage of consumption in the United Kingdom during 1994 and 1995 are as follows:

Percentage

	1994	1995[1]
Glass cullet	28	26
Ferrous scrap	42	40

[1] Provisional

No information is available on the amount of steel or ferrous scrap recycled by other European Union member states. The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development includes in its bi-annual "Compendium of Environmental Data" information on the amount of glass a number of EU member states have recycled as a percentage of apparent consumption. Available information is shown in the table, but care must be taken in drawing comparisons of recycling performance between different countries as the data are not collected on a consistently defined bases.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year from 1978–79 in (i) cash and (ii) real terms (a) the amount raised by (1) tax on domestic ratepayers and (2) tax on non-domestic ratepayers and (b) the amount of rate support grant or its equivalent. [7092]

Sir Paul Beresford: The requested information is available from 1981–82. Amounts raised from domestic householders are gross of rebate or benefit—as detailed in note 1—and the grants supporting these expenditures are excluded from the grants columns. The grants columns include all grants supporting revenue expenditure, as detailed in note 3.

The figures for 1997–98 are based on the provisional settlement, assuming that council tax is set at the council tax for standard spending. Local authorities' budgeted expenditure and council taxes will not be known until they have set their budgets.

[2] For the years 1981–82 to 1989–90, this represents non-domestic rate yields net of rate relief. For the years 1990–91 to 1997–98 this represents the distributable amount from the non-domestic rates pool.

[3] For the years 1981–82 to 1989–90 Government Grants comprise Aggregate Exchequer Grant. For 1990–91 to 1997–98 Government Grants included are Revenue Support Grant, Specific and Special Grants in Aggregate External Finance, Community Charge Grant (1991–92), Teachers Pay Award Additional Grant (1992–93), SSA Reduction Grant (1994–95 to 1997–98), Police Grant (1995–96 to 1997–98).

[4] Provisional outturn.

[5] Budget estimates.

[6] Provisional settlement.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of total Government expenditure in England was met by domestic ratepayers in 1978–79; what proportion of such expenditure was met by domestic council tax payers in (a) 1995–96 and (b) the current financial year; and what proportion will be so met in the next financial year. [7116]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The requested information is available from 1981–82. Figures for the proportion provided by domestic householders are gross of rebate or benefit. The figure for 1997–98 is based on the provisional settlement, assuming that council tax is set at the council tax for standard spending. Local authorities' budgeted expenditure and actual council taxes will not be known until they have set their budgets.

	Domestic rates/council tax as a proportion of local government expenditure[1] (Per cent.)
1981–82	21.6
1995–96 (provisional outturn)	21.4
1996–97 (budget estimates)	22.1
1997–98 (provisional Settlement)	21.3

[1] Gross of domestic rate rebates for the year 1981–82. Gross of council tax benefit grant and council tax transitional relief scheme grant for 1995–96 and 1996–97. Gross of council tax benefit grant for 1997–98.

Leasehold Reform

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures are collated in respect of tenants receiving their leasehold enfranchisement rights under the Leasehold Reform Housing and Urban Development Act 1993. [7016]

Mr. Clappison: The Government do not collate figures on how many leaseholders have exercised the right to buy the freehold of their homes, as the transactions are private. The number of cases coming before leasehold valuation tribunals, where the parties cannot agree terms, is monitored. Fifty-eight such cases, coming within the terms of the 1993 Act provisions for collective enfranchisement, have been determined.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to collaborate with his French counterpart in conducting a health, safety and environmental assessment of the channel tunnel with particular reference to assessing the suitability of the transport of flammable toxic materials. [7020]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have no plans to carry out an assessment related to flammable toxic goods. Substances subject to two or more danger labels are not authorised for carriage through the fixed link. Goods classed as flammable and toxic under international agreements are subject to two danger labels, and are therefore not permitted.

Environmental Reform

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the proposals on environmental reform in the European Union contained in the note prepared by the Irish presidency for the intergovernmental conference (CONF./3958/96), dated 22 October. [7036]

Mr. Clappison: The proposals on the environment put forward by the Irish presidency are being carefully considered by the Government, along with those put forward by other member states.

Regulation Breaches

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many article 169 letters, under the Maastricht treaty, Her Majesty's Government have received in respect of alleged breaches of European Union environment regulations since 1992; and if he will make a statement on the current outstanding article 169 environmental cases. [7034]

Mr. Clappison: Since 1992 my Department has received letters commencing proceedings under article 169 of the treaty of Rome in 29 cases in respect of environmental legislation. Twenty-one cases are currently outstanding.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives have been proposed by the hon. Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) since he was appointed Minister with special responsibilities for Bristol; and if he will make a statement. [7228]

Sir Paul Beresford: The primary role of sponsor Ministers is to promote regeneration and to act as a channel for communicating the local concerns of the city to Government Departments, rather than to promote new initiatives.

Wind Farms

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the planning policy guidelines on the development of wind farms; and if he will make a statement. [7217]

Sir Paul Beresford: The relevant guidance is contained in planning policy guidance note 22, "Renewable Energy". The Government have no immediate plans to revise that document.

Plant and Machinery Advisory Committee

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has selected the chairman and membership of the Advisory Committee on the Rating of Plant and Machinery in Prescribed Industries; and if he will make a statement. [7798]

Mr. Curry: My Department received 37 applications for positions on the Advisory Committee on the Rating of Plant and Machinery in Prescribed Industries. Derek Wood, CBE QC, was selected to serve as chairman of the committee. The following were selected as members:

Paul Sanderson Esq.
Duncan Chisholm Esq.
Nigel Woods Esq.
John Stephenson Esq.
John Charman Esq.
Michael Barclay Esq.
Chris Biddle Esq.
Peter Jones Esq.
Ian Tanner Esq.
Elaine Smart
Peter Brown Esq.

I expect the committee to report to me by the end of September 1997.

Local Government Reorganisation (Southport)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to direct the Local Government Commission to review local government arrangements in Southport. [7930]

Mr. Curry: I have today issued a direction to the Local Government Commission for England for it to carry out a review of local government arrangements in the metropolitan borough of Sefton. The commission should submit its final report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by 25 November 1997. The direction requires the commission to have regard to policy and procedure guidance on the conduct of the review. My Department is also issuing, jointly with the commission, a statement setting out local government arrangements which we consider that the commission could recommend under the law, given the geographical scope of the direction.

We have previously said that, following the end of the structure reviews in England, we would need to be convinced that there was a strong and widespread demand before directing more reviews. It is clear that there is that pressure in Sefton, especially in Southport.

I am depositing copies of the direction, the guidance and the joint statement in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Pensions)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost to police authorities in England and Wales in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98 of (i) police officers' pensions and (ii) contributions to the local government pension scheme. [7240]

Mr. Maclean: The net cost of police officers' pensions is an estimated £793 million in 1996–97 and £830 million in 1997–98. No estimate has been made specifically of the cost to police authorities of contributions to the local government superannuation scheme.

TREASURY

EU Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union. [7892]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 2 December.

The Council considered a report on progress towards economic and monetary union which is to be presented to the European Council meeting taking place in Dublin later this month. I made a statement to the House on the ECOFIN discussions on this report yesterday.

The Council discussed new guarantee arrangements for the European investment bank's lending and new regional lending mandates. Agreement was not reached, so the issue will be discussed again at ECOFIN on 12 December.

Commissioner Gradin presented the report of the high-level group which has been looking at sound and efficient management 2000—the Commission's programme of financial management reforms. The Council agreed conclusions on the report.

The Council took note of a joint ECOFIN and Social Affairs Council report on employment and agreed to present it to the European Council in Dublin.

The Council discussed extending the period during which Denmark, Finland and Sweden can restrict personal imports of alcoholic drinks and tobacco. Agreement was reached on an extension, subject to parliamentary scrutiny reserves put down by myself and France.

The Council agreed to maintain the existing minimum rate of VAT of 15 per cent. throughout the Community, again subject to a UK parliamentary scrutiny reserve.

The Netherlands outlined the priorities for the ECOFIN Council during the first six months of 1997, when it will hold the presidency of the European Union.

European Monetary Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of recent reports by the (a) European Commission and (b) European Monetary Institute in respect of the United Kingdom's eligibility for entry into the European monetary union. [3902]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Recent Commission and EMI reports show a majority of member states, including the UK, not currently meeting the convergence criteria. This makes it clear that European single currency will not start in 1997. Beyond that, the reports have no implications for eligibility of the UK or any other member states for entry into EMU. Interpretation of all the criteria will be for Heads of Government to decide, when the decision is made on which countries have met the necessary conditions to adopt the single currency on the basis of performance against the criteria in calendar year 1997. This decision will be made in 1998 at the earliest.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the United Kingdom currently meets the Maastricht convergence criteria; and if he will forecast United Kingdom performance in respect of each of these criteria for 1 January 1998. [4749]

Mr. Clarke: Updated economic forecasts were published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" of 26 November 1996.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of fulfilment of the Maastricht convergence criteria. [4750]

Mr. Clarke: The Maastricht convergence criteria represent sound economics, whether or not we join EMU. They are fully consistent with the Government's economic policy of achieving permanently low inflation and sound public finance.

Building Society Mergers

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to include, in the final version of the Building Societies Bill, requirements for additional consultation with the staff of building societies prior to boards making a decision to recommend merger to their members. [4962]

Mrs. Angela Knight: None. Building society staff already have the same employment protection as that available to employees in other business sectors.

Self-assessment Computer System

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 October to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks), Official Report, columns 912–13, if he will list the security arrangements (a) in place and (b) planned to ensure that taxpayers' records held at Oracle facilities abroad (i) in manual form and (ii) on computer record are not misused. [5284]

Mr. Jack: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo), on 1 November 1996, Official Report, column 280.

Gold and Foreign Currency Reserves

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the latest available figures for the percentage of gross domestic product held in gold and foreign currency reserves by each European Union member state. [5678]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The details requested are set out in the table.

	Total reserves[1] $ billion	Total reserves/ GDP (per cent.)	Reserves/EU reserves (per cent.)	GDP/EU GDP (per cent.)

Taxation (Self-assessment)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 311, in what ways tax inquiry centres and switchboards have been enhanced. [5704]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 November 1996]: Work undertaken, and planned before April 1997, to enhance the service to taxpayers includes:

Increased access to the computer system for staff in tax inquiry centres, to enable them to view the tax records of taxpayers who request assistance.

The out-reach initiative to take tax to the community, which has been making full use of the mobile advice centres touring the more inaccessible areas, ensuring that taxpayers have access to Revenue staff.

A programme of refurbishment of tax inquiry centres which has improved the general ambience of these centres, and provided increased privacy with the introduction of interview rooms.

The installation of 43 new switchboards

The addition of 190 operator consoles to existing switchboards.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter of 16 July from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth addressed to the Department of Trade and Industry and transferred to Her Majesty's Treasury on or about 25 October. [6620]

Mr. Jack: I replied on 29 November.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to reply to the letters dated 21 August, 25 September and 24 October from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Ms E. White, St. Gabriel's hall, 1 Oxford place, Manchester. [7286]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 3 December 1996]: A reply was sent on 2 December.

Single European Currency

Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to how many hon. Members he sent his circular letter on the documents relating to the proposed European single currency stability pact. [6663]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 28 November 1996]: I wrote to every hon. Member. I understand there were some logistical problems which, unfortunately, resulted in not all hon. Members receiving their copy before my statement to the House on 25 November. However, I did ensure that a large number of copies were deposited in the Whips Office before my statement, and on the day of my statement I arranged for further copies to be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Women

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many women are currently employed by his Department at each civil service grade. [6442]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The information as at 1 November 1996 for HM Treasury is given in the table. On 1 April 1996, all Treasury staff transferred from their old civil service grades, into new, broad pay ranges.

	Female
Pay range A	46
Pay range B	175
Pay range C	75
Pay range D	91
Pay range E	59
Pay range F	13
Pay range G	4
Pay range H	0
Total	463

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 24, what were the proposed annual savings for the three information technology projects in the bands above and including £1 million to £2 million, undertaken since 1992; and what have been the realised annual savings. [6695]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 28 November 1996]: Two of the projects relate to the Treasury's OASIS office system, and the third to the pensions administration system.

The roll-out of the OASIS office system was completed in July, and replaced an earlier system that was coming to the end of its useful life. The replacement system was designed to improve efficiency and effectiveness by providing all Treasury staff with access to modern office automation facilities. Significant savings are expected as the system beds down and is exploited.

The new principal civil service pension scheme administration system which is being developed will be implemented by user departments over the next two years and will reduce administration costs. How much each user department will save will vary and depend on circumstances prevailing at the time. The new software will make market testing of the pensions administration function particularly effective. Software enhancement and maintenance costs will also be reduced. The project is now the responsibility of the Office of Public Service.

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 24, what are the proposed annual savings for the seven information technology projects planned for 1997–98. [6694]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The proposed projects fall broadly into two categories: those to support new requirements, and those to upgrade and maintain existing systems. In the case of new requirements, the aim is to support them in the most cost-effective way. It is very difficult to attribute quantified savings to upgrading and maintaining existing systems. This is because it is essential to upgrade systems on a regular basis in order to continue to receive support from suppliers, and also because the improvements form part of on-going work to make better use of existing IT systems.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6453]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The Treasury offers staff subsidised places on the Westminster holiday playscheme, makes contributions to additional child care costs when staff are required to work additional or irregular hours, offers paid or unpaid special leave to enable staff to care for sick children or close relatives and since 1994 has been a corporate member of Parents at Work, which offers information and advice on child care issues. Subject to a satisfactory performance and attendance record, staff are also allowed to take a career break of up to five years in addition to the statutory maternity entitlement, and are kept in touch with the organisation during this time.

In 1992 the Treasury also held two places in a Westminster-based nursery for emergency use when staff's normal child care arrangements broke down. However, very low usage meant this arrangement was eventually discontinued.

Records of the number of staff who are allowed special leave for domestic purposes are not held centrally. Records are unable to show career breaks taken for domestic reasons as a separate category from other career breaks. The number of staff claiming contributions to additional child care costs and those using the Westminster holiday playscheme in the years requested are set out in the table.

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Staff claiming additional childcare contributions	9	2	7	5	[1]9
Staff using the Westminster Holiday Playscheme	18	19	25	21	[1]19

Unemployment (Dagenham)

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claimants have been recorded as experiencing at least one spell of unemployment in the Employment Service outlets in the constituency of Dagenham since 1992. [6659]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Judith Church, dated 4 December 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people have experienced at least one spell of claimant unemployment in all Employment Service Jobcentres within the Dagenham Parliamentary Constituency Area since 1992.

Since January 1992, there have been approximately 18,700 claimants who have experienced at least one spell of claimant unemployment at the Dagenham Employment Service Jobcentre. This reflects in large part the dynamics of the labour market and in particular the significant numbers flowing on and off the claimant count each month. Since January 1992 there have been about 29,000 new claims for unemployment-related benefits which have been made at Dagenham Employment Service Jobcentre and about the same number of claims which have been terminated.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what payments have been made to EDS Ltd. for consultancy in relation to (a) the introduction of self-assessment and (b) information technology services for the Inland Revenue since 1993. [5607]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 29 November 1996]: The Inland Revenue has paid £5.9 million to EDS for the services of consultants and contractors, of which about £4 million relates to self-assessment and the balance for other IT projects and services.

VAT (Continence Products)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many NHS trusts and what proportion of them were accustomed prior to 1 August 1996 to reclaim VAT on continence products under the arrangements then in force. [7035]

Mr. Oppenheim: This information is not held centrally and an answer could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

North Sea Oil (Tax Losses)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the loss to the Exchequer arising from forgone taxation on North sea oil as a consequence of oil spillages from United Kingdom oil operations. [7015]

Mr. Jack: The annual tax loss from oil spillage in the last five years on North sea operations has been estimated at under £10,000 per year.

Budget Papers

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to investigate the theft of the papers relating to the Budget, and the manner in which, and through whom, they were passed to the Daily Mirror. [7091]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The investigation of these matters is in the hands of the Metropolitan police.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the criteria for including projects in table 5.5 of the 1996 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" were the same as were applied to table 6.5 of the 1995 FSBR. [7221]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Yes. Both the tables referred to comprise the best available estimates of capital spending by the private sector resulting from projects under the private finance initiative.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice his Department has given to the Department of Health on the need for central collection of information about the long-term revenue commitments arising from private finance initiative projects entered into by NHS trusts. [7225]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The Treasury has undertaken to provide aggregate estimates of the long-term revenue commitments arising from private finance initiative projects. It has asked all Departments to provide information sufficient to honour that commitment.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down the information given in table 5.6 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" by Government Department. [7219]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Table 5.6 gives the aggregate forward spending commitments arising from signed contracts under the private finance initiative. While the initiative is still relatively new, and the number of signed contracts in each Department is still relatively small, it would not be appropriate to give figures for each individual Department, because this could reveal information about specific contracts which is commercially sensitive—either because a Department currently has only one such contract, or because a Department's figures are dominated by the cost of a single large contract. Giving detailed information, now, about payments expected under individual contracts could make it more difficult for the public sector to secure future contracts on terms that offer best value for money.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide the information given in table 5.6 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for all agreed PFI projects. [7223]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 December 1996]: No. Currently making public estimates of the likely forward commitments arising from PFI deals which have been agreed, but for which contracts have not yet been signed, could undermine the public sector's negotiating position on individual contracts, and make it more difficult to secure future contracts on terms which offer value for money.

Written Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the cost of answering a written parliamentary question. [7252]

Mrs. Angela Knight: In April 1996 the average cost of answering a written parliamentary question and an oral parliamentary question were £107 and £249, respectively.

Public Contracts

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many public contracts have been awarded to British suppliers by purchasers in other EU member states between 1993 and 1996; [6414]

(2) what was the value in sterling of the total public contracts awarded to British companies from purchasers in other EU member states between 1993 and 1996. [6415]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 3 December 1996]: Such information is not available. The Green Paper on public procurement in the European Union, adopted by the European Commission on 27 November, suggest that, for EU member states as a whole, the share of cross-border business for public contracts for goods and services has risen from about 5 per cent. in 1987 to 10 per cent. in 1995.

Beer Taxes

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenues from beer taxes not collected because of illegal importation and sale in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [7253]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 3 December 1996]: Customs' current estimate of revenue evaded by smuggling of beer is £110 million per year. This figure does not include any amount for commercial fraud. The actual loss to the Exchequer will be less than this figure because some smuggling represents additional consumption rather than substitution for similar goods bought in the UK. Customs has no official estimate of the extent of additional consumption of smuggled beer. There was no previous official estimate of revenue evaded by smuggling.

Employers Helpline

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost of the introduction of the new employers helpline servicing the Inland Revenue, the Contributions Agency and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [7258]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The employers helpline uses staff from the existing Contributions Agency helpline, the social security advice line to employers and Inland Revenue staff previously located in the employers unit. Staff costs are therefore within existing running costs. Cost of introducing the helpline result mainly from publicity costs which are likely to amount to £650,000 by the end of the campaign. Other setting-up costs of approximately £80,000 are mainly accounted for by expenditure on telephony and information technology.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the regional organisation of the new employers helpline servicing the Inland Revenue, the Contributions Agency and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. [7259]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The national employers helpline is located at two sites in East Kilbride and Glasgow, housing Inland Revenue and Contributions Agency staff and servicing the whole of the country. There are no staff located in other regions.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in respect of problems with the employers helpline set up by the Inland Revenue, the Contributions Agency and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [7260]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The employers helpline was made available nationally on 7 October 1996 following a successful pilot in Scotland. Evaluation of the pilot by an independent research company showed that 97 per cent. of all callers were satisfied or very satisfied with the service. An evaluation of the national helpline will begin in January. We have not received any representations in respect of problems with the helpline.

Donate-as-you-earn Scheme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to raise the annual sum of money an employed person may donate to charities by way of the donate-as-you-earn scheme; what has been the cost of the scheme to public funds since its inception; and if he will make a statement. [7312]

Mr. Jack: The payroll giving limit was raised by a third from £900 to £1,200 in April this year, a tenfold increase since the scheme began in 1987. The limit is kept under review but I have no plans to increase it again at present. The scheme has cost some £25 million up to 1995–96.

Inland Revenue Computers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions and in what locations mainframe systems of the Inland Revenue have crashed, preventing end-user logging, [1636]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The Inland Revenue's mainframe computer systems have on average operated at over 99 per cent. availability over the last 12 months.

Local Tax Offices

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which local tax offices are due for closure in the next 12 months. [3256]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: Local tax offices in Bexhill, Eastbourne, Bexleyheath, Dartford, Greenwich, Solihull, Gravesend and Workington are due to close in the next 12 months. However, it is planned to retain tax inquiry centres in Eastbourne and Gravesend.

PRIME MINISTER

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister who is responsible for Government scrutiny of laws initiated by (a) the European Commission and (b) the European Council of Ministers, which do not require United Kingdom parliamentary approval before their implementation. [5770]

The Prime Minister: All proposed Community legislation submitted by the European Commission to the Council of Ministers is subject to parliamentary scrutiny before its adoption. Where the Council, in such legislation, delegates powers to the European Commission to make detailed implementing legislation, within a prescribed committee procedure, it is the responsibility of the relevant Government Department to ensure that the implications of draft Commission implementing legislation are fully assessed and taken into account in the negotiations in committee.

Departmental Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6033]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 November 1996]: For these purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General yesterday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Tea Room

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee who designed the alterations to the counters and food display cabinets in the Tea Room; and what estimate he has made of the cost of putting it back to how it was. [7455]

Sir Colin Shepherd: Cecil Denny Highton was the architect, and Tricon plc was the food service consultant. Their proposals were approved by the Parliamentary Works Directorate's project sponsor, in consultation with the Director of Catering Services and the Catering Committee.

The reasons for the alterations are set out in the Committee's first report of Session 1993–94, which was debated by the House on 12 July 1994, and reflects the need to comply with current health and safety, fire and hygiene regulations.

TRANSPORT

Bridges

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects the Government's bridge survey to be finished; [6768]

(2) how many (a) bridges and (b) roads have been evaluated as unsafe to carry an 11.5 tonne axle weight. [6767]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Peter Fry, dated 4 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking when he expects the Government's bridge survey to be finished, and how many bridges and roads have been evaluated as unsafe to carry an 11.5 tonne axle weight.

The Highways Agency is making good progress with its programme of assessing the load carrying capacity of trunk road structures in England, ie those for which the Secretary of State is the highway authority. This programme is expected to be complete by March 1998.

Of those that have been assessed, there are three bridges supporting trunk roads which are unable safely to carry an 11.5 tonne axle weight at the present time. These are:

M1 Junction 2 Slip Road Viaduct in North London;

MA13 Movers Lane Flyover in East London; and

MA40 Golden Valley Flyover in Gloucestershire.

The first of these is currently closed to all traffic; the other two have weight restrictions in place. Improvements are planned at each location. A number of bridges carrying local roads is also unable to bear 11.5 tonne axle loading. It is for the local highway authority concerned to decide what action is appropriate in these cases.

A road may deteriorate more rapidly under heavier axle loading, but there is no risk to safety as in the case of a weak bridge. There is, therefore, no comparable programme in place for assessing the load-carrying capacity of roads.

Deregulation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the letter from the Minister for Railways, Roads and Local Transport of 26 November on the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, if the development of a national training scheme, with standards of assessment and a certification system, has been subject to scrutiny under the Government's deregulation policy; and with what result. [7250]

Mr. Watts: No. The introduction of the qualifications regime under the Act was preceded by consultation with utilities and highway authorities. We intend to review the arrangements once the system is fully operational—after 5 August 1997.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest annual figure for road traffic accidents involving children; what was the European Union average per kilometre of road; and if he will rank the European Union countries in respect of these figures. [6921]

Mr. Bowis: In 1995 there were 38,775 accidents in Great Britain which involved child casualties. The numbers of accidents involving children are not available for member countries.

Wheel Clamping

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 351, if he will list the total fees paid to contractors for the wheel clamping of vehicles evading excise duty. [7654]

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is commercial in confidence.

US-UK Air Service Agreements

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on progress in the renegotiation of the US-UK air service agreements (Bermuda II); [7123]

(2) when he expects the renegotiation of the US-UK air service agreements (Bermuda II) to be completed. [7121]

Mr. Bowis: The next round of negotiations with the US on air services will take place on 4 to 6 December. It is not possible to predict when an agreement might be concluded.

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he asked the Civil Aviation Authority to conduct a balance of benefits analysis in relation to the renegotiation of the US-UK air service agreements (Bermuda II). [7122]

Mr. Bowis: We have not asked the Civil Aviation Authority to conduct a balance of benefits analysis in relation to the current renegotiation of the UK-US air services agreement. The number of variables which would need to be taken into account, and assumptions which would have to be made, would make it impossible to model results which could be treated with any confidence. We understand, however, that the CAA has contributed to the Office of Fair Trading's analysis of the proposed British Airways-American Airlines alliance.

Wheelchairs

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will assess the advantages of introducing construction and use regulations in respect of the fitting of wheelchairs with security clamps certified to public service vehicle standards; and if he will make a statement. [6991]

Mr. Bowis: An existing code of practice gives guidance on the safety of passengers in wheelchairs on buses including requirements for securing and clamping the wheelchair. This may be applied on a voluntary basis at the time of initial certification for manufacturers that seek approval to carry restrained wheelchairs in PSVs. We are currently considering the appropriate requirements for the carriage of wheelchair passengers in PSVs generally, including the circumstances where restraints are required. We are also working with wheelchair manufacturers to develop wheelchairs which are designed and tested for comparability with all forms of transport.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of his review of the location of search and rescue helicopters on the south coast; and if he will make a statement. [7847]

Mr. Bowis: We have concluded that the current basing arrangements for coastguard search and rescue—SAR—helicopters on the south coast should continue. The current temporary arrangements for the Portland helicopter will be replaced with a five-year contract for an upgraded all-weather aircraft. The arrangements for the helicopter based at Lee-on-Solent will continue unchanged.

Our conclusions are based upon the results of consultation with interested parties on national requirements for SAR helicopters and an analysis of the use of helicopters in SAR incidents on the south coast and English channel.

In addition, we are taking forward the recommendations of the interdepartmental review on SAR helicopters through the auspices of the newly formed joint advisory board for SAR provision.

New Airlines

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new airlines have commenced flying operations in the United kingdom in the last two years; and if he will list the titles under which they operate. [7257]

Mr. Bowis: [holding answer 3 December]: The Civil Aviation Authority, which is responsible for licensing United Kingdom airlines, cannot determine from its records how many new UK airlines have actually commenced flying operations in the UK in the last two years. Since 1 January 1995, the CAA has granted 32 new operating licences to UK airlines. Of these, five are type A licences for larger operators—generally defined as operators of aircraft of more than 10 tonnes maximum take-off weight and/or with 20 or more seats—and 27 are type B licences for minor operators. The names of the airlines and, where known to be different, the names under which they trade, are as follows:

Type A

Airworld Aviation Limited (trading as Airworld)
All Leisure Airlines Limited (trading as All Leisure)
Community Express Airlines Limited[1]
Sabre Airways Limited
South Coast Airways Limited

Type B

Air Cavrel Limited
Air Kilroe Limited
Airlong Charter Limited
Anglo American Airmotive Limited
Atlanta Helicopters (Global) Limited
CB Group Limited
City Air Bus Limited[1]
City Link Airways Limited
Eurojet Aviation Limited
European Airways Limited
Execujet Limited[1]
Executive Jet Charter Limited
Imperial Air Charter Limited
Keenair Charter Limited
Kingair Limited
Leeds Central Helicopters Limited
London Executive Aviation Limited
Lothian Helicopters Limited
Macair Limited[1]
Oxford Air Services Limited
PLM Dollar Group Limited
Poplar Aviation Limited
Pritchard WGT (trading as Mayfair Dove)
Solent Helicopters Limited (trading as Elite Helicopters)
Stevenson Aviation Limited
Surrey and Kent Flying Club (1982) Limited
Widehawk Aviation Limited

[1] Ceased trading.

In addition to the above, two airlines which do not hold their own operating licences—Easyjet and Debonair—have commenced operations under the scope of the air travel organisers' licensing regulations, using services operated by another airline which holds a valid operating licence. Both Easyjet and Debonair have applied to the CAA for their own operating licences.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the study into the effects of soman referred to in his answer of 6 June, official Report, column 519, was carried out. [6932]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of DERA. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 4 December 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the time when the study involving the nerve agent Soman took place.

From examination of the available laboratory records the majority of the work conducted for this study took place between September 1988 and July 1990.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment's assessment of the link between short-term exposure to nerve agents and OP-induced delayed neuropathy. [6933]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of DERA. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 4 December 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment's assessment of the link between short term exposure to nerve agents and OP-induced delayed neuropathy.

Studies have been carried out at Porton Down to assess the potential of the nerve agents tabun (GA), sarin (GB) and soman (GD) and VX to induce delayed neuropathy. In the studies only the nerve agent GB induced delayed neuropathy and then only using well in excess of lethal doses. The results of these studies were published in the British Journal of Pharmacology Vol.31 page 295–299 and Archives of Toxicology Volume 52 pages 71–82.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment's assessment of whether short-term exposure to mustard gas causes (a) chronic bronchitis, (b) chronic laryngitis and (c) delayed keratitis of the eye. [6928]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of DERA. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 4 December 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment's assessment of the effects on health of short term exposure to mustard agent.

CBD Porton Down does not make its assessments of the efficacy of chemical warfare agents public. However some observations about mustard agent poisoning during the First World War have been published and indicate that following exposure to very high concentrations of sulphur mustard, delayed keratitis can occur. This effect is referred to in papers published in 1940 by TJ Phillips (Proceedings of the Royal Society of Medicine Vol.33 (229–232) and in 1942 by WF Hughes (Archives of Ophthalmology, Vol.27 (582–601).

We are aware that First World War veterans were awarded disability compensation for respiratory disorders which were believed to have resulted from sulphur mustard poisoning. However other factors such as cigarette smoking, influenza and other environmental effects were not taken into consideration and a definite causal link between sulphur mustard exposure and chronic respiratory disorders such as bronchitis or laryngitis has not been established.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment concluded its work on the contract into the defeat of attacks by ballistic missiles with chemical and biological warheads; what was the total value of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [6930]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of DERA. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 4 December 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question about work undertaken by the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) into the defeat of attacks by ballistic missiles with chemical and biological warheads.

As the reply dated 3 February 1995 from Dr Pearson, the then Director General CBDE to your earlier enquiry indicated, this work is being carried out with US funding under the 1985 US/UK 'SDI' Memorandum of Understanding. The further option year referred to in Dr Pearson's letter was in fact taken up and work under this current Government-to-Government agreement is due to complete at the end of this year, with a total value of $11.2M.

It is possible that a new agreement, to continue work in this area, will be negotiated.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment started work on the contract relating to a commercially available anti-emetic drug to protect service men against nuclear radiation-induced nausea; and when this contract ended. [6931]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of DERA. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 4 December 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the work conducted by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on commercially available anti-emetic drugs.

I am not clear to which contract your question refers. Staff at Porton Down have carried out a number of studies to assess whether some commercially available anti-emetic drugs cause any side effects which might impair the military performance or well-being of service personnel. The studies do not address the efficacy of these drugs. The research programme began in September 1991 and although a major project was completed early this year, we are still carrying out some work.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what methods the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, is monitoring and checking the health of its former staff who are exposed to chemical warfare agents during their employment at the establishment after they have left Porton Down. [6922]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of DERA. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 4 December 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the methods used by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down to monitor the health of former staff exposed to chemical warfare agents during their employment.

All work involving the use of chemical warfare agents is conducted following appropriate health and safety guidelines. Members of staff are not therefore generally exposed to chemical warfare agents whilst carrying out their duties at Porton Down. It is not considered necessary to carry out any subsequent health monitoring of individuals after they have left Porton Down.

I hope this information is helpful.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance the Defence Export Services Organisation has provided to Sheffield companies in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [7249]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Defence Export Services Organisation daily provides assistance to British defence equipment companies to help them promote their products and services overseas. This assistance is available to companies in the Sheffield area.

UN Peacekeeping

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) representations he has made to and (b) discussions he has held with the Governments of (i) Germany and (ii) Japan to encourage them to make a greater contribution to UN peacekeeping forces. [7386]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

We welcome the increasing contributions to and participation in UN peacekeeping forces by Germany and Japan. UN peacekeeping is the subject of frequent discussion between our respective Governments at both ministerial and official level.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on the export of de-mining equipment to the former Yugoslavia. [7641]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: On 26 February 1996, the European Union adopted a common position on arms exports to the former Yugoslavia which expressly excludes from the EU embargo "transfers of equipment needed for demining activities". The supply of de-mining equipment is vital to the task of detecting and destroying land mines laid during the war in former Yugoslavia.

The Government give sympathetic consideration to applications for the export of de-mining equipment for humanitarian purposes to former Yugoslavia on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the overall situation in the states of the former Yugoslavia and the paramount importance of ensuring the safety of British and other troops deployed in the region.

Lobbying Organisations

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those lobbying organisations in the United Kingdom which receive money from EU institutions and which are actively involved in promoting the benefit of the EU, indicating the amounts of money they receive. [5956]

Mr. David Davis: The European Commission does not publish a detailed list of grants to lobbying organisations. However, chapter A30 of the EC budget provides a broad outline of Community subsidies, including to "bodies and projects advancing the idea of Europe".

These grants are intended to fund information provision, research and other relevant activities. A copy of the EC budget has been deposited in the Libraries of the House.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs which countries he has visited in an official capacity since June. [7657]

Mr. Rifkind: Since the beginning of June I have paid visits in an official capacity to Iceland, Germany, Belgium, France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Luxemburg, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Pakistan, India, Sri Lanka, Japan, Mongolia, the Republic of Ireland, Switzerland, the United States of America, Thailand, Vietnam, Israel, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the relevant provisions in the BBC charter and licence and agreement which prevent the BBC from investing in its own decoder box for digital television. [7402]

Mr. Sproat: There are no provisions in the BBC's charter or the agreement which prevent the corporation from investing in its own decoder for the reception of digital television and article 3(e) of the charter specifically enables the BBC to do so. However, the corporation would require my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's approval under article 3(u) of the charter if it sought to establish any joint ventures or partnerships with other companies in relation to the production of set top boxes. My right. hon. Friend will consider any BBC requests to undertake such enterprises.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Pupils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children are now educated in (a) grant-maintained schools, (b) grammar schools, (c) city technology colleges, (d) specialist schools and (e) through an assisted places scheme. [6757]

Mrs. Gillan: A total of 29,900 pupils held assisted places in independent schools in the school year 1995–96.

The latest available information on pupils in grant-maintained, selective and specialist schools and city technology colleges is shown in the following table.

England

	Number of pupils[1]
Grant-maintained schools	718,200
Selective schools	129,600
Specialist schools	183,000
City technology colleges	14,300

[1] Some pupils may be counted in each of more than one type of school.

Project Work

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will provide an age breakdown of the long-term unemployed people who have benefited from the project work pilot programme. [7226]

Mr. Forth: Of the 5,634 people who had entered the project work pilot by mid-November, 16 per cent. were between 18 and 24 years old, 40 per cent. were between 25 and 34 years old, 43 per cent. were between 35 and 49 years old, and 0.5 per cent. were 50 years old on the day they entered the pilot.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will assess the advantages of extending the project work programme to those aged over 50 years. [7227]

Mr. Forth: We are carrying out a full evaluation of the project work pilots in Hull and Medway and Maidstone. The announced extension of the approach to 28 new areas from February 1997 will enable us to examine its effects and implications in greater detail. If these further examinations confirm the initial indications that the approach is beneficial and cost-effective, we will then consider extending it to groups other than those covered by the current pilots.

Aggregated Schools Budget

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each local education authority, (a) the change in overall education standard spending assessment for 1996–97 over 1995–96, (b) the change in ASB as reported by section 42 statements for 1996–97 over 1995–96 and (c) the change in ASB as a percentage of the change in education standard spending assessment. [7248]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table covers those authorities which have been unaffected by local government reorganisation. It shows the education SSA and the adjusted ASB figure for each authority for 1995–96 and 1996–97, with the percentage change between each year for each category and the increase in ASB expressed as a percentage of the increase in adjusted Education SSA.

Promotional and public information campaigns are defined in this answer as multi-media campaigns containing newspaper, radio, TV or poster advertising in addition to leaflet production and distribution. All the advertising work was placed through the Central Office of Information in accordance with normal practice. A range of other contractors worked on various aspects of the campaigns.

The costs given are the total costs of the campaigns. It would be possible to disaggregate the costs of the Department's own staff in arranging and supervising the campaigns only at disproportionate cost.

EU Social Affairs Council

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Social Affairs Council on 2 December. [7797]

Mr. Paice: The UK was represented by the UK deputy permanent representative to the European Union at the Social Affairs Council on 2 December. No votes were taken.

The Joint Social Affairs Council, ECOFIN and Commission report on employment was approved for submission to the Dublin European Council. The proposal for the establishment of an employment and labour market committee was agreed unanimously and agreement in principle was reached on a number of amendments to directive 1408/71 on social security for migrant workers, although final adoption will await the opinion of the European Parliament. The directive on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women in occupational social security schemes was agreed unanimously.

A recommendation on the balanced participation of women and men in the decision-making process and resolutions on mainstreaming equal opportunities for men and women into the European social funds, equality of opportunity for people with disabilities and on the role of social protection in the fight against unemployment were all agreed unanimously.

There was a political discussion, but no agreement, on a draft directive amending the 1976 equal treatment directive to take into account the judgment of the European Court of Justice in the Kalanke case.

There were a series of presentations: on the proposed chemical agents directive; the conclusions on lifelong learning adopted at the Education Council; a Commission communication on information and consultation of workers; a Commission communication on the social dialogue; a French paper on initiatives to follow up President Chirac's memorandum on a European social model; and on a Commission report on cohesion.

The other member states discussed, but did not reach agreement on, the draft directive on the reversal of the burden of proof in sex discrimination cases, which is being taken forward under their agreement on social policy and which will not apply in the UK.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Food Summit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for implementing the targets and commitments agreed by the recent world food summit; and if he will make a statement. [6100]

Dr. Liam Fox: We will participate fully in the international follow-up to the world food summit. The Overseas Development Administration is ready to assist developing countries in their efforts to implement the world food summit plan of action. We will also encourage United Nationals and other international organisations to take co-ordinated and effective action to help developing countries to meet the summit's goals.

WALES

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for grant-maintained status are currently being considered at (a) primary and (b) secondary level. [7238]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Tuesday 3 December, Official Report column 604.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost of the Government's proposals for changes to early retirement provisions for teachers (a) to local education authorities in Wales and (b) in the Neath Port Talbot county borough area; and what compensation is proposed for the additional costs to local education authorities. [5769]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Under our proposed changes to early retirement provisions, the employers' contribution rate to the teachers' superannuation scheme will be reduced. That will release funds so that employers can pay directly for those premature retirements that they believe to be necessary. Our proposals envisage a reduction of 40 per cent. in premature retirements in schools in England and Wales over the next three years. If employers in Wales provide for this reduced level of premature retirements there will be savings. The precise level of those savings in Wales, and in individual local authority areas, will depend on decisions of employers and cannot be quantified in advance.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams of 15 November about the case involving the duty of care of Marine Safety Agency surveyors of fishing vessels. [7264]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 4 December 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about your letter of 15 November.

As you know, your letter to the Lord Chancellor was transferred to me, as Chief Executive of the Court Service, to reply as it concerned an operational aspect of the Court of Appeal. The Parliamentary Secretary's Private Office wrote to you on 20 November to inform you of the transfer.

My enquiries into your constituent's case are currently underway and I hope to be in a position to reply to you by 9 December.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, columns 610–11, on the arrest and conviction of young offenders, if the figures cited referred to working days. [6544]

Mr. Streeter: The figures cited in the answer in question count all days of the week, not working days alone. All figures published in the Department's information bulletins on magistrates courts time intervals also count all days of the week.

HEALTH

East London and the City Health Authority

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, columns 597–98, concerning application of his latest weighted capitation formula, what is the current formula and where it is set out; what sums were made available to the East London and the City health authority for 1996–97; what sums are planned for 1997–98; and what was the basis of calculation for such sums with particular reference to the base population used. [6622]

Mr. Malone: Details of the weighted capitation formula used to determine the 1996–97 allocations to health authorities can be found in the 1996–97 health authority revenue cash limits exposition booklet, copies of which are available in the Library.

East London and the City health authority received a general allocation of almost £337.2 million in 1996–97, an increase of £1.6 million, 0.5 per cent. in real terms.

In 1997–98, East London and the City health authority will receive an integrated allocation of £365.4 million, which will include a general allocation of £348 million, an increase of £7.4 million, 2.2 per cent. in real terms.

Details of the formula used to calculate the general allocation will be included in the 1997–98 health authority revenue cash limits exposition booklet, copies of which will be placed in the Library shortly.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the population within the area of the East London and the City health authority on which that authority's capitation grant is calculated, (b) the total number of persons registered with general practitioners within that area, (c) the estimates he or others have made of the evidence of double registrations, (d) the estimates he or others have made of the number of persons not registered and (e) what action he has taken to adjust his capitation formula accordingly. [5091]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 20 November 1996]: Resources are allocated on the basis of health authority resident population. The population forecasts used for resource allocation are updated annually.

The 1997–98 weighted capitation target for East London and the City health authority was calculated using the forecast population figures for 1997, based on 1995 population estimates, of 613,172.

The number of patients registered with general practitioners within the former City and East London family health services authority on 29 March 1996 was 718,849.

The national population figure provided by the Office for National Statistics, the department responsible for providing population data to government, is lower than the total number of patients registered with general practitioners, which implies a level of double counting. Areas from which GPs draw their patients are not coterminous with health authority boundaries.

There are even greater variations between the two data sets when sub-national populations are considered, where there is evidence of both under and double counting. Double counting is known to be particularly prevalent in inner cities because of the transient nature of their populations. In the case of East London and the City, the estimate of double counting is around 18 per cent.

We are not aware of any estimates of the number of persons not registered with general practitioners.

The data used in the weighted capitation formula are updated annually, but not in relation to the number of persons registered with general practitioners as this would not be relevant.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the changes to the compendium of guidance for private abortion clinics made in 1994; with which bodies he discussed these changes; and what parliamentary scrutiny they received; [6810]

(2) what factors underlay his Department's modifications to the compendium of guidance on procedures for approval of private sector places for termination of pregnancy under 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, and for registration of pregnancy advice bureaux, in 1994. [6809]

Mr. Horam: The compendium of guidance was first published in 1994 following a review of the procedures for approval and monitoring of the provision of abortion services in non-national health service premises and the conditions governing such provision. The compendium provides a single source for this information and brought up to date departmental requirements and guidance.

The following requirements were removed:

- Questions about the hospital/clinic premises which were already collected by health authorities under their Registered Homes Act 1994 responsibilities.
- Control of fees for abortion at specialist clinics.
- Issue of timed receipts to patients.
- Control of advertising in this country.
- Control of advertising abroad.
- Personal declaration form.

Changes were also made to the assurances governing day care provision.

The results of the review were announced in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) on 20 July 1994, at columns 367–68. The then Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville), announced that copies of the compendium were being placed in the Library. The Government continue to keep under review the requirements set out in the compendium of guidance.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led him to remove the requirement for private abortion clinics to give an assurance that they would not advertise their services overseas. [6811]

Mr. Horam: Assurances relating to advertising abroad were introduced in the early days of the Abortion Act to counter abuses at that time. Subsequent upon a 1991 European Court of Human Rights judgment, the assurances in relation to touting and diversion of patients were no longer appropriate. The number of foreign women coming here for abortion fell from a peak of 56,000 in 1973 to 12,000 in 1991 and has continued to fall to 10,337 in 1994.

Health Inequalities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to commission a follow-up study to those conducted by Sir Douglas Black into inequalities in health published in 1980 and 1987. [6994]

Mr. Horam: Since the publication of the report of the working group on inequalities and health in 1980—known as the Black report after its chairman, Sir Douglas Black—and the review "The Health Divide: Inequalities in Health in the 1980s", published by the then Health Education Council in 1987, the Department of Health has commissioned, and published on 23 October 1995, the report of the sub-group of the chief medical officer's "Health of the Nation" working group on variations in health.

The Department is taking forward recommendations contained in the report and I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 14 November 1996 at column 335.

NHS Doctors

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 224, on doctors needed in the NHS, if he will list the years of intake for the 500 medical students and the number to be accepted in each year. [7129]

Mr. Malone: Further to the reply of 26 November, the medical work force standing advisory committee recommended an increase in the number of medical students from 4,470 in 1995 to 4,970 in 2000. Target intakes for individual medical schools and the pacing of the increase are a matter for the higher education funding councils. The target set for 1996–97 was 4,736. I understand a decision has yet to be made on the 1997–98 target.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the transmission of CJD via blood donation. [7681]

Mr. Horam: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stockton (Mr. Cook) on 1 April at column 46.

Further to this reply to the hon. Member for Stockton, I would like to clarify of my statement that

"as a precautionary measure, individuals with central nervous system diseases or risk factors for CJD, including a family history are excluded from giving blood."

Instructions came into force nationally on 1 August providing that all blood donors must be directly asked about any family history of CJD. Until then, under national blood service guidelines potential donors would have been told not to give blood if they mentioned a family history of CJD, but they may not specifically have been asked the question.

All potential blood donors should now be directly questioned about any family history of CJD, as well as about their own health, and any people found to have risk factors in their own personal health history or with a family history of CJD are excluded from giving blood. I should emphasise that these remain only precautionary measures, as there is no evidence of any risk of transmission of CJD through blood or blood products.

General Practitioners (Drugs Expenditure)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average amount spent on drugs and pharmaceutical products by (a) fundholding general practitioners and (b) non-fundholding general practitioners in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [7289]

Mr. Malone: The available information is given in the table. Partly because of restrictions on which general practitioners can become fundholders, fundholding GPs have much bigger list sizes than non-fundholding GPs. This means that their average expenditure on drugs is higher than that of non-fundholding GPs. However, spend on drugs and pharmaceutical products by fundholding general practitioners tends to be less per patient than the spend by non-fundholding general practitioners. The difference is about 6 per cent. on average.

Data on prescribing per patient are available in the Health Select Committee evidence, question D3, copies of which are available in the Library.

Average expenditure on drugs per GP (£000, net ingredient cost)

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Fundholding GPs	121	130	138
Non-fundholding GPs	109	117	123

1. The data are from the prescribing analysis cost system generated by the Prescription Pricing Authority, and include drugs and appliances dispensed in the community. All the figures are in net ingredient cost per GP.

2. The data take no account of changes of status of GPs (from non-fundholding to fundholding) between years.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount spent on drugs and pharmaceutical products by general practitioners in each regional health authority in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [7292]

Mr. Malone: Information for the areas covered by the eight regional offices of the national health service executive is shown in the table:

Expenditure by region (£ million net ingredient cost)

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Northern and Yorkshire	428.4	468.1	505.0	541.4

West Midlands	319.0	348.8	378.7	399.5
North West	425.5	463.1	499.3	538.7

The data are from the prescribing analysis cost system generated by the Prescription Pricing Authority, and include drugs and appliances dispensed in the community. Data for the former regional health authorities have been adjusted to the new regional office areas.

Hospital Staff Meetings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the amount of time spent by hospital staff in meetings; what is the estimated cost of such meetings in terms of lost man hours; what were the findings of this research, broken down where possible by region; and if he will make a statement. [7290]

Mr. Malone: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Hospitals (Safety)

Mr Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals which failed to meet statutory safety requirements for (a) waste incineration, (b) fire precautions, (c) control of hazardous substances and (d) prevention of legionnaire's disease, in each of the last five years; if they have since met these requirements; and if he will make a statement. [7291]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally. The responsibility for complying with statutory requirements on health and safety issues lies with individual national health service trusts. Enforcement of relevant legislation is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive, the Environment Agency and the Home Office.

Regional Health Authority Consultants

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants were employed by each regional health authority in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement. [7293]

Mr. Malone: In 1985, the regional health authorities employed all medical consultants working in non-teaching hospitals and regional consultants in public health medicine. Special health authorities and teaching districts held the contracts for the remaining consultants. Since the onset of the national health service reforms, in April 1992, contracts have been transferred to trusts as they became established. Only a small number of consultant contracts were held by regional health authorities when they became part of the NHS executive in April 1996 and these were all contracts of regional consultants in public health medicine.

The table gives the whole-time equivalents of hospital medical consultants employed within previous regional health authorities boundaries. Figures on consultants in public health medicine are also given.

The majority of census data are now collected directly from trusts and health authorities and this has identified some under-reporting of doctors in 1994 and some previous years.

Operations

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of (a) an endoscopy, (b) a hernia operation, (c) a vasectomy, (d) a cataract operation, (e) a mastectomy, (f) a varicose vein operation, (g) a tonsillectomy, (h) an adenoid operation and (i) a gall bladder operation (i) in each regional health authority and (ii) in each hospital trust; and if he will make a statement. [7294]

Mr. Horam: The information relating to these specific procedures is not collected centrally on a routine basis. No national or regional database exists for this information currently.

Private Health Care

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of state for Health what was the expenditure on private health care, excluding long-term care, (i) as a proportion of gross domestic product and (ii) cash terms for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [7298]

Mr. Horam: This information is not collected by the Department.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the survival rate of babies born weighing under 3lb 4oz for each regional health authority in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [7299]

Mr. Horam: The information for 1994, the latest year available, is as follows:

Hospital Volunteers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered hospital volunteers there were in each regional health authority area in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement. [7300]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the amount of fluoride required annually by a water company artificially to fluoridate public water supplies for a population of 300,800. [6794]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

On the assumption that the total water supply amounts to about 60 million litres per day, the drinking water inspectorate has estimated that it would require each year approximately 150 tonnes of 20 per cent. by weight hexafluorosilicic acid, the chemical which is normally used to fluoridate water supplies.

Water Consumption

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the daily average consumption of water by (i) children aged (a) zero to five years, (b) six to 12 years and (c) 13 to 18 years and

(ii) adults aged (1) 19 to 65 years and (2) over 65 years; and in each case what is the figure as a percentage of the daily public water supply; [6796]

(2) what estimate he has made of the percentage of public water for household consumption; and what percentage of this figure is used for drinking purposes. [6797]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

Household usage constitutes approximately 70 per cent. of the volume of public water supplies in England and Wales. Approximately 0.63 per cent. of the average household supply is used for drinking purposes as tap water, or as tap water-based beverages.

The latest research into drinking water consumption habits, published by MEL Research does not report against the exact age bands requested. However, extrapolation from published data indicates that the approximate total water consumptions in litres per day are as follows: zero to five years, 0.75 litres (0.5 per cent.); six to 12 years 1.1 litres (0.7 per cent.); 13 to 18 years 1.4 litres (0.9 per cent.); 19 to 65 years 1.7 litres (1.1 per cent.); and over 65 years 1.7 litres (1.1 per cent.). Figures in parentheses represent consumption expressed as a percentage of the average per capita usage of 160 litres per day.

The survey of drinking water consumption was funded by my Department. Copies of the report "Tap Water Consumption: Findings from the 1995 National Survey" have been placed in the Library of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Administrative Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those administrative decisions of his Department affecting (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-citizens where there is no right of appeal. [6023]

Mr. Willetts [holding answer 25 November 1996]:

The work of the Cabinet Office is directed to the servicing of Cabinet and its Committees. The Cabinet Office also provides staff and support services for the Prime Minister's Office at 10 Downing street, for the offices of the Government Whips, and for the Parliamentary Counsel Office, the function of which is to draft Government Bills and advise Departments on parliamentary procedure. Within the Cabinet Office, the Office of Public Service has responsibilities for improving the efficiency of government and public services and the competitiveness of business.

Apart from management decisions concerned with the staffing of his Department, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is not called upon to take administrative decisions directly affecting individual United Kingdom citizens or non-citizens.

SCOTLAND

Public Appointments

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacancies for non-executive directors currently exist on (a) NHS trusts and (b) health boards; and if he will list (i) the bodies involved and (ii) how long these vacancies have been left open. [6368]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Of the 325 non-executive appointments made by the Secretary of State to the 15 health boards and 47 NHS trusts in Scotland, there are currently 10 vacancies. Information on these vacancies is set out in the table:

Health body	Date of vacancy
Ayrshire and Arran Health Board	1 April 1996
Forth Valley Health Board	24 February 1996
Grampian Health Board	1 November 1996
Lanarkshire Health Board	11 November 1996
Lothian Health Board	31 October 1996
Argyll and Bute NHS Trust	1 April 1996
Dundee Healthcare NHS Trust	1 April 1996
Edinburgh Healthcare NHS Trust	1 November 1996
Grampian Healthcare NHS Trust	1 April 1996
Yorkhill NHS Trust	14 May 1996

An announcement on the filling of a number of these appointments will be made shortly.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what comparison he has made of the level of indebtedness per head of population of Scottish local authorities relative to local authorities in (a) England and (b) Wales in respect of (i) general capital fund and (ii) housing. [6996]

Mr. Kynoch: The available information, giving the position at 31 March 1996, is given in the table. There are significant differences in the sources of information used for Scotland, England and Wales. In particular, the information for English local authorities is based on estimates and distinguishes only housing and non-housing capital debt.

While exact comparisons cannot be made because of the differences in the ways that outstanding debt has been measured, the table shows that the overall debt per head of Scottish local authorities is around 2.5 times the debt per head of English local authorities and some 70 per cent. higher than that of Welsh local authorities.

Local authority debt outstanding at 31 March 1996

	England (i)	Wales (ii)	Scotland (iii)
Total debt outstanding	£37 billion	£3.2 billion	£9.7 billion of which
General fund services (iv)	n/a	£1.9 billion	£5.4 billion
Housing revenue account (v)	£20 billion	£1.2 billion	£4.1 billion
Other services (vi)	n/a	£0.02 billion	£0.2 billion
Total debt per head (vii)	£760	£1,080	£1,880
of which
General fund services (iv)	n/a	£640	£1,050

Local authority debt outstanding at 31 March 1996

	England (i)	Wales (ii)	Scotland (iii)
Housing revenue account (v)	£410	£430	£800
Other services (vi)	n/a	£10	£30

1. The figures for English authorities are estimates, based on information from local authority borrowing inquiries.
2. The figures for Welsh authorities are for loan debt, as supplied in the Capital Outturn Return form 5 completed annually by all Welsh local and police authorities. These figures may change once the accounts of the pre-reorganisation authorities are finalised.
3. The figures for Scottish local authorities are for loan debt, as supplied in the Capital Debt Outstanding return supplied by all Scottish local authorities. Debt on transferred services, water and sewerage and the childrens reports service, has been excluded.
4. No separate analysis is available for general fund services and other services in England. The Scottish figures for general fund services exclude services, such as Urban Programme, which are not relevant for loan and leasing charges, and include debt on housing general fund service.
The figures for general fund services for Wales include debt on housing general fund services and debt incurred under the SDA Housing Acts.
5. Debt on authorities' Housing Revenue Accounts only. The figure for England is an estimate.
6. For Scottish local authorities this includes debt on non-relevant services such as the Urban Programme, and debt on trading services. For Welsh local authorities, this is debt on trading services only.
7. Debt per head is based on 1995 mid year population estimates, and all figures shown have been rounded to the nearest £10. The debt per head figures for England are approximate as they are based on estimated total debt outstanding figures accurate only to the nearest £1 billion.

Private Finance Initiative (Health)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what projects NHS health trusts and health boards in Scotland are undertaking under the private finance initiative; what is the value of each and which private sector bodies are involved. [7023]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 December 1996]: There are currently 18 projects being procured by NHS health trusts and health boards under the private finance initiative of which the Scottish Office is aware. The information requested on these projects is set out in the table. Local Enterprise Companies

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those local enterprise companies which publish lists of approved contractors and suppliers; and if he will make a statement. [7218]

Mr. Kynoch: This is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Stone of Destiny

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much it cost to transfer the Stone of Destiny back to Scotland; and how much it is estimated it will cost to have it installed in Edinburgh castle. [6364]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 November 1996]: The cost incurred by Historic Scotland in transferring the Stone of Destiny from Westminster to Edinburgh is estimated at £4,737. The cost incurred in installing the Stone of Destiny in Edinburgh castle is estimated at £5,100.

Ayrshire and Arran Health Board

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make an announcement about the filling of the vacancy for a non-executive director on the Ayrshire and Arran health board; and what have been the reasons for the delay in making this appointment. [6412]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has now given careful consideration to the advice which he has received from the chairman of the Ayrshire and Arran health board and the independent Health Appointments Advisory Committee and expects to be able to appoint a new non-executive member to the health board in early December.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Legislation

9. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the additional cost to businesses in the United Kingdom from (a) directives and (b) rules and regulations made by (i) the Commission and (ii) the Council of Ministers in each of the last five years. [5788]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I can give reliable figures for my Department only from 1994. Non-recurring costs for 1994, 1995 and 1996 respectively are: £36 million, £2 million and £48 million; recurring costs are £49 million, £2 million and £3 million.

These figures need to be set against the considerable benefits to UK business of opening up the single market.

Business Links

24. Mr. Hunter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the development and level of activity of business links in Hampshire. [5804]

Mr. Page: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister formally opened Business Link Hampshire on 18 September 1996. Its four access points and two information points are handling some 700 inquiries per month.

Fuel Reserves

25. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of oil, gas and coal reserves in the United Kingdom. [5805]

Mr. Page: Remaining reserves in present discoveries of oil on the UK continental shelf at the end of 1995 are estimated to be up to 1,890 million tonnes. For gas the estimate is 1,915 billion cu m. Allowing for the full potential from as yet undrilled structures could raise this to 6,714 million tonnes of oil and 3,665 billion cu m of gas.

For coal the remaining reserves at existing mines were estimated to be around 1 billion tonnes at the end of 1994.

Competition Law

26. Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's draft Bill to reform competition law entitled "Tackling Cartels and the Abuse of Market Power", published on 8 August. [5806]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government are committed to reforming United Kingdom competition law. Working is continuing on developing the proposals set out in the draft Bill. We will be publishing a revised version of the Bill, taking into account the many high-quality comments we have received, in the new year.

Manufacturing Production

27. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the change in manufacturing production between 1973 and 1996. [5807]

Mr. Greg Knight: In the third quarter of 1996 manufacturing output was 7½ per cent. higher than in the third quarter of 1973.

Regional Policy

28. Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the impact of the European Commission's first cohesion report on the regional policy of the United Kingdom. [5808]

Mr. Greg Knight: The European Commission's cohesion report demonstrates the United Kingdom's success on unemployment, and in combining economic growth and job creation—unlike much of the rest of Europe. The report also shows that the UK is one of the few countries where regional unemployment differences have decreased, and that since 1989 there has been a narrowing of relative GDP between UK regions.

Pembroke Power Station

29. Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to make an announcement on the application by National Power under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to convert Pembroke power station to burn orimulsion. [5810]

Mr. Page: There are still a number of matters to be resolved before my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is in a position to make any decision on National Power's application.

Utility Regulation

30. Sir Jim Lester: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to alter the present structure of utility regulation. [5811]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The regulatory regimes have worked well. They have brought substantial benefits for consumers, and they are flexible and adaptable. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade keeps under review the regulatory regimes for which he is responsible, but has no present plans for structural change.

Women in Business

31. Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking to assist women. [5812]

Mr. Page: My Department has various measures to assist small businesses, which are open to all, irrespective of gender, race or disability. These include business counselling and planning, management best practice, exporting advice and financial help. The majority of these services are delivered through the business link network in England. Scottish business shops provide similar services in Scotland and Business Connect serves Wales.

Former Coal Mining Areas

32. Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new initiatives he has to promote employment in former coal mining areas. [5813]

Mr. Page: A range of measures are in place to promote regeneration and economic growth in former coal areas.

Working Time Directive

33. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the European Court of Justice's ruling on the working time directive. [5814]

Mr. Lang: My Department has received a wide range of representations, including representations from employers and employers organisations concerned about the directive's potential implications for industry.

Strikes

34. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to protect the public from strikes in essential services. [5815]

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 19 November, the Government published a Green Paper, "Industrial Action and Trade Unions", containing proposals to protect the public and the economy from industrial action which inflicts disproportionate or excessive damage on third parties. The proposals are also designed to ensure that strikes are called only as a genuine last resort.

Manufacturing Industry

36. Sir David Knox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry. [5817]

Mr. Greg Knight: My right hon. Friend the president of the Board of Trade and other DTI Ministers regularly meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss a range of issues. In 1997 the CBI expects manufacturing output to grow by 4 per cent. and manufacturing investment to grow by 7½ per cent.

Manufacturing Output

37. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the percentage change in manufacturing output for the latest three months; and what it was 12 months ago. [5818]

Mr. Greg Knight: In the third quarter of 1996 manufacturing output was 0.7 per cent. higher than in the previous quarter. In the equivalent period a year earlier manufacturing output grew by 0.5 per cent.

EC Regulations

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he will take to protect the United Kingdom from EC regulations which his Department assesses to be damaging to United Kingdom interests. [5816]

Mr. Nelson: The Government resist all legislative proposals from the EC which would in any way damage United Kingdom interests. All proposals are subject to a rigorous scrutiny, assessing the extent to which they might pose burdens on business.

The opt-out from the social chapter which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister secured at Maastricht has already protected the UK from a number of potentially damaging social policy measures. As the House was told on 12 November, we shall insist that the intergovernmental conference addresses the issues raised by the European Court of Justice judgment on the working time directive. That means both ensuring that the directive itself no longer affects the United Kingdom and securing measures to prevent any other "social engineering" directives being forced on the United Kingdom by similar manoeuvres.

Arms Exports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that all companies involved in the sale, transportation and brokering of arms shipments register with the Department of Trade and Industry. [5886]

Mr. Lang: My Department's consultative document, "Strategic Export Controls", Cm 3349, presented to Parliament in July, sought views on all aspects of strategic export control procedures and policy, including the possibility of new legislation. Among the specific issues raised was the extent to which any new legislation should seek to control trafficking in undesirable goods or the brokering of such deals. The consultation period closed at the end of October and the Department is currently considering the responses and follow-up action to the consultation. Current procedures in relation to trafficking in arms are also being examined by the interdepartmental committee set up in response to the allegations that UK companies have been linked to the selling of arms to Rwandan extremists in Zaire. The committee's work on this area will contribute to the wider review of strategic export controls already under way.

Newspaper Publishers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the recent report of the committee for diversity and pluralism into newspaper publishers' margins. [7401]

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is no knowledge in my Department of the report of the committee for diversity and pluralism into newspaper publishers' margins.

Newspapers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he last met representatives from the Multiple Newsagents Association; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement; [7389]

(2) when he last met representatives from the National Publishers Association; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement; [7370]

(3) if he will request the Director General of Fair Trading to refer the newspaper distribution system to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [7368]

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he last met representatives from the National Publishers Association; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement; [7128]

(2) when he last met representatives from the Multiple Newsagents Association; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [7127]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Sellyoak, (Dr. Jones) on 2 December 1996, Official Report, column 495.

Corporate Governance

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to introduce reforms to corporate governance; and if he will make a statement. [5791]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Good corporate governance is essential to the competitiveness and high standing of industry. The Government keep the need for reforms in this area under review and will consider carefully any recommendations made by the Hampel committee.

Industrial Disputes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions, in the last year for which figures are available, strikes have occurred following management's refusal to negotiate or refer the dispute to binding arbitration. [5826]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government do not collect the information requested.

British Citizens

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the value to the United Kingdom economy of British citizens working abroad. [3778]

Mr. John M. Taylor: This Department has not made such an assessment. The Office for National Statistics publishes in "United Kingdom Balance of Payments" an estimate of private transfers from abroad, reflecting the savings of UK nationals temporarily resident abroad as well as pension and other transfers from abroad. In total, these transfers contributed £2,438 million to the balance of payments in 1995. Residence abroad can also benefit the economy directly or indirectly in other ways: for example, through the acquisition of new skills and experience, consultancy and maintenance contracts, export promotion and the effective management of UK overseas direct investment.

Coal Mining Industry

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the application by the mining unions to pay full pensions at the age of 50 years to mineworkers who were made redundant. [4785]

Mr. Page: I understand that, at present, pensions from the mineworkers' pension scheme are payable from age 50 on a reduced basis to cover the cost of early payment. This option is available only to members who left British Coal's employment after 1 March 1992.

The MPS trustees will be recommending to the Secretary of State, as guarantor to the scheme, benefit improvements arising out of beneficiaries' 50 per cent. share of any surplus which the valuation of the scheme—as at September 1996—currently under way reveals as available for distribution. It is for the trustees to consider whether to recommend in this context any extension to the existing provision for early pensions.

Airline Alliance

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 316, if his Department's practice, on the consultation of interested parties, has been followed in the case of the proposed British Airways/American Airlines alliance. [7452]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Yes, the Department's practice has been followed in this case. Since receipt of the Director General of Fair Trading's advice there have been no discussions nor consultations between the Department and British Airways or American Airlines on the substance of the decision to be taken by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Office of Fair Trading on further consultations with British Airways, American Airlines and third parties since his receipt of the Director General of Fair Trading's report. [7451]

Mr. Taylor: It is not the practice of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to comment publicly on a competition case between receiving advice from the Director General of Fair Trading and the announcement of my right hon. Friend's decision.

Company Directors

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which companies had directors against whom the then

Minister for Corporate Affairs considered bringing disqualification proceedings; and if he will indicate for each if the Minister determined that such proceedings should be taken for (a) 1993 and (b) 1994. [6329]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 2 December 1996]: In 1993 and 1994 reports were received which alleged aspects of unfit conduct in 7,489 and 5,462 companies respectively. The Insolvency Service, acting on behalf of the Secretary of State, commenced disqualification proceedings against 422 directors in 1993 and 747 directors in 1994. The names of the individual respondents to those proceedings could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In the years in question Ministers took no decisions on the commencement of individual proceedings.

Bird's Eye Walls

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the Office of Fair Trading to announce the findings of its investigation into the use by Bird's Eye Walls of ice cream wholesaler exclusivity. [6843]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 3 December 1996]: I understand that the investigation by the Director General of Fair Trading into Bird's Eye Walls' exclusive concessionaire system is still in progress. I have asked the DGFT to let the hon. Gentleman know the outcome when the investigation is completed.

Riot Control Equipment

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those countries to which water cannons have been exported from Britain in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2481]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 November 1996]: Details of deliveries of equipment exported are not held by my Department.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those departmental responsibilities which relate to (a) England, (b) England and Wales, (c) England Wales and Scotland and (d) the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the approximate proportion of the time and budget of his Department which exclusively relates to each of these categories. [5959]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The responsibilities of the Department of Trade and Industry apply to the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, except where indicated as follows:

Corporate and consumer affairs

Company law
Northern Ireland has its own company law.

Companies House
Northern Ireland has separate legislation for the administration of registration functions, but maintains close links with Companies House.

The Registrar for Scotland comes within the Companies House structure, but there are differences in the Scottish law of property and the legal system.

Consumer affairs
DTI does not fund the Northern Irish General Consumer Council or Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux.

Nor is it responsible for Northern Irish legislation on misleading price indications, weights and measures, product liability and specific safety regulations.

Some consumer legislation has specific sections which apply only to Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Insolvency Service
The Insolvency Service has no responsibility in relation to Northern Ireland.

Its responsibilities are limited to England and Wales for preliminary administration and investigation of compulsory insolvencies; acting as trustee or liquidator; reporting criminal offences; undertaking banking and investment services for bankruptcies and liquidations; and policy advice to Ministers.

Industrial Relations Directorate (IRD)
Most of DTI's industrial relations work does not cover Northern Ireland, although industrial relations legislation is adopted almost in its entirety there.

IRD is responsible for the whole of the UK, however, for the negotiation of certain EU directives; policy and practices on pay; industrial disputes and public funding; and interest in trades unions.

Most IRD related NDPBs, including the industrial tribunal and employment appeals tribunal, and ACAS, do not cover Northern Ireland. The Office of Manpower Economics does, however, cover the whole of the UK.

Investigations
Various investigations powers in the Companies Acts 1985 and 1989, the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and the Financial Services Act 1986 do not cover Northern Ireland. In addition, in view of the differences between English and Scottish law, and where it is appropriate to use external investigators, the Department frequently uses accountants practising in Scotland to undertake investigations in cases with a Scottish dimension.

ENERGY PROMOTION

Export promotion
DTI has overall responsibility for export promotion policy throughout the UK in collaboration with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Delivery of export promotion services in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the relevant Department.

ENERGY

Energy policy
DTI has responsibility for establishing the framework of UK energy policy, but implementation of that policy lies partly with the Scottish Office and the Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development (NIDED).

Nuclear industries
The Scottish Office has responsibility for the safety and licensing of civil nuclear installations in Scotland. There are no civil nuclear sites in Northern Ireland.

The Welsh Office is involved in any emergency at a civil nuclear site in Wales.

Responsibility for reporting incidents at civil nuclear sites to DTI Ministers is confined to England and Wales, although DTI would act on the Scottish Office's behalf in notifying nuclear emergencies to the European Union and other countries.

Coal
The principal provisions of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946 do not extend to Northern Ireland.

Energy technologies
Overall policy is dealt with by the DTI, including orders for renewable energy under the non-fossil fuel obligation for England and Wales. Separate arrangements exist in Scotland and Northern Ireland for the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Electricity
The Electricity Act 1989 does not cover Northern Ireland.

Regulatory issues, entailing liaison with OFFER, relate to England and Wales only.

EU directive negotiations are undertaken on behalf of the UK, but both the Scottish Office and NIDED are consulted, and they have responsibility for implementation.

Section 34 directions relating to fuel stocks for security purposes are for England and Wales only; Scotland and Northern Ireland make their own arrangements.

Pension regulations made by the former Secretary of State for Energy do not cover Scotland or Northern Ireland.

DTI's electricity emergency provisions do not cover Scotland or Northern Ireland.

The DTI does not sponsor the electricity industry in Northern Ireland.

Engineering inspectorate

DTI's responsibility for the conduct and reporting of public inquiries and hearings into the contested proposals of the electricity and gas supply industries (e.g. overhead lines and underground cables) does not extend to Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Oil and gas

The principal provisions of the Gas Act do not extend to Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Office has separate responsibility for gas policy in the province.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Government Offices

The network of Government Offices covers the English regions only and is jointly run by DTI, DoE, DfEE and DOT.

Regional development

On regional industrial policy, DTI takes the lead for the development and targeting of industrial policy, but works closely in consultation with the Scottish and Welsh offices. (In Northern Ireland these subjects are dealt with separately by the Northern Ireland Office.)

Powers to provide regional selective assistance (RSA) in Scotland and Wales are exercised by the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. RSA is not available in Northern Ireland which has a separate arrangement.

DTI is responsible for the co-ordination of UK policy on the EU structural and cohesion funds. However, decisions on the implementation and allocation of funds in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are generally made by the relevant Department.

Business links

Business links are established in England only, as is the local competitiveness challenge.

Innovation, technology and design services are delivered within England through business links. DTI also funds the provision of innovation and technology counsellors in Wales through their similar Business Connect service.

Small and Medium Enterprise (SME) policy

On SME issues, DTI works closely with the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices in developing policies. Any action arising is the responsibility of the separate departments. The small firms loan guarantee scheme operated by the DTI is available throughout the United Kingdom.

Invest in Britain Bureau

The Invest In Britain Bureau (IBB) is responsible for inward investment promotion for the whole of the UK. It operates through a network of regional development organisations and Government offices in England; national agencies in Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales; and overseas through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Management best practice

DTR's management best practice programme extends to England, Wales and Scotland. Academic/industry programmes cover all the UK with the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and Northern Ireland Office contributing additional funds to allow extra activity in their areas. The international technology programmes also cover the whole of the United Kingdom.

Small and Medium Enterprise technology

DTI funds SMART in England and Northern Ireland. DTI funds SPUR in England and SPUR for further development of SMART projects in Northern Ireland. The Scottish and Welsh Offices are responsible for SMART and SPUR arrangements in Scotland and Wales.

DTI funds focus technical in England.

INDUSTRY

Engineering, automotive and metals sectors

The Department of Economic Development in Northern Ireland administers and pays for its own shipbuilding intervention fund and shipbuilding grants, within the context of a policy laid down for the UK as a whole, on which DTI leads.

Innovation

The Scottish Office has responsibility for the funding and operation of innovation measures in Scotland. The Welsh Office has responsibility for the operation of design services and the SMART and SPUR schemes in Wales, although DTI retains responsibility for the funding of other innovation measures in Wales.

Responsibility for technology and innovation in Northern Ireland is handled by the Northern Ireland Office.

Radiocommunications Agency

In the Radiocommunications Agency, regional licensing and forcement action is carried out through a network of Regional Offices. Implementation is uniform throughout the UK and representative local offices exist in Cardiff for Wales, Falkirk for Scotland and Belfast for Northern Ireland, as well as several offices in England.

Relevant information on the approximate proportion of the time and budget of the Department devoted to its main responsibilities is contained in MINIS, which is published annually by the DTI.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Order

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what occasions the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 has been used in response to incitement to racial hatred. [1494]

Sir John Wheeler: There is no offence of incitement to racial hatred in Northern Ireland. Article 9(1) of the Public order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987, however, states:

"a person who uses threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour, or displays any written material which is threatening, abusive or insulting, is guilty of an offence if—

(a) he intends thereby to stir up hatred or arouse fear; or

(b) having regard to all the circumstances, hatred is likely to be stirred up or fear is likely to be aroused thereby."

The term hatred is defined as

"hatred against a group of persons in Northern Ireland defined by reference to religious beliefs, colour, race, nationality (including citizenship) or ethnic or national origins".

Since 1993, six people have been proceeded against under this article. It is not possible to identify those which relate specifically to racial hatred.

Public Appointments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will advise hon. Members and local political parties of public appointment vacancies on the same lines as the Irish Republic's Government representative at the Maryfield Secretariat is advised.[6384]

Sir John Wheeler: Under the terms of article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, the Irish Government can put forward views and proposals on the role and composition of public bodies in Northern Ireland. I welcome suggestions from Members of Parliament and political parties on public appointment vacancies at any time. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and Northern Ireland Ministers have invited local political parties on a number of occasions to put forward names of individuals suitable for public appointments. In addition, major public appointments are now advertised in line with the requirements of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requirements he makes where nominations to public appointments are made by (a) hon. Members, (b) political parties and (c) the Government of the Irish Republic, that any such suggested nominees have their name and proposer so specified to him on the departmental submission when deciding on the appointment. [6383]

Sir John Wheeler: Submissions to Ministers on public appointments identify individuals proposed by the Irish Government. In cases where names have originated from the other sources mentioned, the source is normally drawn to the Minister's attention.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he plans to take to ensure that the same level of medical and drug treatment is available throughout Northern Ireland to patients suffering from coronary heart disease. [6400]

Mr. Moss: Government policy remains that all patients should receive the level of medical care and the drugs appropriate to their coronary heart disease—CHD—condition.

Although my Department understands that most cardiologists currently use the same criteria to determine the most suitable treatment for their patients, greater consistency should be achieved by the publication next January of guidelines for angiography, angioplasty and coronary artery bypass grafting.

The Department is aware that there may be variations in the prescribing of drugs used in the treatment of CHD. The Department asked the four health and social services boards in August this year to use their medical prescribing advisers, whose responsibility includes monitoring the prescribing pattern of the GPs in their area, to investigate the matter.

Rickets

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of rickets have been reported in each of the last five years. [6551]

Mr. Moss: There is no requirement for the number of cases of rickets to be reported centrally in Northern Ireland. However, the following table shows the numbers of in-patients, with a primary diagnosis of rickets, who were treated in hospital in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Type of rickets	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Active rickets	1	0	1	0	0
Disturbance of amino-acid transport	1	2	4	2	2
Vitamin D resistant rickets	0	0	0	2	1
Coeliac rickets	70	75	94	92	89
Renal rickets	1	0	0	1	0
Fetal congenital rickets	6	4	2	6	2
Total	79	81	101	103	94

Assaults and Robberies

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many assaults and robberies on the homes and businesses of (a) ethnic minority families and (b) Northern Ireland business men have been reported during the last 12 months; and how many of these have resulted in the apprehension and prosecution of those responsible. [6549]

Sir John Wheeler: (a) The numbers of reported offences against ethnic minority families in the last 12 months are:

1 armed robbery

11 robberies including one which resulted in murder

10 aggravated burglaries

14 burglaries

7 attempted burglaries

Extensive inquiries have been continuing into all of these offences. A number of persons have been arrested and interviewed. To date four persons have been charged in connection with these offences.

On the directions of the then Deputy Chief Constable (Operations) a special team of CID officers, under the command of the serious crime squad, was set up in May of this year. It was formed to conduct investigations into offences at the homes of Chinese business people.

On 28 May Mr. Flanagan, together with representatives from community affairs, crime prevention and the serious crime squad, attended a Chinese crime conference in Belfast. The fullest co-operation of those attending the conference was sought, to assist in bringing those responsible to justice.

(b) The current recording of crime does not permit the RUC to distinguish between attacks on business persons and other members of the general population.

The information given at (a) is available only because the special team was set up.

Life Sentences

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are currently awaiting trial on charges which carry a life sentence. [6752]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is not centrally collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Terrorism Offenders

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many prisoners convicted for offences related to republican terrorist activity have been transferred from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland since 9 February; [6748]

(2) how many people in Northern Ireland involved in republican or loyalist terrorist activity have been sentenced to life imprisonment for offences committed since 31 August 1994; [6750]

(3) how many prisoners convicted for offences related to republican terrorist activity are currently applying to be transferred under international agreement to prisons in the Republic of Ireland; [6753]

(4) how many prisoners convicted for offences related to republican and loyalist terrorist activity are currently held in prisons in Northern Ireland. [6747]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from B. R. D. White to Mr. Andrew Hunter, dated 3 December 1996:

In the absence of the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Prison Service, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the four Parliamentary questions you have tabled.

Your questions concerned prisoners convicted in Northern Ireland of offences relating to republican and loyalist terrorist activity. You sought information on the number of such prisoners currently in custody in Northern Ireland; the number who had applied for or had been successfully repatriated to the Republic of Ireland since 9 February 1996; and the number who had been sentenced to life imprisonment for offences committed since 31 August 1994.

The Prison Service does not hold centrally statistical information on the number of prisoners convicted of offences related to republican and loyalist terrorist activity. This information could only be made available at disproportionate cost.

The Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons was ratified by the Republic of Ireland in November 1995. Since that date no prisoner for whom the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has responsibility has been repatriated to the Republic of Ireland. The Northern Ireland Prison Service is not in receipt of any applications for repatriation.

No prisoner given a life sentence has been convicted of offences related to republican or loyalist activity committed since 31 August 1994.

Targeting Social Need Initiative

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance and training programmes have been implemented by the cross-community relations unit in respect of the targeting social need initiative. [6782]

Mr. Ancram: In 1991 the central community relations unit—CCRU—conducted a formal series of briefing seminars for senior officials in all Northern Ireland departments on the TSN initiative and its underlying concepts. Similar seminars were subsequently organised for other public sector organisations. CCRU continues to provide departments with general guidance on the implementation of TSN and advice on specific aspects.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the impact of the targeting social need initiative on public expenditure in the last five years. [6783]

Sir John Wheeler: Targeting social need is a public expenditure priority which has had an important influence on spending allocations in Northern Ireland over the past five years. TSN is reflected, for example, in the funding formulae for allocations to schools, the differential rates of industrial development grants and the provision of social housing. A significant proportion of public expenditure is directly related to meeting social need.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are currently awaiting trial for scheduled offences. [6751]

Sir John Wheeler: As of 29 November there are 67 defendants who had been committed for and were awaiting trial at the Crown court for scheduled offences.

Young Offenders

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of convicted youths aged 16 or 17 years were unemployed on the date of their sentence in each of the last five years. [6919]

Sir John Wheeler: Information on the employment status of offenders is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Teachers

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers left superannuable employment in the last five years; on what grounds; and what were the criteria for establishing eligibility for each ground. [7185]

Mr. Ancram: Available data are as follows:

Grounds for retirement	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96

[1] Efficient discharge of employers function.

Eligibility is determined in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Teachers' Superannuation Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1977.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes of RUC officers were (a) attacked, (b) temporarily vacated and (c) subject to purchase under the special purchase of evacuated dwellings scheme in each RUC divisional area during (i) July and (ii) August. [6095]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been (a) interviewed and (b) charged in connection with intimidation or attacks at the homes of RUC personnel and their families in each RUC divisional area during (i) July and (ii) August. [6096]

Sir John Wheeler: During the months of July and August a total of 12 people were interviewed in connection with intimidation or attacks at the homes of RUC personnel. Four people were subsequently charged.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Police Authority for Northern Ireland will publish its submission to Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary about the use of plastic baton rounds. [6097]

Sir John Wheeler: During a recent annual inspection of the RUC, the Police Authority had two meetings with Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary at which the issue of plastic baton rounds was discussed in detail. In the light of these discussions the authority concluded that it would not be necessary to provide a written submission to the inspector given the nature of his inquiry into plastic baton rounds.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to (a) receive and (b) publish the findings of Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary about the use of plastic baton rounds in Northern Ireland. [6098]

Sir John Wheeler: The Secretary of State expects to receive Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary's report on the 1996 inspection of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, which will include his scrutiny of the use of plastic baton rounds by the RUC, shortly. It will be published as soon as practicable.

Parades and Marches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Police Authority for Northern Ireland will publish its submission to the North inquiry into the conduct of parades and marches in Northern Ireland. [6099]

Mr. John Wheeler: The Police Authority will be publishing its submission to Dr. North this month.

Child Care Facilities

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what child care facilities his Department provides for its employees; what facilities were provided in 1992; and how many employees have used child care facilities in each year since 1992. [6462]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 28 November]: The Northern Ireland Office, London, has purchased four permanent full-time places at a nursery for its employees since 1992. Since that time all four places have been used. The Department of the Environment and the Child Support Agency offer subsidised places at registered nurseries and pre-school nursery schemes. The numbers using these facilities in the period 1993 to 1996 is as follows:

1993: 6

1994: 48

1995: 65

1996: 76

No subsidised places were offered in 1992.

Holiday play schemes cater for children of staff of the Northern Ireland departments and Northern Ireland Office, Belfast during school holidays. The number of play schemes operated during the period 1992 to 1996 is as follows:

1992: 4

1993: 5

1994: 8

1995: 8

1996: 8

Details of the number of staff using the play schemes are not held centrally, are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information Technology Projects

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 69, what are the proposed annual savings for the 10 IT projects planned for 1997–98. [6710]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 28 November 1996]: One of the 10 projects currently has an estimated annual saving of £2 million which will be re-appraised when the business case is completed. The annual savings of the remaining projects are not available as business cases are in preparation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were found to be not incapable of work for the purposes of invalidity benefit in each of the years 1991–92 to 1994–95 as a result of a Benefits Agency medical services examination. [6047]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Claims for sickness and invalidity benefits, referred to regional medical services, where the claimant was considered not incapable of work

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many incapacity benefit appeals against refusal of benefit on the grounds of failing the all work test have been superseded or withdrawn because of an award of benefit. [6051]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Closed File

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made by his Department in reviewing the file with the classmark PIN59/19 with a view to opening (a) all and (b) part of it. [6947]

Mr. Heald: This file has been reviewed with a view to accelerated opening. An application for the opening of the file, via Lord Chancellor's instrument, will be made at the next available opportunity in February 1997.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the advertising campaign for the Child Support Agency; what complaints were made to him about the accuracy of the advertisements for the test campaign in the Greater Manchester area; and if he will ensure that those claims in the advertisements against which complaints are upheld by the Advertising Standards Authority are not repeated. [7109]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This Department is currently in correspondence with the Advertising Standards Authority about one aspect of the Manchester publicity campaign. I regard the complaints made as wholly without foundation. There are no current plans to extend the advertising campaign to other areas.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals his Department has to improve the efficiency of the Child Support Agency; [6603]

(2) what assessment he has made of the efficiency of the Child Support Agency. [6604]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 3 December 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the efficiency of the Child Support Agency.

Every year the Secretary of State for Social Security sets the Agency targets against which its performance and effectiveness can be measured. Negotiations over the 1997/98 targets are already well under way and once agreed by Ministers will be made public in the Agency Business Plan, published in March 1997.

The Agency Business Plan for 1996/97 set out the main issues that would face the Agency in the year ahead. We were determined to continue the improvement in our performance by balancing our efforts across the full range of our business.

It is worthwhile to note some recent achievements.

The Agency recorded its best ever monthly performance in a number of areas in October 1996. £21.50 million in maintenance was collected; each Child Support Agency Centre collected in excess of £3 million in maintenance; 3,931 second tier reviews were cleared; 20,210 good cause cases were cleared.

Achieving this year's key Secretary of State target of £380 million—£400 million of maintenance to be collected or arranged for direct payment between parents will entail an increase of 27%—33% on the collected/arranged figure required last year, but the Agency is on course to succeed. During the current financial year, the total amount of maintenance collected and arranged reached almost £217 million at 31st October.

Payments of maintenance to parents with care (PWCs) made through the Agency collection service have increased significantly. Already this year, £48.6 million has been paid. Payments received are passed on very quickly; at the end of 1995/96, 97% of payments had been made within 10 working days of receipt from the absent parent (AP), exceeding the target of 90%. The 1996/97 target is to make 95% of payments within 10 working days. The target continues to be exceeded this year, with 98% of payments in October being made within 10 days.

The Agency is also contributing fully to the Department of Social Security Change Programme. We are committed to achieve 25% efficiency savings over the next 3 years and to help us do this we will take full advantage of the relevant experience and skills of the private sector.

I believe the progress made so far will be sustained throughout the rest of the year and look forward to continued improvements in performance across all areas of our business.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases being dealt with by the Child Support Agency are currently undergoing a review of the maintenance assessment made in the case. [6605]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 3 December 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency reviews.

An important part of the Agency's day-to-day business is dealing with requests from our clients to review their current maintenance assessment. This can take the form of a request that another Child Support Officer looks at their assessment (a Second tier review), an appeal against the final decision reached by the Child Support Officer, or simply where a client reports that their circumstances have changed.

At the 31st October 1996, the number of cases being dealt with by the Agency where such reviews had been requested were as follows:

Second tier reviews: 8,744 cases

Appeals: 1,553 cases

Change of circumstance reviews: 14,277 cases

In dealing with each of these categories, I am pleased to be able to tell you that the performance of the Agency is improving, against the background of an increasing caseload. The work-on-hand total for Second tier reviews has fallen by 22 per cent. from an April 1996 figure of 11,243, and the figure for appeals has fallen by 20 per cent. In the same period, the change of circumstance work-on-hand figure has fallen by almost 10%. This is indicative of the priority which is attached to these important areas of the Agency's work.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who contracted the Child Support Agency in the last (a) six and (b) 12 months waited more than 10 working days to receive a reply from the Child Support Agency to their correspondence. [6606]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 3 December 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency correspondence.

Under the terms of the Agency's Charter, we aim to reply to general enquiries within ten working days. We also aim to acknowledge written complaints within two working days, and to issue a full reply within ten working days.

In the case of general enquiries, total numbers are not recorded, and we measure our achievement using a sample of the correspondence received. In the period from May 1996 to October 1996, just over 40% of enquiries were answered within ten working days. In the twelve months up to 31st October 1996, the figure was 42%.

We do collate data on the number of complaints handled. Between May and October 1996, the Agency received 12,376 written complaints; of these, 5,098 did not receive a full response within ten working days. The corresponding figures for the last twelve months were 25,557 and 12,126.

The time taken to respond to written complaints is improving. In November 1995, 40% of complaints received a full response within ten working days; this figure had risen to 60% in October 1996. In addition, around 90% of complaints are acknowledged within two working days.

It is worth noting that not all correspondence received by the Agency from clients requires a written response; it is often the case that letters are received which report changes in circumstances or request action to be taken. Where this occurs, the Agency takes whatever action is appropriate and no written response is necessary.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many maintenance assessments made by the Child Support Agency are initially incorrectly assessed. [6600]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 3 December 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the accuracy of Child Support Agency maintenance assessments.

Information is not collected in such a way to enable me to give you precisely the information that you have requested. However, I am able to tell you that, based on a sample of cases, the Agency assessment accuracy rate for October 1996 was 77 per cent.

The Agency remains on course to meet the Secretary of State target of achieving a continuing improvement so that in at least 85 per cent. of cases checked in March 1997 the assessment value will be for the correct amount, to the last penny.

I hope this is helpful.

Invalidity Payments

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 90, what have been the annual savings to his Department in constant prices of ending the link between average earnings and (a) invalidity allowance, (b) attendance allowance, (c) non-contributory invalidity pensions and its successor benefit and (d) invalid care allowance. [7049]

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

Net savings derived from uprating in line with growth in prices only from 1980 as compared to uprating in line with the higher of the growth in prices or average earnings

1. Estimates are rounded to nearest £5 million.

2. Estimates converted to 1996–97 prices using GDP deflator.

3. Estimates for IVA exclude savings from individuals not currently entitled to IVA since it is entirely offset against additional pension, but who might become entitled if the earnings uprating link was restored.

4. Estimates take account of offsetting costs in the income related benefits.

5. It is assumed that attendance allowance is attendance allowance and DLA (care) highest and middle rate. The lowest rate of disability living allowance (care) has been excluded from the calculation as it was introduced in 1992 and was, therefore, never linked.

' Denotes negligible savings.

Benefit Savings Targets

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority (a) the weekly benefits savings targets and (b) the weekly benefit savings achieved, in each year from 1992–93 to 1995–96. [7403]

Mr. Heald: The information has been placed in the Library.

Before April 1993 there was no incentive scheme for local authorities so no central records were kept of any savings achieved in 1992–93.

National Insurance

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to act against avoidance of national insurance contributions. [7943]

Mr. Heald: We are committed to acting against exploitation of the national insurance system by employers who undermine the contributory principle by avoiding paying their proper share of contributions on the earnings they pay to their employees.

I have today laid regulations (SI 1996/3031) which tighten the rules for contributions where employers pay their staff in shares and share options. Earnings paid in the form of shares provided under schemes not approved by the Inland Revenue and using shares or options for shares which are capable of being traded on a recognised investment exchange as defined in the Financial Services Act 1986, or which are provided in circumstances where "trading arrangements" exist within the meaning of the Fiance Act 1994, will be subject to national insurance contributions. They will be treated in the same way as income provided in cash or in the form of other non-cash assets such as gold bullion and diamonds.

The regulations will come into effect from midnight tonight. Shares acquired under options granted before midnight today will not be affected.

These provisions are expected to save NICs of about £30 million annually.

Benefit Fraud Hotline

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his letter of 5 November, if he will list the poster sites used in publicising the national benefit fraud hotline indicating their location. [4631]

Mr. Heald: The information has been placed in the Library.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases in respect of the jobseeker's allowance are taking longer to process than recommended. [6984]

Mr. Burt: The administration of jobseeker's allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 3 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many cases in respect of the jobseeker's allowance are taking longer to process than recommended.

The processing arrangements for jobseeker's allowance (JSA) are necessarily complex during the transitional stages. Claims to JSA are being processed on the JSA Computer System (JSAPS), the Income Support Computer System (ISCS) and the National Unemployment Benefit System (NUBS2). ISCS provides data on processing times but does not differentiate between JSA and other claims. NUBS2 does not provide this data. There will be a gradual transfer of claims onto the JSAPS. This will be completed by October 1997.

For a variety of reasons, including the cost of obtaining the data, the JSA performance targets are based solely on cases processed via JSAPS. Between 7 to 31 October 1996 a total of 188,841 JSA claims were received and a total of 96,308 were processed on the JSAPS. Of these, 72.8% were processed within 10 working days, against an operational aim of 65% set for our managers for the transitional period. There is also a secondary aim of 90% of JSA claims to be processed within 21 working days. As there were only 19 working days between the introduction of JSA on 7 October and the 31 October, this target was not applicable, for this period. These figures are subject to amendment.

As these figures cover only the cases actually processed, there are limits to the interpretation that can be placed on one month's data in isolation—especially in the transitional phase of a new benefit when a number of claims are still awaiting clearance. The forthcoming months should produce a more meaningful analysis and provide the Secretary of State with a robust base for setting 1997–98 targets in this area.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what feedback from staff his Department has had regarding the effectiveness of the information technology system that is being used in processing the payments of the jobseeker's allowance; [6986]

(2) what feedback from staff his Department has received regarding the effectiveness of the training that was provided for staff dealing with jobseeker's allowance. [6985]

Mr. Burt: The administration of jobseeker's allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 3 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what feedback from staff his Department has had regarding the effectiveness of the information technology system that is being used in processing the payments of the job seeker's allowance (JSA); and what feedback from staff his Department has received regarding the effectiveness of the training that was provided for staff dealing with JSA.

Bringing together three main computer systems has been a massive and complex undertaking. Inevitably, there have been some teething problems and some refinements have had to be made to the computer systems. The effectiveness of the refinements continues to be monitored as they are made. The IT systems are working satisfactorily. An advice line is in operation for staff and issues which are identified are being quickly resolved. We are monitoring the position closely and are confident that it is improving.

Initial feedback from staff who have attended the Jobseekers Allowance training events has been positive. Inevitably staff need time to absorb and consolidate their training; facilities and resources have been provided to enable them to build confidence and expertise. Generally, people have said the events were effective in equipping them to carry out their jobs. Initial evaluation results show that 97 per cent. of staff felt the training met its objectives and 80 per cent. felt they had learned a lot as a result of the training. A review of the training, which is independent of the JSA Project, is being carried out. It will be producing an interim report in the new year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Claimant Interviews

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary for Social Security what assessment he has made of the advantages of the interviewing of clients seeking benefits by both his Department and the Benefits Agency. [6208]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 3 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what assessment he has made of the advantages of interviewing clients seeking benefits by both his Department and the Benefits Agency.

BA customers are not routinely interviewed at the new claim stage or when seeking benefits. Postal claim forms are used for all BA benefits. If the customer requests an interview or the office identify a particular problem an appointment may be arranged.

Since 1 July 1995, to improve customer service, accuracy, verification and validation of Income Support (IS) claims, certain new or repeat claims have been selected for an immediate home visit. During the interview the customer's circumstances are fully checked. This ensures that the customer receives the correct entitlement and any other benefits, to which the customer may be entitled, are identified.

Since 7 October 1996, all claimants to Jobseekers Allowance are initially interviewed at the Employment Service Jobcentre (ESJ) about Labour Market issues. Whilst the customer is in the ESJ the JSA claim form is examined to ensure it is fully and accurately completed and any necessary enquiries are made of the customer.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Benefits Agency (Wales)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the number of customer visits to each of the current Benefits Agency offices in Wales in each of the past three years. [5949]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hanson, dated 3 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what were the number of customer visits to each of the current Benefit Agency offices in Wales in each of the past three years.

The information requested is shown in the attached table.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total cost of abolishing the 16-hour rule in income support; and if he will break this down into its constituent parts. [6268]

Mr. Forth [holding reply 2 December 1996]: I have been asked to reply.

We estimate that the cost in benefit expenditure of abolishing the 16 guided learning hours limit for people undertaking education and training while receiving jobseeker's allowance could be between £500 million and £1,250 million a year. This is based on the assumption that any student other than those undertaking full-time courses in higher education could be eligible for JSA.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 98, regarding examples of improving efficiency through environmental auditing, if he will list the principal elements in his Department's green housekeeping strategy; and if he will make a statement. [7183]

Mr. Boswell: The principal elements of the Department's green housekeeping strategy cover recycling, waste management, pollution prevention, vehicles, energy efficiency, water conservation, procurement, heritage conservation, the built environment and the natural environment on the MAFF estate. The strategy also provides for a management structure, for monitoring and for raising staff awareness on green housekeeping issues.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 98, regarding examples of improving efficiency through environmental auditing, if he will list (a) those departmental sites where a specific environmental audit will shortly take place and (b) the expected start and completion dates of the audit; and if he will make a statement. [7184]

Mr. Boswell: The audits will concentrate on the Department's laboratories. Officials are preparing tender documents as part of the competitive tendering process. It is not expected that a contract will be let until the spring and the results should be available in the autumn of 1997.

BSE and CJD

Mr. Barron: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the risks of transmission to humans of BSE or its human Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease variant through (a) milk, (b) cheese, (c) butter, (d) yoghurt and (e) cream. [7138]

(2) what evidence he has evaluated that BSE or its human Cruetzfeldt-Jakob disease variant cannot be transmitted to humans through dairy products; and if he will make a statement; [7139]

(3) what assessment he has made of the relative risks of transmission to humans of BSE or its human Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease variant through (a) dairy products, (b) muscle meat and (c) animal offal. [7137]

Mrs. Browning: Links between nvCJD and CSE have not yet been scientifically established. Nevertheless, in considering issues of public health, we have always proceeded on the precautionary principle that BSE could pose a risk to public health.

In the case of dairy products, the primary perceived source of infectivity would be the raw material, milk, or any additional material of bovine origin used in the manufacture of the product. Experiments to detect infectivity in milk of clinically affected cows have been carried out using either intracerebral or oral exposure of susceptible mice. All results, which were negative, have been published in scientific journals and in information provided to the House from time to time.

The information has been made available to the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee—SEAC— and other expert groups—the World Health Organisation and OIE—who concluded that there was no justification for additional measures beyond the exclusion of milk from a known BSE suspect from the human and animal food chains. In March this year, and subsequently, when it has reviewed the measures in place to protect public health, SEAC has not considered it necessary to extend measures relating to milk and milk products.

In the context of additional materials used in the manufacture of milk products, SEAC has also considered the safety of rennet, and did not believe that it presented a risk to human health.

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, columns 47–8, if he will set out the factors which led him to conclude that exposure to BSE was the most likely explanation for the new variant of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease. [6988]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the statements made by me and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 20 and 25 March 1996, accepting advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee—SEAC. The advice from SEAC is set out in its statements of 20 and24 March 1996, copies of which are available in the Library.

Butter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he received from the New Zealand Government in respect of the European Commission's definition of butter; and what representations he made to the Commission on this subject. [7303]

Mr. Baldry: The Government have received no official representations from the New Zealand Government about the Commission's decision in June this year that spreadable butter does not conform with the definition of butter for the purposes of administering the preferential access quota for imports from New Zealand. We have made no representations to the Commission on this subject.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he had with the New Zealand Government before the latest EC definition of butter was agreed. [7274]

Mr. Baldry: None. The definition of butter for the purposes of administering the preferential access quota for New Zealand butter imports into the EU was agreed by the Agriculture Council in April 1981. It has not changed since then.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when was the latest EC definition of butter agreed; and when his Department first imposed the increased tariffs on spreadable butter. [7276]

Mr. Baldry: The current definition of butter for the purposes of administering the preferential access quota for New Zealand butter imports into the EU was adopted by the Agriculture Council in April 1981. Following the Commission's decision in June 1996 that spreadable butter did not conform with this definition, HM Customs and Excise applied the increased tariff on imports of spreadable butter from 25 July 1996.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations were undertaken with British consumers in the process of agreeing the definition of butter which excludes spreadable butter. [7275]

Mr. Baldry: There is no record of British consumers having been consulted prior to the adoption by the Agriculture Council in 1981 of the definition of butter for the purposes of administering the preferential access quota for New Zealand butter imports into the EU.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent he has discretion on whether to apply the European Commission definition of butter. [7302]

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no discretion as regards the application of the definition of butter in Commission regulation 1600/95 for the purposes of administering the preferential access quota of New Zealand butter imports into the EU.

Mr. David Smith

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date Mr. David Smith was suspended from his appointment as a Government-appointed local veterinary inspector, for what reasons and on what date he was reinstated. [6327]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 27 November 1996]: This information will not be disclosed under paragraph 12 of section II of the code of practice on access to government information, which protects individuals from unwarranted invasion of privacy.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the animal welfare, animal health and identification deficiencies observed during the course of the special operation recently carried out at Stranraer and Cairnryan; and if he will make a statement. [6325]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 27 November 1996]: The disclosure of information relating to recent inspections at the ports of Stranraer and Cairnryan may prejudice legal proceedings. The information will not therefore be disclosed under paragraph 4b of part II of the code of practice on access to government information.

TRANSPORT

US-UK Air Service Agreements

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make statement on his objectives in the renegotiation of the US-UK air service agreements (Bermuda II). [7120]

Mr. Bowis: The Secretary of State's objective is to secure a liberal aviation agreement with the USA, to the benefit of the UK.

Traffic Area Offices

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 59, if he will list the cost of overtime hours worked in the traffic areas. [6973]

Mr. Bowis: Staff submit their overtime claims weekly, and overtime is paid monthly in arrears. Therefore, the full overtime costs for staff in the north eastern and north western traffic areas have not yet appeared on the Department's staff payroll. During September and October 1996, overtime payments in the two offices were £1,830. It is estimated, however, that the total cost of the hours worked will be approximately £9,000.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what direct payment will be required to be made by Her Majesty's Government to their landlords to relinquish the lease of the north west traffic area office, Portcullis house. [7668]

Mr. Bowis: The Department has exercised a break clause in the current lease for Portcullis house, which means that the only payment to be made to the landlord under the terms of the lease will be to cover dilapidations. The amount to be paid is still the subject of negotiation between the landlord and the Department.

National Road Transport System

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the three largest new roads projects within his investment programme for the provision and maintenance of the national road transport system in each year since 1992–93. [6741]

Second Tamar Crossing

Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the status of the proposed A38 second Tamar crossing; and if he will make a statement. [8091]

Mr. Watts: In the light of a recently completed economic study on the impact of the second Tamar crossing on Plymouth and south-east Cornwall, I have decided to abandon the proposed scheme announced in May 1994.

This will remove the present uncertainty about the proposals and lift the planning blight from this area of Saltash. A number of properties have been acquired under the blight provisions, and these will be put back on the market as soon as possible.

The study report has concluded that the effects would be mixed, but that there was no clear case for a second crossing. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

MV Cap Afrique

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if all necessary statutory marine notice and logging requirements were properly completed for a sailing of the MV Cap Afrique from Dover on 30 November. [7717]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 5 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question relating to the sailing of the MV CAP AFRIQUE on 30 November 1996.

The CAP AFRIQUE is a French registered cargo ship. It is only possible to give assurances concerning the compliance of such vessels with regulations when they are inspected. The vessel was last inspected by the Marine Safety Agency under the port state control system on 9 August this year, on which date all the necessary documentation was in order and no deficiencies were identified. No information has been made available to the MSA to suggest that the CAP AFRIQUE did not comply with the requirements on 30 November 1996.

Metrolink

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision on the Manchester airport–Wythenshawe loop of Metrolink; and if he will make a statement. [7673]

Mr. Watts: We hope to announce a decision shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East reference GK/HB/311096, which was acknowledged on 4 November. [7512]

The Prime Minister: The letter will be replied to shortly.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 5 December. [6334]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 5 December. [6335]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Land Management Schemes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) planned expenditure in 1996–97 following the 1995 public expenditure settlement, (b) estimated outturn expenditure in 1996–97 and (c) planned expenditure in 1997–98 on the (i) moorland scheme, (ii) countryside access scheme, (iii) habitat scheme, (iv) organic aid scheme, (v) countryside stewardship scheme, (vi) nitrate sensitive areas, (vii) farm and conservation grant scheme and (viii) farm woodland premium scheme. [7688]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Details are contained in the table, which relates to payments to land managers in England.

Scheme	1996–97 planned estimated expenditure	1996–97 current (1996 PES provision)	1997–98 planned (1996 PES provision)

Farm and conservation grant scheme	4.00	8.89	2.43
Farm woodland premium scheme[1]	6.16	4.23	5.55

[1] Includes payments on the farm woodland scheme.

Directorate of Fisheries Research

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his plans for converting the directorate of fisheries research into an agency. [8176]

Mr. Baldry: Work is in hand for the management and organisational changes to convert the directorate of fisheries research into an agency of the Ministry with effect from 1 April 1997. In anticipation of the changes of status, and to reflect more fully the range of work done, the directorate will be known as the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science—CEFAS—with effect from 13 January 1997.

Intervention Board (Recruitment)

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are in place in the Intervention Board executive agency for recruitment; on what basis these are drawn; how many staff have been appointed at each level during 1995–96; if he will indicate the proportion of (a) women, (b) members of ethnic minorities and (c) disabled people successful at each level; and what exceptions were made to the recruitment rules to allow appointments to be made. [8177]

Mr. Baldry: I can confirm that there are systems in place in the Intervention Board to ensure that recruitment is carried out on the basis of fair and open competition and selection on merit, in accordance with the recruitment code laid down by the civil service commissioners, and that these systems are subject to internal check.

During the 1995–96 financial year, the Intervention Board conducted three recruitment campaigns to appoint staff at administrative assistant, administrative officer, and higher executive officer (auditor) levels. These exercises were conducted on the basis of fair and open recruitment and selections were made on merit in each case. The following statistical information on the competitions may help to put the exercise into context:

Administrative assistant competition

	There were 37 applicants of which:
	Applicants	Interviewees	Successful candidates
Gender
Male	21 (57 per cent.)	20 (67 per cent.)	16 (69 per cent.)
Female	16 (43 per cent.)	10 (33 per cent.)	7 (31 per cent.)
Totals	37 (100 per cent.)	30 (100 per cent.)	23 (100 per cent.)
Ethnic origin
White	31 (84 per cent.)	25 (83 per cent.)	19 (83 per cent.)

Asian	2 (5 per cent.)	2 (7 per cent.)	2 (9 per cent.)
Unknown	3 (8 per cent.)	2 (7 per cent.)	1 (4 per cent.)
Totals	37 (100 per cent.)	30 (100 per cent.)	23 (100 per cent.)

There were no disabled applicants for this competition.

Also, from the successful candidates, eventually only eight accepted appointments of which one was a part-time appointment. Of these six were male and two female, and of this group, seven classified themselves as white and one as black.

Administrative officer competition

	There were 69 applicants including one disabled, of which:
	Applicants	Interviewees	Successful candidates
Gender
Male	37 (54 per cent.)	24 (62 per cent.)	20 (61 per cent.)
Female	32 (46 per cent.)	15 (38 per cent.)	11 (39 per cent.)

Unknown	1 (1 per cent.)	1 (3 per cent.)	1 (3 per cent.)
Totals	69 (100 per cent.)	39 (100 per cent.)	31 (100 per cent.)

Of the successful candidates, 11 accepted appointments. Included among these was the disabled candidate. Also, of the 11, eight were male and three female, and all classified themselves as white.

Higher executive officer (auditor) competition

	There were 19 applicants of which:
	Applicants	Interviewees	Successful candidates
Gender
Male	16 (84 per cent.)	3 (60 per cent.)	0 (0 per cent.)
Female	3 (16 per cent.)	2 (40 per cent.)	2 (100 per cent.)
Totals	19 (100 per cent.)	5 (100 per cent.)	2 (100 per cent.)
Ethnic Origin
White	14 (74 per cent.)	5 (100 per cent.)	2 (84 per cent.)

Asian	1 (5 per cent.)	—	—
Unknown	1 (5 per cent.)	—	—
Totals	19 (100 per cent.)	5 (100 per cent.)	2 (100 per cent.)

One application was received from a disabled individual for this competition. This applicant did not meet the minimum qualification criteria and, therefore, was not invited for interview. The two successful candidates were subsequently appointed, both were female, and both classed themselves as white.

Finally, I can confirm that no exceptions to the recruitment rules were made during the period to allow appointments to be made.

Butter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much spreadable butter was imported in 1995; and from which countries. [7231]

Mr. Baldry: Official UK statistics on imports of butter in 1995 do not distinguish between spreadable and other types of butter. Total UK imports of butter, including spreadable butter, 1995 were 104,762 (provisional).

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if the ear tag UK YK 0737 has been used on more than one ovine animal destined for export; [7732]

(2) if the ear tag identification UK YK 0737 was the sole means of identification for a sheep destined for export on 2 November. [7730]

Mrs. Browning: UK YK 0737 is the country and flockmark part of the identification mark and, as such, has been used on more than one animal. The ear tag applied to exported sheep also included an individual animal identification number.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the ear tags on sheep identify the place of final loading on to a vehicle as the holding of origin. [7731]

Mrs. Browning: Not necessarily: the Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996 provides, where sheep are to be consigned for export, for an ear tag or tattoo to show the flockmark either of the consignor of the sheep for export or of a previous keeper of the animal. The tag or tattoo must also show the individual identification number of the animal as shown by its accompanying health certificate.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances a local veterinary inspector may sign an export health certificate when he has not visited the premises at which the sheep are inspected. [7733]

Mrs. Browning: Veterinary surgeons should certify only those matters which are within their own knowledge, can be ascertained by them personally or are the subject of a supporting certificate from another veterinarian who does have personal knowledge of the matters in question and is authorised to provide such a supporting document. It would therefore be permitted for a local veterinary inspector to sign an export health certificate when he or she had not inspected an export consignment, provided that he or she signed the certificate on the basis of an attestation provided by a local veterinary inspector who had inspected the consignment.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 102, concerning consignments of sheep, where the supervision of the loading of 16 consignments took place, and by whom it was supervised. [7736]

Mrs. Browning: The 16 supervised loadings referred to in the answer of 25 November were carried out by Ministry staff at various locations in Sussex, Devon, Essex, Herefordshire and Worcestershire.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 708, what assessment he has made of the practice of not recording communications between inspectors at the port and headquarters at Tolworth and of its implications for accountability. [7720]

Mrs. Browning: There is no need to record every one of the many communications between Dover and Tolworth, but significant matters are recorded.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department is able to trace every ovine animal back to the holding on which the animal was born. [7738]

Mrs. Browning: The Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996 provides for a system of identification and movement records to assist the tracing of sheep.

Hedley Lomas (Ireland) Ltd.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 103, what steps his Department will take to settle the claim by Hedley Lomas (Ireland) Ltd. [7734]

Mrs. Browning: In advance of a formal claim, I cannot speculate what action might occur.

MV Cap Afrique

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the inspector at Dover who telephoned the State Veterinary Service and the animal health and welfare sections at Tolworth on 6 November expressed concern regarding the MV Cap Afrique sailing in rough weather carrying livestock. [7718]

Mrs. Browning: No.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if (a) the necessary journey plans had been approved, (b) export health certificates had been issued for the four consignments of livestock that boarded the MV Cap Afrique on 30 November and (c) the four consignments of sheep had benefited from at least 10 hours rest and had been fed and watered before being loaded at the point of departure. [7722]

Mrs. Browning: We have no evidence to suggest that there were any infringements of the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994, as amended.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 474, if the inspector who boarded the MV Cap Afrique registered concern to the master of the vessel about the sailing on 6 November. [7719]

Mrs. Browning: No. The purpose of boarding the vessel was to ascertain if the master had exercised his judgment in accordance with article 11 of the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994, as amended.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether the sailing of the MV Cap Afrique on 6 November was likely to cause unnecessary suffering, injury or death to the animals on board the vessel, owing to the weather and sea conditions at the time of sailing. [7721]

Mrs. Browning: I have no reason to believe that the Department's inspectors did not exercise their judgment properly.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the incidence of (a) E. coli 0157 and (b) campylobacter in animals in England in each year sine 1990 and from 1 January to date. [7211]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Escherichia coli 0157 is not associated with disease in livestock and there is therefore no definitive information on the number of cases each year. However since 1990 staff at veterinary investigation centres of the Veterinary Laboratories Agency have taken samples from various livestock species during on-farm investigations following the identification of disease in humans that has been associated with individual farms. Some samples, mainly from cattle, have proved positive for E. coli 0157, but insufficient samples have been examined to give meaningful figures for the prevalence of E. coli 0157 infection in these herds. A survey of bovine faeces samples routinely submitted to VICs in England and Wales in 1995 found E. coli 0157 in 0.86 per cent. of 6,495 samples.

Campylobacter jejuni and Campylobacter coli, the campylobacters most commonly associated with human food poisoning, are commonly found inhabitants of the gastrointestinal tract of a wide variety of animals and birds and are rarely associated with disease in animals. Because they are not significant animal pathogens, they are rarely looked for during animal disease investigations. The prevalence of the organisms within flocks and herds is very variable with, on occasions, all animals in individual flocks or herds carrying the organism.

DEFENCE

Animal Welfare (Unclassified Reports)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what mechanisms the unclassified versions of the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee's substantive reports are made public; and if he will assess the advantages of making public the annual reports and minutes of the independent ethics committee of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, in the same way. [6929]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department's chief scientific adviser awaits the initial report from the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee, which is expected to be delivered before the end of the year. The precise mechanism by which this will subsequently be published has not yet been decided. As regards the publication of the annual reports and minutes of the ethics committee for Porton Down, the position remains as given in my reply to the hon. Member of 18 July 1995, Official Report, column 1162.

RAF St. Athan

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date of the "Competing for Quality" market test exercise at RAF St. Athan. [7435]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The cost to the Ministry of Defence to date of the "Competing for Quality" market test exercise at RAF St. Athan is £2.78 million.

Cyprus

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contacts he has had with officers of the (a) Greek Cypriot defence forces and (b) Turkish Cypriot defence forces since 1 January. [7655]

Mr. Soames: None.

RAF Scampton

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the future use of RAF Scampton; when arrangements will be made for it to be placed on the market; and if he will make a statement. [7265]

Mr. Soames: There have been 17 inquiries concerning alternative non-defence uses for this station all of which have been taken into account in the preparation of a planning brief for the site in conjunction with the local authority. Subject to the adoption of this brief, which will be considered by the local planning authority in early 1997, it is intended to commence marketing the site during the summer of 1997.

Stone of Destiny

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs were incurred by his Department in respect of events associated with the return of the Stone of Destiny to Scotland. [7714]

Mr. Soames: The return of the Stone of Destiny to Scotland was an accepted task under state ceremonial and routine public duties, the costs of which were absorbed within existing budgets. Additional costs relating to the ceremony on 30 November will be met by the Scottish Office.

MV Cap Afrique

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many days during July, August, September and October the MV Cap Afrique was contracted by the Ministry of Defence. [7716]

Mr. Soames: The MV Cap Afrique was chartered twice in July 1996 for a total of six days: from 9 July to 11 July inclusive and 23 July to 25 July inclusive. On both occasions she was employed to transport military vehicles and stores equipment between Marchwood military port and Antwerp. Those were the only occasions on which she was chartered by the Ministry of Defence since 1 July 1996.

Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of contracts placed by his Department with (a) subsidiaries of foreign companies and (b) British companies working in partnership with foreign companies in each of the last five years. [7740]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The management data held centrally covering MOD headquarters contracts do not provide details about whether the contractor is a subsidiary of a foreign company or a British company working in partnership with a foreign company. Consequently, with some 8,000 to 10,000 businesses receiving contracts each year, research to answer such a general question could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is her Department's procedure for advising hon. Members of ministerial visits to their constituencies. [3977]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My office is instructed to write notifying right hon. and hon. Members of all official visits to their constituencies.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list each official visit which she has made to the London borough of Southwark since her appointment and the date in each case of the notification of the visit to the hon. Member whose constituency she visited. [2921]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer11 November 1996]: Official visits to the London borough of Southwark since my appointment include:

29 August 1995: A rehearsal for British Youth Opera at South Bank university

27 September 1995: A site visit to Bankside, Summer street

12 March 1996: Open the headquarters of Groundwork Southwark, and visit Burgess Park

30 July 1996: Attend the Arts Review launch at the Royal Festival Hall

30 October 1996: Launch of The Human Resources Document at Butler's Wharf Chef School

21 November 1996: Launch of English Heritage annual report at the Oxo tower

It was not previously the practice in my Department routinely to maintain records of notification of visits. However, details exist of letters of 16 July, 29 October and 18 November to the office of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) regarding the events on 30 July, 30 October and 21 November respectively.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she next plans to visit the London borough of Southwark to discuss the operation of the national lottery. [4298]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer18 November 1996]: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Film Industry Finance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the Government's response to the report of Sir Peter Middleton's advisory committee on film finance. [8044]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today announced the Government's response to the report of the advisory committee on film finance. Copies of the press release have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Government are grateful to Sir Peter Middleton and his committee for their expert analysis of the obstacles to raising investment finance of British film making and for their recommendations on how these obstacles might be overcome.

The Government have accepted most of the committee's recommendations. Specifically:

the Government intend to work with the film industry and financial sector to establish a new forum to promote better understanding of each other's activities. The new body, which will be chaired by Sir Peter Middleton, will be called the Film Finance Forum;

the Government will consult the film industry and other interested parties on the statutory definition of a British film and will consider, in the light of comments received, whether changes to the existing definition are necessary;

the Government welcome the announcement by the Arts Council of England that it intends to apply national lottery money more strategically to the film industry to help create the market-focused film making structures recommended in the report; the Government will continue to negotiate in Brussels for a European audiovisual guarantee fund which is entirely commercial in its approach and private sector led from the outset.

The Government did not accept the recommendations made by the committee regarding improvements to the tax regime for the film industry or staying in the Council of Europe's Eurimages co-production programme.

Broadcasting

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals she has to extend the provisions of the Broadcasting (Channel 3 Transmission and Shared Distribution Costs) Order 1991. [8045]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Broadcasting (Channel 3 Transmission and Shared Distribution Costs) Order 1991 expires on 31 December 1996. I intend shortly to lay a statutory instrument under section 66 of the Broadcasting Act 1990 to extend the provisions of the 1991 order until 31 December 2002. The Government will review the provision of transmission facilities to the channel 3 network in the course of 2000 and decide at that point whether the order should be further renewed beyond 2002.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Master of Business Administration Course

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many civil servants are undertaking the recently introduced master of business administration course for public servants; and what are (a) the grades and (b) the respective Departments of those undertaking the course. [7041]

Mr. Freeman: There are currently 45 civil servants undertaking the public sector MBA course on full and part-time programmes. A further 16 civil servants finished full-time programmes in September 1996. This total of 61 are distributed between Departments as detailed in the table. A number of students will begin part-time programmes in January 1997. Information on the grades of participating students is not held centrally, and has not been collected on the grounds that the variation in grading systems across Departments and agencies makes such data of limited value.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the measures he has taken to encourage the Turkish Government to honour their international human rights obligations. [7680]

Mr. David Davis: We regularly raise our concerns over Turkey's human rights record in our bilateral contacts with the Turks at all levels. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary did so when he met the Turkish Foreign Minister in September and the subject will of course be on the agenda at their next meeting on 5 December. We also take action with our partners through the European Union and in international forums such as the UN Commission on Human Rights in November.

Japanese Pupils (Visas)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what type of visa is required by Japanese citizens intending to study at British boarding schools between the ages of 11 and 18 years. [7279]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have been asked to reply.

A national of Japan does not need to obtain a visa before travelling to the United Kingdom as a student. However, he may apply for an entry certificate should he wish to do so. The criteria for entry as a student are set out in paragraph 57 of the "Statement of Changes in the Immigration Rules", HC 395, as amended, a copy of which is in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Courts and Legal Services Act

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received regarding the delay in implementing section 13 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. [6792]

Mr. Streeter: According to our records, six representations have been received by Ministers, two in the form of parliamentary questions and four letters from Members of Parliament. In addition, in the course of work on revising the administration order procedure and assessing the feasibility of implementing section 13, views have been sought and received from many bodies and organisations.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the section 13 monitoring group last met; and what issues were discussed. [6793]

Mr. Streeter: The monitoring group last met on 29 November 1993. It discussed the objectives of the administration order procedure, secured and unsecured debts, and non-payment under an administration order.

ENVIRONMENT

River Thames (Nitrates)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of changes in the (a) source and (b) quantities of nitrates in the River Thames over the last six years; and if he will make a statement. [6815]

Mr. Clappison: Nitrate concentrations in surface waters, including the River Thames, and in groundwaters are monitored by the Environment Agency as required by various European directives. The resulting data enable us to identify, and review as necessary, when action is needed to comply with the requirements of these directives in relation to nitrate pollution. For example, in the context of the nitrate directive, assessment of 1992 data on nitrate concentrations in surface waters led to the designation of nitrate vulnerable zones covering nine river catchments. The River Thames did not meet the criteria for designation in the first round. We shall be reviewing the vulnerable zone designations in 1997, as required by the directive, based on monitoring data currently being collected by the agency and available on their public registers in the usual way. The latest data on trends in river nitrate concentrations in the Thames region and in other parts of Great Britain are presented in the Department's 1996 Digest of Environmental Statistics, No. 18.

City Pride Initiative

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the likely benefits to be received by the seven new areas challenged to join the city pride initiative. [7176]

Mr. Curry: Ministers have had a number of discussions with the partners involved to date in city pride. Birmingham, London and Manchester, the three cities invited to pilot the city pride initiative in November 1993, have demonstrated the benefits by forging partnerships and, after extensive local consultation, producing detailed prospectuses setting out clear and deliverable visions for the future of their cities. The pilot cities are now implementing the proposals set out in these prospectuses. The seven new areas challenged to join the city pride initiative have an opportunity to demonstrate they can achieve the same excellent results.

City Challenge

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for city challenge funding in the last financial year were unsuccessful; and what estimate he has made of the cost of submitting the bids. [7175]

Mr. Curry: There were no applications for city challenge funding in the last financial year; 329 final bids were received in respect of the second round of the single regeneration budget challenge fund, for which the deadline was 18 September 1995. Some 172 bids were successful—over 52 per cent. of the total of final bids received. The Government have made no estimate of the cost of submitting bids. We have, however, commissioned independent research from the department of land economy, Cambridge university, into the single regeneration budget challenge fund. As part of that research, a report in the form of a working paper has been prepared on a sample of 10 unsuccessful SRB challenge fund bids. Copies of this paper have been placed in the Library of the House. This working paper estimated on page 28 that the cost of preparing unsuccessful bids varied from £10,000 to £23,000. The evidence from the unsuccessful bids studied in the report suggested that the challenge fund programme strengthened the formation and effectiveness of local partnerships, and that inter-agency co-operation had been enhanced. The report also concluded that there was no suggestion that the costs of preparing SRB bids were necessarily greater than preparing proposals under other funding regimes.

Offshore Installations (Pollution)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all reports prepared by Government laboratories or consultants to his Department on the monitoring of pollution arising from offshore oil installations since 1979. [7021]

Mr. Clappison: The directorate of fisheries research of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regularly produces reports in the aquatic environment monitoring reports series on this subject, which are placed in the Library. Similar reports are produced by the Scottish Office. My Department has commissioned no recent reports from consultants for this purpose.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals for the use of the private finance initiative in respect of local government expenditure. [7306]

Sir Paul Beresford: On 31 October we relaxed the capital finance rules to promote the private finance initiative in local government. We also issued guidance on those relaxations and associated arrangements for revenue support for PFI projects.

Development Land Values (Taxation)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the past five years schemes have been brought forward by the Government for the introduction of taxes on development land values; in what years those schemes were brought forward; in what years they were abolished and for what reasons; and if he will make a statement. [7713]

Mr. Gummer: The Government have brought forward no such schemes in the past five years.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the advantages of imposing new taxes on the development for residential purposes of green-field sites; and if he will make a statement. [7712]

Mr. Gummer: I have not proposed such taxes, and have no intention of doing so.

Private Sector Housing Renewal

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to give local authorities guidance on the private sector housing renewal provision in part I of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996. [8088]

Mr. Clappison: DOE circular 17/96 "Private Sector Renewal: A Strategic Approach" is being sent to local authorities today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of each House.

The circular takes account of changes to the system of house renovation grants made by part I of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 which will come into force on 17 December. The circular updates and consolidates in one document all previous guidance on private sector renewal and emphasises the need for local authorities to develop strategies to make the best use of the powers and resources that they will have for promoting private sector renewal. The guidance was prepared with the help of an advisory group of local authority practitioners and has been subject to consultation with the local authority associations and other interested organisations.

National Forest

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to report on progress in implementation of the national forest. [8090]

Mr. Clappison: I have today arranged for copies of the National Forests Company's 1996 annual report and accounts to be available in the House Library.

Valuation Tribunal Service

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the forthcoming finance, management and policy review of the valuation tribunal service. [8089]

Sir Paul Beresford: As part of the Government's programme of regular five-yearly finance, management and policy reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will conduct a thorough review of the valuation tribunal service beginning on 5 December. The first stage of the review will take the form of a prior options study. This will assess the extent to which the functions that the valuation tribunal service performs are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for privatising, contracting out or transferring all, or part, of its functions to another body.

The progress made by the valuation tribunal service since the previous review in 1992 will be examined and the results of that examination and of the prior options study will inform a detailed review of the service's policy and financial management systems. To minimise the uncertainty that the prior options study will cause, I expect this part of the review to be completed within six months. The time required for the more detailed review cannot be foreseen, but I would expect it also to last no longer than six months.

In carrying out the study, my Department will consult widely with all parties with an interest in the work of the valuation tribunal service.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 82, regarding examples of improving efficiency through environmental auditing, if he will list the occasions on which environmental considerations have been taken into account in respect of procurement and accommodation management matters. [7198]

The Solicitor-General: All four Law Officers' Departments keep environmental aspects of their accommodation and procurement activities under regular review. Examples of action already taken in one or more of the Departments are: the fitting of new controls on heating and air conditioning plant to reduce energy consumption; the use of energy efficient lamping; the installation of modern flushing systems and rapid response arrangements for reported leaks; furniture purchase contracts which specify that wood should be from sustainable resources; and the stipulation in cleaning contracts that only environmentally friendly cleaning products should be used.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many national vocational qualifications awarded by the end of December 1995 were achieved by (a) private sector and (b) public sector employees. [6942]

Mr. Paice: Data are not available on the number of national vocational qualifications awarded to private sector and public sector employees.

Open University

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to introduce a right for students of the Open university to have their examination papers re-marked on appeal. [7420]

Mr. Forth: It is for the Open university, as an autonomous higher education institution, to establish its own procedures for marking examination papers and to set up appropriate appeals procedures.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amounts have been requested by way of capital spending in 1997–98 by each local education authority; and what has been the total amount requested in England. [7473]

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the schools capital expenditure annual capital grants bid for each local education authority for 1997–98. [7711]

Mrs. Gillan: Each year we invite LEAs to submit their plans for education capital expenditure so that we can determine the level of their annual capital guidelines. The following table shows the total of each LEA's planned expenditure for 1997–98, as submitted to the Department in October.

TREASURY

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of United Kingdom gross domestic product for each year since 1970 at (a) current prices and (b) 1996 prices; what has been the annual percentage change in United Kingdom gross domestic product at constant prices for each of these years; what was the Government take of gross domestic product in each of these years at (a) current prices and (b) 1996 prices; and what was the annual percentage change in this Government share of gross domestic product at constant prices in each of these years. [5570]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Figures for GDP at current and constant prices are published in table 1.1 of the "United Kingdom National Accounts—The Blue Book". Government receipts as a percentage of money GDP are provided in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". This shows that general Government receipts as a percentage of money GDP are currently lower that at any time during the last Labour Government.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of his Department's policies on women. [5478]

Mrs. Angela Knight: In July this year the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. Advice based on this model will be circulated to officials in the Treasury.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has drawn up in regard to recital 13 of the European Commission's draft regulation on surveillance and co-ordination of budgetary positions of European Union member states in respect of the Maastricht treaty articles on economic and monetary union. [6790]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The text of the draft regulation remains to be negotiated by the Council of Ministers in due course. I now expect these negotiations to start early next year. Under the treaty provisions negotiated at Maastricht, no new economic policy obligations can be imposed on the UK unless we decide to join the single currency.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications of the stability pact to be established as part of the preparations for economic and monetary union for levels of employment and security of employment. [6808]

Mr. Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the statements that I made to the House on 25 November, Official Report, columns 21–43, and on 3 December, Official Report, columns 797–813. By helping to ensure a stable macroeconomic environment in the third stage of EMU, a credible and effective stability pact would help provide a strong foundation for employment-creating growth. Negotiations on the details of a pact which might prove credible and effective are continuing.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he plans to put forward in respect of article 109j(3) of the Maastricht treaty. [6830]

Mr. Clarke: The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers agreed at its meeting on 11 November, under article 109j(2) of the EC treaty, that there is not at present a majority of countries which fulfil the conditions for the adoption of the single currency and that stage 3 of economic and monetary union will not therefore start in 1997. It has recommended its finding to the Council, meeting as Heads of State and Government, for a final decision under article 109j(3) in Dublin on 13 and 14 December. This recommendation has been submitted for scrutiny in the usual way.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made in respect of the European Commission proposals for (a) council regulation on the strengthening of the surveillance and co-ordination of budgetary positions, and (b) council regulation on speeding up and clarifying the implementation of the excessive deficit procedure, COM (96) 496 final of 16 October; and if he will place copies in the Library. [6789]

Mr. Clarke: I submitted to Parliament an explanatory memorandum on the Commission's published proposals on 31 October 1996 and subsequently made statements to the House on 25 November Official Report, columns 21–43, and on 3 December Official Report, columns 797–813, clarifying the Government's position and approach to the draft stability pact regulations. I also wrote to all Members of Parliament on 22 November 1996 on this same subject, arranging for copies of the letter to be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications of Britain's opt-out from the final stage of EMU for the application of provisions of the stability pact to Britain while the opt-out is maintained. [5443]

Mr. Clarke [holding answer 21 November 1996]: The Commission's draft regulations on the stability pact imply no sanctions or new policy obligations that can be imposed on those member states that do not participate in a single currency. The UK's opt-out will remain effective for as long as we choose to maintain it.

Tax (Tobacco Products)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the loss in tobacco tax revenue for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 arising from (i) legal and (ii) illegal imports. [6899]

Mr. Oppenheim: Customs' latest estimate of total tax revenue—excise duty and VAT—lost from legitimate personal imports of tobacco products purchased duty paid in other EU member states is £80 million for the calendar year 1995. Customs estimate that total tax revenue of £70 million was lost from this activity in calendar year 1994.

Customs' current estimate of revenue evaded by smuggling of tobacco products is £560 million per year. This figure does not include any amount for commercial fraud. The actual loss to the Exchequer could be less than the amount evaded if some smuggling represents additional consumption rather than substituting for similar goods bought in the UK. Customs have no official estimate of the extent of such additional consumption, if any. There was no previous official estimate of revenue evaded by smuggling.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the levels of real interest rates for each year since 1976 and for each quarter since the first quarter of 1992. [7387]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Data on short-term interest rates and inflation can be found in "Financial Statistics" table 7.10 and "Economic Trends" table 1.1, respectively. Both publications are available from the House Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many private finance initiative contracts have been let in each quarter by the Departments of (a) Health, (b) Education and Employment and (c) Transport since the introduction of the private finance initiative. [7724]

Mr. Jack: Information at that level of detail is not held centrally. Questions about PFI in particular Departments are a matter for the Departments concerned.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the Government's initial forecast for private finance initiative uptake by November; and what figures were achieved. [7723]

Mr. Jack: No target was set for November 1996. By April 1996, £4.8 billion of PFI deals had been agreed, against a target of £5 billion; £7 billion of PFI deals have now been agreed and we remain on course to meet the target of £14 billion of agreed PFI deals by the end of 1998–99.

Finance Bill

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published; and if he will make notes on clauses available to hon. Members as usual. [8046]

Mr. Jack: The Finance Bill will be published on Friday 3 January 1997. Explanatory notes on the Bill's clauses will be placed in the Vote Office and the Library of the House that day. In addition, the public will be able to obtain copies of the explanatory notes from the Treasury. They will also be available on the Internet at http://www.hm treasury.gov.uk. The explanatory notes build on the information previously provided in the notes on clauses by containing fuller explanatory material for each clause and schedule in the Bill, and aim to provide Parliament with a better understanding of the purpose and effect of the Government's proposals.

EU Budget

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Union Budget Council held on 19 November. [8174]

Mr. Oppenheim: Sir Stephen Wall, United Kingdom representative to the European Union, represented the United Kingdom at the Budget Council on 19 November. The Council considered the European Parliament's proposed changes to the draft budget which the Council established in July—see Official Report, 12 November 1996, columns 161–62—and established a second reading draft budget for 1997.

The Council's second reading draft budget totals 88,759 million ecu or £69,425 million in commitment appropriations and 81,877 million ecu or £64,042 million in payment appropriations. The second reading draft budget is 1,470 million ecu or £1,150 million in commitments and 3,930 million ecu or £3,074 million in payments below the financial perspective ceilings and at 1.16 per cent. of Community gross national product is substantially within the new own resources ceiling of 1.24 per cent. The following table compares the outcome of the Budget Council with the proposals in the Commission's preliminary draft budget and with the proposals in the European Parliament's draft budget, with reference to the financial perspective ceilings.

The European Parliament will consider the draft budget for 1997 at its plenary session in December. The 1996 Community budget is expected to be adopted by the Parliament on 12 December, to take effect from 1 January 1997.

The Council took no formal votes, the presidency concluding that there was the necessary majority to establish the second reading draft budget for 1997.

The Council also agreed letter of amendment No. 2 to the 1997 draft budget which provides for the financing of certain agricultural measures in connection with beef consumption.

Open-ended Investment Companies

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made with proposals for open-ended investment companies. [8175]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Regulations under the European Communities Act 1972, permitting the formation in Great Britain of the first stage of open-ended investment companies, those which fall within the scope of the undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities directive, were made on 11 November and come into force on 6 January 1997.

The Treasury is publishing today a consultation document outlining proposals to enable the formation of a second stage of open-ended investment companies, which would also be regulated by the Securities and Investments Board, with a wider range of investment powers. I am placing copies of the document in the Library of the House. Subject to the outcome of the consultations, which will continue until 24 January 1997, I hope to lay an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to bring this about. I look forward to receiving the views of the investment funds industry and other interested parties on these proposals which will bring the investment opportunities for open-ended investment companies into line with those for authorised unit trusts.

Utility Prices

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will express in real terms, and where the year of privatisation equals 100, the utility component of the retail prices index including VAT in (a) the latest available period and (b) 1979 for (i) gas prices, (ii) electricity prices, (iii) electricity and gas prices, (iv) water prices and (v) electricity, gas and water prices. [5302]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 November 1996]: The information requested is given in the table. As the table shows, even including the introduction of VAT for electricity and gas, prices have rise more slowly than overall retail prices since privatisation. Water price changes reflect the large-scale capital investment and environmental programmes to which the privatised utilities are committed.

The components of the retail prices index for electricity and gas, and for electricity, gas and water assume a privatisation year of 1990—the year that the electricity utilities were fully privatised. These figures have been deflated by the RPI, and include VAT for electricity and gas.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Air Weapons

13. Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the licensing of air weapons. [6160]

Mr. Maclean: High-powered air weapons already require a firearms certificate in the same way as other firearms. Low-powered air weapons do not, but there are restrictions on their possession and use by young people under 17.

Electronic Tagging

14. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases in respect of shoplifting, electronic tagging has been used in place of a custodial sentence. [6161]

Mr. Sackville: Since the trials began in July 1995, 48 offenders have been sentenced to a curfew order and tagged after conviction for an offence of theft, including theft from shops. It is not possible to know in which of these cases the court would have passed a custodial sentence had electronic monitoring not been available.

Kent Chief Constable

15. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet chief constables from Kent to discuss policing. [6162]

Mr. Howard: I met the chief constable on 22 November. We discussed a number of policing issues, including his initiatives for tackling crime in the county in partnership with the local community.

City Centre Crime

16. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the initiatives he is taking to reduce city centre crime. [6163]

Mr. Maclean: Our strategy for tackling crime is a four-pronged approach:

(1) ensuring that everything possible is done to prevent crime;

(2) that the police have the powers and resources they need to catch criminals;

(3) that the innocent are acquitted and the guilty convicted; and

(4) that criminals are properly punished.

North London (Policing)

17. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss the policing of north London. [6164]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the Commissioner regularly to discuss the policing of all parts of the Metropolitan area. The last such meeting was on 20 November.

European Immigration Policies

18. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts on immigration policies. [6165]

Mr. Howard: I have regular discussions on immigration matters with his counterparts, under the auspices of the Justice and Home Affairs Council.

Sex Offence Cases

19. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the use of abuse of process to frustrate trials in sex offence cases. [6166]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any recent representations about applications to stay trials in sex offence cases on the grounds of abuse of process. If the hon. Member has concerns on this issue, I should be happy to pass them on to the appropriate authorities.

Young Offenders

20. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of young offenders are not engaged in work, training or education. [6167]

Mr. Maclean: A survey at 10 police stations in 1993–94 showed that 47 per cent. of those under 21 years charged or cautioned were not engaged in work, training or education.

23. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reform the criminal justice system in respect of the treatment of young offenders. [6171]

Mr. Maclean: The Government have introduced a number of measures to improve the criminal justice system in respect of the treatment of young offenders. We have tightened up the criteria for cautioning and introduced new standards for the supervision of young offenders in the community. The Crime (Sentences) Bill provides for the extension of electronic monitoring of curfew orders to 10 to 15-year-olds. In addition. the Government intend to publish a Green Paper on preventing children and young people most at risk of offending from becoming involved in crime.

26. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the last three years the number of cases where the police have asked for charges to be brought against young offenders; and what percentage of such cases have resulted in a court conviction. [6174]

Mr. Maclean: Statistics on police charges are not available centrally. Information based on court proceedings data is given in the table.

Prosecutions of offenders aged 10 to 20 at magistrates courts and convictions at all courts, 1993 to 1995

England and Wales, Indictable offences

	Prosecutions at magistrates courts[1]	Convictions at all courts	Percentage
1993	149,100	80,900	67
1994	155,600	83,600	62
1995	150,000	81,600	63

[1] Includes the youth court.

29. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the public are protected from persistent young offenders. [6177]

Mr. Maclean: The Government have introduced a number of measures to ensure that the public are protected from persistent young offenders. We have strengthened the courts' powers for dealing with such offenders by increasing the maximum sentence for youth custody for 15 to 17-year-olds, by introducing long periods of detention for 10 to 13-year-olds for serious offences and by providing for a new sentence for persistent 12 to 14-year-old offenders.

The Crime (Sentences) Bill extends the electronic monitoring of curfew orders to 10 to 15-year-olds and gives youth courts the discretion to allow the identification of juveniles convicted of an offence.

The Government intend to publish a Green Paper on preventing children and young people most at risk of offending from becoming involved in crime.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of juvenile courts in deterring youth criminality. [6333]

Mr. Maclean: It is not the youth court itself that is intended to deter offending, but the sentences that the court passes on those whom it has found guilty. The Government collect data on re-conviction rates for sentences imposed on juvenile offenders aged 14 to 16 years. The latest available figures are for 1991 and are provided in the table.

Table 1: Reconviction rates within two years, based on the 1991 sentencing sample by age at sentence

Drug Seizures

21. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total estimated street value of the drugs seized in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [6168]

Mr. Maclean: The total estimated street value of drugs seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise was £475 million in 1993, £551 million in 1994, and £458 million in 1995.

Estimates of the street value of police seizures of illegal drugs are not collected centrally.

Police and Local Authority Co-operation

22. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make co-operation between local authorities and the police on matters of crime prevention a statutory requirement. [6170]

Mr. Maclean: None.

Holocaust Denial

24. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make holocaust denial a criminal offence. [6172]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have no such plans.

Knives

25. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the current legislation affecting the purchase by the public of knives; and if he will make a statement. [6173]

Mr. Maclean: The sale of flick-knives and gravity knives is prohibited under the Restriction of Offensive Weapons Act 1959, as amended. My right hon. and learned Friend can prohibit the sale of other weapons by specifying them in an order under section 141 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. Fourteen bladed and other articles have been prohibited in this way. My right hon. and learned Friend will consider adding further articles where they can be defined in a way which distinguishes them from articles which have legitimate purposes. There were 62 convictions for offences under these two pieces of legislation between 1985 and 1995. We have also proposed the introduction of a new offence of marketing a knife in a way which suggests a violent use for it.

Prisoners (Serving of Sentences)

27. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that convicted prisoners serve their full sentence. [6175]

Mr. Maclean: I believe that there should be greater honesty in sentencing. Accordingly, the Crime (Sentences) Bill contains provisions which will ensure that the sentence actually served will match more closely the sentence imposed by the court.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the effects of his proposals to abolish the present parole and early release arrangements. [4048]

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to amendment No. 76 to the Crime (Sentences) Bill and the associated new clause 8, which were considered in Committee on 3 December. The amendments make clear the intended effects of the Government's proposals to abolish the present parole and early release arrangements.

Homeless People (Voting Rights)

28. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in the past year concerning the voting rights of homeless people; and if he will make a statement. [6176]

Mr. Sackville: As well as a small amount of correspondence from members of the public, we have received some 15 representations from hon. Members, mostly urging us to issue guidance to electoral registration officers. In addition, a petition organised by The Big Issue was received. Officials have also been in correspondence with organisations representing the homeless. Guidance was issued in July.

Japanese Pupils (Visas)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Japanese citizens aged between 11 and 18 years held visas allowing them to study in the United Kingdom at boarding schools in each year from 1990 to 1996. [7280]

Mr. Kirkhope: The number of Japanese citizens aged 11 to 17 years who were admitted on arrival as students to the United Kingdom for more than six months were:

	Number
1990	860
1991	680
1992	890
1993	810
1994	870
1995	1,050
1996 January to September	[1]1,080

[1] Provisional.

Information on the type of education institution attended, and whether the person had an entry clearance, is not available.

Drunkenness (London)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the number of arrests for drunkenness in the Finchley and Golders Green division of the Metropolitan police during each of the past five years. [7251]

Mr. Maclean: The area of Finchley and Golders Green is policed by the Golders Green division of the Metropolitan police. The number of arrests for drunkenness on the division since 1994 is as follows:

Year	Arrests
1994	305
1995	366
1996 to date	135

Figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Police (Administrative Burdens)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing each of the recommendations in the Home Office police research group paper 3, "Opportunities for Reducing the Administrative Burdens on the Police" (1993). [7444]

Mr. Maclean: The analysis contained in police research group paper 3, which was the work of independent consultants from PA Consulting Group commissioned by my right hon. and learned Friend, provided much of the source material for the Masefield scrutiny into administrative burdens on the police in the context of the criminal justice system.

The 16 recommendations contained in PA's report are reflected in the recommendations and endorsements subsequently presented in the Masefield scrutiny report. These recommendations are being taken forward by the trial issues group. An action plan is prepared quarterly to track progress with implementing the recommendations.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the recommendations of the Masefield scrutiny report on police paperwork; what progress has been made in implementing these recommendations; and if he will place a copy of the document in the Library. [7445]

Mr. Maclean: The Masefield scrutiny into administrative burdens on the police in the context of the criminal justice system reported in June 1995. Recommendation 4 and endorsements 8 and 9 in the report concerned police paperwork on case files.

Full or phased implementation of new style abbreviated files—endorsement 8—is taking place in 40 forces with the remaining three planning to introduce the new files by 31 December 1996. These new files were designed to reduce significantly the number of administrative documents required in cases which are likely to result in a guilty plea in the magistrates court. Police forces are required to prepare and implement a programme to employ civilians to produce records of taped interviews, or ROTIs—recommendation 4. A Home Office circular issued in July 1995 asked chief officers to implement this recommendation by 31 March 1997. In the new style abbreviated files, ROTIs have been replaced with short descriptive notes, or SDNs, comprising brief accounts of admissions, any mitigating or aggravating features and other relevant material. The SDNs are being piloted for 12 months.

The scrutiny endorsed the use of dual case files by the police and Crown Prosecution Service—endorsement 9. A total of 37 forces have now implemented the dual file system, with three others planning to do so by the end of 1996.

A copy of the scrutiny report has been placed in the Library.

Merseyside Police Authority

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current funding of the Merseyside police authority. [6169]

Mr. Maclean: The Government's proposals give Merseyside police authority a total spending power of £235 million in 1997–98, an increase of £8.3 million or 3.7 per cent. over 1996–97. The increase includes £1.1 million in additional grant as Merseyside's share of funding for the recruitment of additional police officers. It would be sufficient to recruit 55 more officers in 1997–98. It is for the chief constable to decide how to allocate his resources.

WALES

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the overspend or underspend position of each trust and each health authority as at 30 September 1996; and what appraisal he has made of the overall position relative to the budget figures. [5910]

Mr. Hague: NHS trusts are required to break even taking one year with another. This can be monitored only through accruals accounting reported in the trusts' income and expenditure statement. The Welsh Office receives regular monitoring returns from trusts and the position for the period ending 30 September is set out in table 1.

The total position reveals a reported surplus of £1.7 million, which is a significant improvement on the first quarter performance. Trusts that are reporting a deficit have been advised to take appropriate steps to rectify the situation.

Health authorities are required to ensure that spending is contained within notified cash limits for the financial year. Table 2 illustrates the health authority reported spend at the end of September against the latest notified revenue cash limit. No health authority is expected to exceed its finally notified cash limit at the end of the financial year.

School and College Inspections

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department and its agencies spent in each of the last three years on (a) school inspections and (b) further education inspections; and if he will make a statement. [7236]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: This is a matter for the Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member, and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Maindy Road Rail Depot, Cardiff

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to make a decision on the planning appeal submitted by Railtrack over Cardiff county council's order to remove an office block from Maindy road rail depot. [7679]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend will issue his decisions on the appeal as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Child Labour

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he proposes to make about child labour at the forthcoming World Trade Organisation conference in Singapore. [7010]

Mr. Nelson: I will strongly support calls to encourage the International Labour Organisation in its efforts to promote the elimination of exploitative child labour worldwide.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure that goods imported into the United Kingdom are not produced by child labour. [7182]

Mr. Nelson: The Government are as strongly opposed to the exploitation of child labour as anyone, but we believe that import restrictions and other trade measures are not the way to deal with social issues.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to European Union member states about European Union policy on child labour at the World Trade Organisation interministerial conference in Singapore. [7008]

Mr. Nelson: We have made it clear to our European partners that we do not support the inclusion of trade and labour standards in the work programme of the World Trade Organisation or the establishment of a WTO working party on the issue, and the Council of Ministers has agreed to promote the primacy of the International Labour Organisation in this area.

Publicity

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what promotional and public information campaigns his Department is (a) currently running and (b) planning to run during the next six months; and for each campaign (i) how much it will cost, (1) in total and (2) to his Department, (ii) what agencies or bodies are undertaking the work and (iii) what is its planned duration. [7405]

Mr. John M. Taylor: For the purpose of this question, promotional and publicity campaigns are defined as being multi-media campaigns containing above-the-line advertising.

Cost	Agencies/Bodies undertaking the work	Planned duration
(a) CURRENTLY RUNNING
Biotechnology Means Business
(1) £1,400,000 (over 3 years)	Cogent (via COI)	3 years (1995–98)

(1) £25,000	tbd	tbd
(2) as above	—	—

[1] Funded from centrally-managed budgets.

tbd—to be decided.

On business link, the Department is currently taking stock of its promotional effort, having just completed a third wave of business link advertising. No further plans have been confirmed although it is possible that a fourth wave might be considered.

In addition to campaigns, the Department undertakes publicity projects across a wide range of media to publicise particular programmes.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department has spent on promotional or public information campaigns in each of the last five years; and how much he estimates will be spent on these campaigns during the (i) current and (ii) next financial years. [7541]

Mr. Taylor: Expenditure from centrally managed budgets for multimedia campaigns containing above-the-line advertising has been as follows:

1991–92: £3,916,000

1992–93: £4,997,000

1993–94: £3,902,000

1994–95: £4,570,000

1995–96: £4,636,000.

Comparable figures for this year and next are not yet available.

EU Pressure Equipment Directive

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment he has made of the possible impact of amendment 8 to the proposed EU pressure equipment directive upon companies employing an automatic process for the building of pressure vessels; [7729]

(2) what representations he has received regarding the proposed EU pressure equipment directive; and if he will make a statement. [7728]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The proposed EU pressure equipment directive is one of a series creating a free market in products. In negotiations on the directive, the Government have been seeking to maintain health and safety, while ensuring that the requirements are no more onerous or complex for manufacturers than necessary. One important principle has been to provide manufacturers with as wide a choice of conformity assessment procedures as possible, including the use of properly assessed and monitored quality assurance systems.

The European Parliament's amendment No. 8 seeks to restrict the use of quality assurance by requiring additional, independent product inspection for equipment in the higher risk categories. The Government are not persuaded that the amendment has benefits for health and safety but consider that increases in costs are likely for a large number of manufacturers, including those employing automatic processes for the building of pressure vessels. The Council did not agree with the European Parliament's amendments and the proposal has been referred for conciliation. During conciliation the Council will seek to persuade the European Parliament that the conformity assessment provisions of the common position text are adequate as they stand and that this amendment should be withdrawn.

Petro-coke

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will prevent the (a) construction and (b) conversion of electricity generati g stations for the use of petro-coke. [5584]

Mr. Page [holding answer 25 November 1996]: Any power station proposal which requires consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 is considered on its individual merits against the background of a policy that, as a general rule, matters such as the need for a generating station, its capacity, choice of fuel used and type of plant are commercial matters for the applicant. Such proposals must also satisfy the requirements of the Environment Agency. It would not be appropriate for me to prejudge what decision will be taken on a particular application.

Digital Television Services

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Government are taking to ensure that members of the public will be able to purchase a single set-top box capable of delivering all digital television services. [6576]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1996]: Regulations which came into force on 23 August ensure that the provision of a common interface cannot be excluded from digital set-top boxes and that conditional access providers cannot favour boxes which exclude such an interface. A common interface allows connection of alternative conditional access modules and other elements of the digital decoder such as tuners for other delivery means, thus allowing extension to all digital services.

However, as was made clear during the passage of the Broadcasting Act 1990, the Government do not consider it appropriate to mandate a common interface, a common set-top box, or provision for consumers to add additional tuner modules for cable, terrestrial or satellite to a digital set-top box. Indeed, the terms of the directive through which conditional access regulation is being implemented, and the single market regulations, do not allow the Government to mandate any such technical features. The Italian Government recently attempted to mandate technical specifications including a common interface but have been stopped by intervention from the European Commission under single market rules.

Microsystem Research

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support he is providing for microsystem research in the United Kingdom in the current year. [7284]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 3 December 1996]: Research support for microsystems in the current year is provided from several sources.

The Government contribute to the EU framework programme for information technologies, Esprit, which has so far committed 13.5 million ecu on microsystems projects, in half of which UK companies and academia are participating.

The Engineering and Physical Science Research Council's programmes for nanotechnology have a projected spend of £1.2 million in 1996–97 for academic research, supported by industry. Projects have also been funded under EPSRC's mechanical engineering programmes, which have a projected spend of £9.1 million in 1996–97.

The Department's nanotechnology programme has a projected spend of £2.5 million in 1996–97 for industrial support.

Mr. Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the financial support for microsystem research provided by European Union Governments. [7283]

Mr. Taylor [holding answer 3 December 1996]: Microsystems are specifically included in the European Union's current fourth framework programme for information technology. I have made no assessment of the support provided by individual member states.

Offshore Companies

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what mechanisms exist between the United Kingdom Government and the Governments of the (a) Isle of Man and (b) Channel Islands to ensure the regulation of companies operated by United Kingdom nationals from the United Kingdom and registered in (a) and (b). [7367]

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

Information passes regularly between regulatory bodies of the United Kingdom and the Crown dependencies. Each of the Crown dependencies regulates companies incorporated within its jurisdiction in different ways. Companies operated in the United Kingdom by United Kingdom nationals are subject to regulation under United Kingdom law in respect of activities carried out in the United Kingdom wherever they are registered.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts (Expenditure)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts had overspendings (a) in excess of £10 million, (b) in excess of £5 million and (c) in excess of £1 million, as at 30 September. [471]

Mr. Malone: All trusts are obliged to break even on income and expenditure taking one year with another.

Elderly Infirm People

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the average cost of keeping an elderly infirm person in (a) a hospital bed, (b) a nursing home and (c) a residential care home. [6722]

Mr. Burns: Information is not collected in the form requested.

Nerve Gas Attack (Tokyo)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to obtain and assess clinical data arising out of the nerve gas attack on the Tokyo subway in March 1995; when these data were passed on to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down; and what discussions his Department has held with the Ministry of Defence on these data. [6964]

Mr. Horam: In July 1995, an official from the Department attended a conference in the United States of America at which the nerve agent attacks in Tokyo and Matsumoto were discussed. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment was also represented at that conference. Since then, there have been a number of discussions between Ministry of Defence and Department of Health officials, and the Department has set up a small working group to develop guidance on managing the effects on health of incidents where chemicals, including nerve agents, are deliberately released. The group's membership includes national health service and military medical experts and staff from Porton Down.

Hospital Staff (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors and nurses have been employed in NHS hospitals in each year since 1990 in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) Doncaster and (c) Mexborough; and how many vacancies for doctors and nurses in South Yorkshire, Doncaster and Mexborough are currently unfilled. [2675]

Mr. Malone: Individual hospital units cannot be separately identified in the Department of Health's hospital and community health services work force censuses, but staff can be sub-divided between those working in hospitals and those working in the community on the basis of their area of work. The table shown gives information available centrally for South Yorkshire—defined as Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield district health authorities—and Doncaster district health authority. It is not possible separately to identify figures for Mexborough.

Notes:

[1] Learners are nurses on traditional nurse training courses and are directly employed by the NHS HCHS. Project 2000 training was introduced in 1989 and has gradually replaced traditional pre-registration nurse training. Project 2000 students are funded by bursaries. They are supernumary not employees, and are thus excluded from the count of NHS HCHS nursing staff. Figures for Project 2000 students are not available by health authority.

[2] Figures for 1993 should be treated with caution due to the effects in that year of the process of transferring responsibility for the provision of census information from regional health authorities to individual NHS trusts. Comparisons over a longer period of time are likely to give a more reliable comparison.

n/a = Not available. It is not possible to provide figures for hospital doctors below regional level before 1995 and to provide numbers of nursing and midwifery staff in hospital areas of work after 1994.

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

Information about the number of vacancies for doctors and nurses currently unfilled in South Yorkshire, including Doncaster and Mexborough, is not available centrally.

Figures on vacancies for HCHS nurses and midwives are collected by the office of manpower and economics and published in the annual reports of the review body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine; copies are in the Library.

Laryngectomies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance in respect of the provision of Claudius II for the treatment of laryngectomies; and if he will make a statement. [7107]

Mr. Burns: No. Claudius II is a telephone aid, and cannot be regarded as treatment for laryngectomy patients.

Dental Fluorosis

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken to assess the risks of dental fluorosis posed to children who drink fluoridated water and ingest fluoridated toothpaste; and if he will make a statement. [7040]

Mr. Malone: The Department of Health has not itself commissioned any research into fluoridation and fluorosis. Government policy on fluoridation is based on extensive research carried out over many decades independently of the Department, which we continue to monitor and evaluate.

Community Care Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that the special conditions attached to the community care special transitional grant are extended to five years from 30 March 1997 and that 90 per cent. of the grant available for purchasing care by the local authority is required to be spent in the independent sector. [7117]

Mr. Burns: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) on 27 November, Official Report, column 298.

Meningitis

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the geographical position and size of bacterial meningitis clusters occurring in each month over the last five years. [7678]

Mr. Horam: Enhanced surveillance of clusters of suspected meningococcal infection was instigated in April 1995. Collation of retrospective data on clusters reported before this time is incomplete. Data on the number of cases associated with clusters by region and month are shown in the tables. The definition of a cluster for reporting is:

"two or more suspected cases occurring within onset of one month in the same educational setting".

In 1996, up to the end of October, 27 clusters were reported involving a total of 94 cases. Many of these cases are not confirmed by laboratory tests. Cases associated with clusters have therefore formed a very small proportion of all cases reported this year.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those factors that his Department has evaluated as potentially enhancing the transmission of bacterial meningitis. [7674]

Mr. Horam: Meningococcal infection—meningitis and septicaemia—occurs throughout the year but infections reach a peak in the winter months. Research suggests that risk factors for meningitis include smoking, passive smoking, damp and other prevalent infections such as influenza. Group C infections are more likely in closed and semi-closed communities.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the recent cases of bacterial meningitis involving students (a) living in halls of residence and (b) attending colleges, universities and schools. [7675]

Mr. Horam: Detailed data on single cases of confirmed meningococcal infection occurring in schools, universities and colleges are not collated at a national level. From the age distribution of confirmed cases reported in 1996, 161—13 per cent.—of cases have occurred in school-age children and 278—22 per cent.—have occurred in young adults aged 15 to 24 years—many of whom will be in full-time education. Nearly one half of all cases still occur in children under five years of age.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria his Department uses to determine whether an individual is part of a high-risk group when notified of a case of meningitis. [7676]

Mr. Horam: Persons at highest risk of meningococcal disease include infants and pre-school children with a second smaller incidence occurring in adolescence. Some persons with specific immunological disorders may also be at increased risk.

People with prolonged close—household type—contact or intimate contact with an individual with the infection are at increased risk of disease compared with other persons in the community. Risk to persons with other types of contact with cases is low, but after two or more cases in the same place, for example a school, within four weeks a local assessment of risk may be performed and the definition of "high risk" group extended. This guidance is outlined in the Public Health Laboratory Service publication, "PHLS Meningococcal Infections Working Group and Public Health Medicine Environment Group. Control of meningococcal disease: guidance for consultants in communicable disease control" (communicable disease report 1995; 5: R189–195) copies of which are available in the Library.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much his Department has spent on research into (a) E. coli 0157 and (b) campylobacter in each year since 1990 and from 1 January to date; [7210]

(2) if he will list the research applications his Department has (a) granted and (b) rejected to study (i) E. coli 0157 and (ii) campylobacter in each year since 1990 and from 1 January to date. [7209]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Information on the amount spent by the Department of Health on research and surveillance into campylobacter and E. coli 0157 since 1990 can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on funding since 1993 is available by financial year only and is given in the table:

Campylobacter and E. coli Department of Health research and surveillance expenditure

£000

Financial year	Campylobacter	E. Coli
1993–94	399	185
1994–95	405	397
1995–96	702	459
1996–97[1]	608	797

[1] Amount committed to spend through contracts.

Lists of research and surveillance projects funded by the Department of Health into campylobacter and E. coli 0157 since 1990 have been placed in the Library.

In addition to the information provided in the tables, there are a number of projects which in part include research-surveillance on campylobacter and E. coli 0157. These are not included in the listings or the costings.

Many of the campylobacter and E. coli 0157 research and surveillance projects funded by the Department arose from recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food. The ACMSF's interim report on campylobacter (1993) and the report on verocytotoxin-producing Escherichia coli (1995)—copies are in the Library—made a number of recommendations for research and surveillance on these organisms. In response to these recommendations, the Department of Health held an open competition for proposals on campylobacter in 1994 and verocytotoxin-producing E. coli—VTEC—in 1995. In both competitions, projects were selected on the basis of a peer review which considered their relevance to policy objectives, feasibility, if they were of high scientific quality, did not duplicate published or currently funded work and represented good value for money.

After review, 10 of 39 campylobacter proposals and 13 of 49 VTEC proposals were approved for funding.

Since 1991, the Department of Health has rejected six E. coli and seven campylobacter research and surveillance applications which were submitted to the microbiological food safety research and surveillance programme outside the open competitions.

It would breach the applicants' confidentiality to list those applications which have been rejected.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Flooding (Newtownards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to alleviate the flooding of Ballybarnes road at Ballysalagh, Newtownards. [5844]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Road Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 27 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about flooding at Ballybarnes Road, Ballysalagh, Newtownards.

Roads Service has no plans to improve drainage along this road. While there is some evidence of limited ponding following heavy rainfall, the problem is not prolonged and is not considered to be of sufficient priority to warrant remedial works.

Prosecutions (Costs)

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current average cost in Northern Ireland of processing a prosecution. [6914]

Sir John Wheeler: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Young Offenders

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of indictable offences was accounted for by those aged 14 to 25 years in each of the last five years. [6918]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

	Total	Age 14 to 25	Percentage
Persons proceeded against for indictable offences
1991	10,016	6,017	60
1992	9,857	5,682	58
1993	10,384	5,998	58
1994	9,888	5,559	56
1995	10,273	5,711	56

1994	8,345	4,784	57
1995	8,709	4,972	57

Burglaries

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of burglaries in each of the last five years was committed by people aged under 21 years. [6916]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

	Total	Under 21	Percentage
Persons proceeded against for burglary offences
1991	1,330	676	51
1992	1,326	648	49
1993	1,310	613	47
1994	1,142	573	50
1995	1,107	552	50
Persons found guilty of burglary offences
1991	1,208	635	53
1992	1,149	589	51
1993	1,114	533	48
1994	979	501	51
1995	951	495	52

These figures relate to persons proceeded against and found guilty where burglary was the primary offence.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the percentage change in the number of burglaries in Northern Ireland since 1979. [6915]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of burglaries recorded in Northern Ireland was 18,433 in 1979 and 16,457 in 1995. The change is therefore a reduction of 10.7 per cent.

Chinese Business Men (Attacks)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department is taking to deal with (1) the murders in 1996 of (a) Simon Tang in Carrickfergus and (b) Albert Leung in Antrim and (2) other violent attacks on Chinese business men and their families; and if he will make a statement. [6896]

Sir John Wheeler: 1. Since the murder of Mr. Tang at his business premises on 24 June, there has been a protracted investigation. HOLMES investigation facilities have been used in managing the investigation.

A number of specific appeals have been made for information, through the press and news media. On 5 November, a poster campaign was launched, appealing for information and offering a reward of £2,000—money raised by the Chinese Welfare Association. This information will shortly also be available on the RUC Internet site.

The inquiry continues, overseen by a detective superintendent.

Mr. Leung was not murdered; he died in hospital on 12 November. He had been the subject of a robbery at his home on 13 May, but received only minor injuries which did not contribute to his death. This case is being investigated as in 2 below.

2. All reported attacks on Chinese business men and their families have received full and proper investigations by the RUC.

On the directions of the then deputy chief constable (operations) a team of CID officers, under the command of the serious crime squad, was formed to conduct investigations into offences of robbery and aggravated burglary at the homes of Chinese business people.

On 13 May, an incident room was set up in Antrim RUC station, resourced by a HOLMES team and an investigation team. The team currently consists of one D/chief inspector, one D/sergeant and seven D/constables.

Inquiries into the attacks are continuing. They appear to be perpetrated by professional criminals.

On 28 May, a Chinese crime conference was held in Belfast, attended by Mr. Flanagan with representatives from community affairs, crime prevention and the serious crime squad. The police officers in attendance give advice on crime prevention measures and answered questions on all aspects of the police investigations into the attacks on the homes of the Chinese community.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have been convicted and sentenced for scheduled offences committed since 31 August 1994. [6749]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of people found guilty of scheduled offences, at 31 October 1996, committed from 1 September 1994 to 30 September 1996 is 183.

Crime Statistics

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of men in each age group by which figures are classified between 16 and 65 years have been (a) cautioned and (b) convicted for an offence. [6917]

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to provide accurate figures.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which public sector pension schemes provided injury benefit pension awards; what number of pensioners are involved; and in each case if the benefit is taxable. [7188]

Sir John Wheeler: The following public sector pension schemes provide injury benefit pension awards. The number of pensioners involved per scheme, in terms of the number in receipt of injury benefit pensions, is shown alongside each scheme:

	Number
Principal civil service pension scheme (NI)	56
Royal Ulster Constabulary scheme	176
Fire Service	54
Health Service scheme	94
Northern Ireland local government officer scheme	n/a

Details concerning the number of awards paid under the terms of the local government officers scheme are not held centrally and it is not possible to provide a figure in this case.

None of the injury benefit pension awards is taxable.

Sainsbury's Stores

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the proposed opening hours of the new Sainsbury's stores in Northern Ireland. [7018]

Mr. Moss: No representations have been received about the opening hours of the new Sainsbury's stores.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from Sainsbury's regarding proposed opening hours for its new stores in Northern Ireland. [7019]

Mr. Moss: No representations have been received from Sainsbury's about the opening hours of its new stores.

Sunday Trading

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on opening hours for shops on Sundays in Northern Ireland. [7017]

Mr. Moss: The opening hours of shops on Sundays in Northern Ireland are regulated by the Shops Act (Northern Ireland) 1946, which is currently under review. With some exceptions, it prohibits shops from opening on a Sunday other than for the sale of a limited list of goods and transactions. Comments on the proposal for a draft Shops (Sunday Trading etc.) (NI) Order, intended partially to deregulate the present restrictions on Sunday trading, are now being considered.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC officers, by rank, have been the subject of (a) disciplinary investigations, (b) suspension and (c) disciplinary charges arising from participation in public marches and partisan demonstrations in (i) July 1996, and (ii) August 1996; and what are the outcomes and penalties imposed in any subsequent prosecution or disciplinary proceedings. [6094]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 4 December 1996]: I understand that a total of seven RUC officers—five part-time—are the subject of on-going disciplinary investigations arising out of parades and demonstrations during July and August 1996.

The investigations relate to two incidents in July 1996 and one in August 1996. Six of the officers have been suspended from duty.

All of the investigations are still active and, to date, no disciplinary charges have been preferred.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what fraud prevention targets he set for housing benefit administrations in 1995–96 and 1996–97; which administrations met those targets and which did not; and how much subsidy was withheld. [4922]

Mr. Heald: Each local authority is set a threshold of weekly benefit savings—WBS—to be made through detection of housing and council tax benefit fraud. WBS is a measure of the amount of benefit which would have been paid incorrectly had the fraud not been stopped. Local authorities can earn additional subsidy through good performance in relation to their WBS thresholds, and can have subsidy withheld for poor performance.

Tables showing details of the 1995–96 and 1996–97 figures have been placed in the Library.

Regulations

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the regulation-making powers and the regulations which he has introduced under them in the provisions of the (i) Social Security Act 1988, (ii) Social Security Act 1989, (iii) Social Security Act 1990, (iv) Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Act 1991, (v) Child Support Act 1991, (vi) Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Act 1994, (vii) Jobseekers Act 1995, (viii) Pensions Act 1995 and (ix) Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [4793]

Mr. Burt: The information has been placed in the Library.

Some of the listed sets of regulations also include provisions made under Acts other than those specified in your question.

In some instances provisions contained in the Acts specified in your question insert regulation-making provisions in the text of other Acts which are not specified. The lists include regulations made under such provisions.

Benefits Agency (Wales)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the consultees sent copies of the Benefits Agency document, "Benefits Agency Wales: Blueprint for the Future"; [5947]

(2) if he will extend the consultation period with regard to the document, "Benefits Agency Wales: Blueprint for the Future". [5946]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hanson, dated 4 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking if he will list the consultees sent copies of the Benefits Agency document, BA Wales Blueprint for the future; and if he will extend the consultation period with regard to the document BA Wales blueprint for the future.

All staff and trade union representatives in Wales received a copy of the document BA Wales, Blueprint for the future. All other consulted, as at 21 November 1996, are listed in the attached annex.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Special Hardship and Reduced Earnings Allowances

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases which have gone to appeal in respect of (a) the special hardship allowance and (b) the reduced earnings allowance the claimants were successful; and what proportion these constituted of the total number of appeals. [6126]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been made against the decision to lower the level of reduced earnings allowance where claimants have evidence that they were guaranteed payments for life; how many have been successful; when such successful claimants received their arrears; and if he will make a statement. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which Benefits Agency offices he has visited in Wales since his appointment. [6594]

Mr. Roger Evans: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not visited any Benefits Agency offices in Wales. Since September 1995, I have visited six Benefits Agency offices in Wales.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will visit each Benefits Agency office in Wales. [6595]

Mr. Evans: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

I intend to maintain my programme of visiting Benefits Agency offices in Wales.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases are currently being dealt with by the Child Support Agency. [6602]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 4 December 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency cases.

The Agency is currently dealing with approximately 962,000 cases.

I hope this is helpful.

Income Support (Yorkshire)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for income support were dealt with in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96 in (i) Calderdale, (ii) Kirklees and (iii) Bradford; how many of those claims were refused because the applicant was considered not habitually resident in the United Kingdom; what the nationality of those applicants was; how many of those which were refused (a) on the grounds of not being habitually resident and (b) for other reasons went on to appeal; and how many of those appeals were successful. [6819]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Alice Mahon, dated 4 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many claims for Income Support (IS) were dealt wit in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96 in (i) Calderdale, (ii) Kirkless and (iii) Bradford; how many of those claims were refused because the applicant was considered not habitually resident in the United Kingdom; what the nationality of the applicant was; how many of those which were refused went on to appeal; and how many of those appeals were successful.

The information is not available in the format requested. Benefits Agency (BA) Districts were not required to maintain Habitual Residence Test statistics prior to October 1994.

Statistics are not kept which relate to the number of customers who failed the Habitual Residence Test and appealed; nor how many of those appeals were successful.

Statistics on Habitual Residence Test are collated which relate to the number of IS claims processed and the number of applicants who failed the test. The nationality of customers is not recorded but a breakdown of citizenship by United Kingdom (UK), European Economic Area (EEA) and others is maintained. This information is in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Districts	Subjects	1994–95	1995–96
Bradford	IS Claims processed	30,103	30,418
	HRT failures—EEA citizens	'23	29
	HRT failures—UK citizens	'47	101
	HRT failures—Other citizens	'46	77
Kirklees	IS Claims processed	28,594	28,207
	HRT failures—EEA citizens	'3	14
	HRT failures—UK citizens	'21	48
	HRT failures—Other citizens	'5	16
Yorkshire Pennine	IS Claims processed	26,071	25,846
	HRT failures—EEA citizens	'7	6
	HRT failures—UK citizens	'20	79
	HRT failures—Other citizens	'12	12

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

' BA districts were not required to maintain habitual residence test statistics prior to October 1994.

Bradford district includes the offices of Bradford East, Bradford South and Bradford West.

Kirklees district includes the offices of Dewsbury and Huddersfield.

Yorkshire Pennine district, which covers the Calderdale area, includes the offices of Halifax, Keighley and Skipton.

Pensioners (Income Support)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners would be entitled to income support in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2010–11 if income support rates were increased in 1998 and subsequent years in line with average earnings and the basic pension in line with (i) average earnings and (ii) prices. [7690]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Number of pensioners in receipt of income support, assuming that income support is increased in line with average earnings in 1998 and subsequent years

	2000–01	2010–11
Basic retirement pension increasing in line with average earnings	1,600,000	1,000,000
Basic retirement pension increasing in line with prices	1,700,000	1,400,000

1. Pensioners are defined as those single at state pension age or above, or couples in which the husband is at state pension age or above.

2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 100,000.

3. Estimates have been made using pension simulation (Pensim) and are based on a number of economic and behavioural assumptions, in particular that prices increase by an average of 3.8 per cent. per year (although this varies between years), and that average earnings increase by 1.5 per cent. per year above prices. Further details of the methodology and assumptions used by Pensim are outlined in GES working paper no. 129 "PENSIM: A Dynamic Simulation Model of Pensioner Incomes", a copy of which is available in the Library.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated contribution income of the national insurance fund in each year from 1996–97 to 2001–01 and in (a) 2010–11, (b) 2020–21, and (c) 2030–31, assuming that in 1998 and subsequent years the lower and upper earnings limits rise (i) in line with prices, (ii) in line with earnings and (iii) the lower limit in line with prices and the upper limit in line with earnings; and what would be the additional income in each case if the upper limit were raised in April 1998 to the same proportion of average earnings as in April 1979. [7691]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available is in the table.

National insurance fund contribution income: £ billion at 1994–95 prices

SCOTLAND

Recycling

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to legislate to require companies in Scotland to include a minimum level of recycled content within packaging for products on sale. [6824]

Mr. Kynoch: The Government will introduce regulations on producer responsibility for packaging early next year. These will oblige companies in the packaging chain to recover and recycle specific percentages of packaging waste. This will provide an incentive to create markets for recycled materials, including materials for use in packaging, because industry will share the costs of the proposals.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to introduce a temporary grant scheme to assist waste collection authorities in setting up and running recycling programmes over the next five years; [6813]

(2) what resources will be allocated to waste collection authorities for 1997–98 to enable them to develop waste recycling schemes to meet Government targets. [6823]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the local government finance settlement for 1997–98 on Budget day; details of its distribution should be with individual councils before Christmas. It will be for individual authorities to determine local priorities and how to allocate their resources across the range of services they provide. We have no plans to introduce a temporary grant for the development of recycling projects.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the advantages of exempting local authorities as waste collection authorities in Scotland from liability for landfill tax when the price for recycled materials they have collected falls to zero. [6828]

Mr. Kynoch: There are no plans to make this assessment. The scope of the tax is a matter for consideration by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what advice his Department issues to waste collection authorities about variations in price available for waste materials collected for recycling by waste collection authorities; [6826]

(2) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the fluctuation in price of waste materials collected for recycling by waste collection authorities. [6825]

Mr. Kynoch: It is for individual authorities to consider possible price variations when making a commercial judgment on whether recycling of a specific type of material is sustainable in both environmental and economic terms. As a consequence, the Scottish Office has offered no specific advice to authorities on this matter, nor has it commissioned or evaluated any research into price levels. The Government's recycling advisory unit has, however, published a series of reports identifying barriers and opportunities which exist for the recycling of various materials.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations he has received from waste collection authorities about waste recycling targets and the setting up of schemes to meet those targets; [6822]

(2) what targets his Department has set for waste collection authorities recycling by 2000; and if he will make a statement. [6821]

Mr. Kynoch: The representations received by my right hon. Friend have focused generally on price fluctuations for recycled material, the implications this has for recycling targets and on the general issue of resources.

In the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200, published in 1990, the Government set a target of recycling half the recyclable element of all household waste by 2000. This is a general target, not binding on individual authorities. It equates broadly to the target of 25 per cent. of all household waste.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the grants made available through the environmental action fund to the voluntary sector running recycling projects by amounts awarded in each local authority area in Scotland. [6812]

Mr. Kynoch: The environmental action fund does not support projects in Scotland. The fund's Scottish equivalent is the special grants (environmental) programme.

Details of grants awarded under the programme to voluntary bodies involved in recycling projects in Scotland since 1992–93 are set out in the table:

Organisation	Financial years	Amount £	Local authority area(s)
Environment Centre, Edinburgh	1992–93	4,500	Not applicable
Recycling Advisory Group, Scotland	1996–97	8,000	Not applicable

Tayside Scrapstore	1993–94	1,425	Dundee
Lothian and Edinburgh Environmental Partnership	1995–96	5,000	Edinburgh, Midlothian and East Lothian

[1] The table includes a future commitment to fund the Recycling Advisory Group Scotland in 1997–98 and 1998–99.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Scottish Environment Protection Agency to publish its strategy for waste recycling in Scotland. [6829]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Environment Protection Agency intends to publish early next year for consultation a draft strategy covering its policies in relation to the recovery and disposal of waste in Scotland, including recycling.

Air Passenger Duty

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to exempt the Glasgow—Tiree air service from air passenger duty. [6756]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Taxation issues, including the level of air passenger duty, are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which air routes in Scotland are currently not exempt from the air passenger duty in the highlands and islands. [6754]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All routes operated by aircraft of 10 tonnes or more maximum take-off weight or seating 20 or more passengers are not exempt from air passenger duty.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in the past year in favour of lifting the air passenger duty on the Glasgow—Tiree route. [6755]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One representation has been received.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent in each of the last five financial years promoting the development of GP fundholding; and what initiatives have been undertaken to do this. [7165]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Expenditure incurred by the Department in developing fundholding is largely indirect costs, and cannot be separately identified. A specific initiative has however been undertaken to develop models of total purchasing in which a budget is devolved to groups of practices to purchase all community and hospital health care for their patients. Six total purchasing pilots were established in 1995–96 in Scotland and a further site was added in 1996–97. The total cost of the initiative was £1.4 million in 1995–96 and £1.5 million in 1996–97.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis the management allowances payable to GP fundholders are calculated; and what are the maximum and minimum amounts a fundholding practice can receive. [7166]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Within the limits set down, the management allowance payable is for health boards to determine on the basis of information provided by GP fundholders in their practice plans. Before agreeing the amount for each practice, the health board must be satisfied that it represents value for money. From 1 April 1996, the maximum allowances available are calculated as follows:

Standard fundholding practices
Fixed standard fundholding allowance (per fund)	28,008
List size allowance per patient:
for the first 0–6,999	1.93
then 7,000–10,999	1.65
then 11,000–14,999	1.56
then 15,000–20,999	1.20
then 20,000+	1.05
Site allowance (for each major branch surgery)	668
Standard fundholding group allowance (for each practice in excess of one in a single fund)	1,439
Primary care purchasing practices
Fixed primary care purchasing allowance (per fund)	14,135
Site allowance (for each major branch surgery)	650
Standard primary care purchasing group allowance (for each practice in excess of one in a single fund)	1,250

There is no minimum management allowance. The allowances listed are the maximum which fundholding practices are permitted to spend for fund management purposes.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) for each health board area in Scotland and (b) for the whole of Scotland (i) the amount spent on management allowances for GP fundholders and (ii) the number of GP fundholding practices in each year since 1990–91. [7167]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Expenditure on management allowances for general practitioner fundholding practices in the period 1990–91 to 1995–96 is set out in table 1. The number of general practitioner fundholding practices from 1990–91 is set out in table 2.

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to consider Highlands and Islands Enterprise's request for grant-aided expenditure on the proposed Cairn Gorm funicular railway. [7096]

Mr. Kynoch: Highlands and Islands Enterprise has sought the consent of my right hon. Friend for the provision of financial assistance for the Cairn Gorm funicular railway. Consideration of this request will not be completed until after the planning issues have been resolved.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received about the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm; and how many of these oppose the proposal. [7094]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend has received a total of 2,840 letters about the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm. Of these, 2,672 oppose the development.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects Scottish Natural Heritage to conclude a section 50 agreement under the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 with the developers of the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm. [7093]

Mr. Kynoch: I understand that Scottish Natural Heritage has now reached agreement with the Highland council on all issues of principle relating to the drafting of the section 50 agreement. It is likely, therefore, that all parties will be in a position to conclude the section 50 agreement in the near future.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources resolution concerning the proposed Cairn Gorm funicular railway made at its meeting in Montreal. [7095]

Mr. Kynoch: The resolution passed by the IUCN meeting in Montreal called on the UK Government to evaluate alternative development options to the proposed funicular railway in the Cairngorms. The resolution failed to recognise that a planning application has been submitted for the construction of a funicular railway, and that this has to be considered according to the statutory rules governing all planning applications. If a planning application for an alternative scheme is lodged, this will be considered in the usual way.

Legal Aid

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reciprocal arrangements exist throughout the world for British nationals requiring assistance with the costs of legal action on a comparable basis to foreign nationals applying for legal aid within the United Kingdom. [7168]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are reciprocal arrangements between the United Kingdom and a number of countries worldwide, which are detailed and complex. I will write further to the hon. Member on this matter.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by the Legal Aid Board on applications for legal aid (a) lodged by foreign nationals and (b) lodged by foreign nationals resident outside (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK in each of the last five financial year. [7043]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not collected by the board in the form asked for, but it is estimated that the annual cost of applications submitted to the Scottish Legal Aid Board by foreign nationals is between £60,000 and £75,000.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) how many applications have been lodged for legal aid in Scotland, (b) the total cost of meeting applications for legal aid, (c) the number of successful applications for legal aid, (d) how many applications have been discovered by the Legal Aid Board to give false or misleading information, (e) the amount claimed in respect of applications for legal aid giving false or misleading information, (f) how much money was recouped by the Legal Aid Board in respect of applications giving false or misleading information, (g) how many applications for legal aid giving false or misleading information were the subject of reports to the legal authorities and (h) in how many cases prosecutions resulted from legal aid applications in which false or misleading information was given for each of the last three financial years. [7003]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the tables.

[1] The number of prosecution cases in 1995–96 includes cases reported to the legal authorities in 1994–95.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what powers exist to prosecute individuals submitting applications for legal aid who give false or misleading information about their personal circumstances; [7004]

(2) what powers Ministers have to intervene in the handling of legal aid matters by the chief executive of the Legal Aid Board; and what powers the chief executive of the Legal Aid Board has to determine that no legal action should be taken in respect of applications for legal aid giving false or misleading information. [7124]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under section 3(4) of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986, the board is obliged to have regard, in the exercise of its functions, to such guidance as may from time to time be given to it by the Secretary of State. However, in terms of section 3(5) it is not appropriate for such guidance to relate to the consideration or disposal of applications for legal aid or advice and assistance.

It is a criminal offence in terms of section 35 of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 for a person seeking or receiving legal aid wilfully to fail to comply with any regulations as to the information to be furnished by them or for the purposes of obtaining legal aid knowingly to make a false statement or false representations. In cases where officers of the board believe that a criminal offence has been committed, a report will be made to the police, or to the procurator fiscal, who will decide whether proceedings should be instituted. However, officers of the board may take the view that, while the making of an untrue statement or failure to disclose a material fact by an applicant may trigger regulation 32 of the Civil Legal Aid (Scotland) Regulations 1996, or regulation 18 of the Criminal Legal Aid (Scotland) Regulations 1996, or regulation 18 of the Criminal Legal Aid (Scotland) Regulations 1996, and result in the termination of legal aid and/or the clawback of moneys, the conduct of the assisted person does not amount to a criminal offence under section 35 of the Act. In reaching such a decision, officers of the board have regard to the full circumstances of the case, including any representations made by, or on behalf of, the assisted person.

Cairngorms

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to apply for a world heritage site listing for the Cairngorms; and if he will make a statement. [7098]

Mr. Kynoch: World heritage site status will be considered only where a high standard of management can be demonstrated. The Cairngorm partnership, which we set up to provide workable and sustainable strategies for the area, is currently consulting on its draft management plan. Once an agreed strategy is in place and significant progress has been made in its implementation, we shall be in a position to take forward the case for world heritage site listing for the Cairngorms.

Bowel Cancer

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into trends in the rates of bowel cancer in the west of Scotland over the last five years. [7005]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office commissioned research into bowel cancer in Scotland as a whole, totalling £679,047, between 1991 and 1995. Information on trends in the rates of bowel cancer, specifically in the west of Scotland, between 1990 and 1994—the latest years for which figures are available—is set out in the table.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of bowel cancer have been recorded for each health board area in Scotland for each of the last five years. [7006]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of registered cases of bowel cancer for each health board area in Scotland since 1990 is set out below. Information for 1995 is currently being compiled.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) for each health board area in Scotland and (b) for Scotland as a whole (i) the amount raised through NHS prescription charges, (ii) the number of prescriptions paid for and (iii) the average charge levied for each prescription for each financial year since 1987 and for the first six months of 1996–97. [7169]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for each health board for the financial years 1987–88 to 1995–96 and for the first six months of 1996–97 is set out in the tables.

The amount raised through NHS prescription charges shows the charges paid by patients in respect of drugs and appliances and prescription charges recovered from patients under health board post-dispensing checking arrangements. The amounts shown do not include the sums collected in respect of the sales of pre-payment certificates which are not deemed to be the payment of a charge under the NHS (Charges for Drugs and Appliances) (Scotland) Regulations 1989, as amended.

The average charge levied for each prescription item has been calculated by dividing the total income from NHS prescriptions, which includes income generated through the sale of pre-payment certificates, by the total number of prescription items dispensed.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by (a) the Scottish Office Home and Health Department and (b) the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department on research into (i) E. coli 0157 and (ii) campylobacter in each year since 1990, and from 1 January to date. [7206]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 2 December 1996]: The information requested is set out in the tables. The majority of research in this area is funded by the Departments of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, but in the light of the current outbreak in Scotland, my Department will review with those Departments the future funding of research into E. coli 0157 and campylobacter.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the research applications his Department has (a) granted and (b) rejected to study (i) E. coli 0157 and (ii) campylobacter in each year since 1990, and from 1 January to date. [7207]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 2 December 1996]: Eleven research applications were submitted to the Scottish Office between 1990 and 1996, of which eight were successful and three unsuccessful. The latter projects were rejected following assessment by external referees and the expert research committee which advises my Department on the grounds that they were either of insufficient scientific quality or were in the area of basic science and had little immediate relevance to public health and clinical practice. The applications are listed in the table.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made for this year's review of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989; and how observations from interested persons or organisations should be submitted for consideration. [8294]

Mr. Howard: I am pleased to say that Mr. John Rowe QC has accepted my invitation to carry out the annual review of the Act for a further two years.

Written observations on the operation of the Act should be submitted to Mr. Rowe, c/o room 647, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's gate, London SW1H 9AT, by 15 January 1997.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7561]

Mr. Boswell: Such information is disaggregated and is not readily available. No Christmas trees will be bought with public funds for the Department's headquarters.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new plans he has in respect of using set-aside land to improve the environment. [7995]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister for Rural Affairs gave him on 18 July, Official Report, column 1295. These changes have been welcomed by conservation organisations.

Potatoes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the legislation for Great Britain which corresponds to the statutory rules of Northern Ireland 1996, No. 524, relating to potatoes originating in the Netherlands. [7921]

Mr. Boswell: The corresponding legislation is the Potatoes Originating in the Netherlands Regulations 1996, statutory instrument 1996 No. 2563. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Tradeable Permits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for tradeable permits for (a) sulphur dioxide discharges and (b) water discharges for industry. [7230]

Mr. Clappison: A possible role for tradeable permits in relation to sulphur dioxide emissions was discussed in the consultation paper on a national strategy for meeting the UK's commitments under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe second sulphur protocol. The outcome of that consultation will be announced later this year.

The Government will also shortly be publishing a discussion paper on the scope for economic instruments to be used in respect of water pollution, including the potential to introduce tradeable permits for discharges from industry.

Private Sector Housing (Single Rooms)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the availability of single, non-self-contained rooms in the private sector. [7241]

Mr. Clappison: The rental market is flexible, as evidenced by the recent growth in student accommodation. We believe that it will respond to changes in demand arising from the new housing benefit rules that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security intends to introduce from October 1997 for single people under 60. To encourage people who have spare rooms in their house to let them out, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the Budget an increase in the current rent-a-room threshold of £3,250. From April 1997, rental income of up to £4,250 will be exempt from tax.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of (a) the number of single under-60s living in private deregulated accommodation and (b) the proportion of that accommodation which consists of single, non-self-contained rooms. [7242]

Mr. Clappison: An estimated 430,000 people aged under 60 formed one-person households in the deregulated private rented sector in England in 1995–96, and of these 70,000 were in single non-self-contained rooms. A further 670,000 single people were in house-shares or flat-shares in the deregulated sector. The number of these who had single non-self-contained rooms is not known, although it is likely to be the large majority.

These estimates are from the 1995–96 survey of housing in England and, like all estimates from sample surveys, are subject to sampling variability. The deregulated sector has been taken as all private lettings other than regulated lettings and those not accessible to the public. Single people have been taken as those not living as one of a couple or as a lone parent with a dependent child.

Bathing Water

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to include statistics on UK compliance with EU bathing water directive standards, in addition to those for coliforms, in the next edition of "The Environment in Your Pocket" yearbook. [7448]

Mr. Clappison: The content of the 1997 edition of "The Environment in your Pocket" has yet to be decided. However, it is likely that it will again include one or two items on bathing waters, as in the 1996 edition, but there is a limit to what can be included in a booklet of this size.

The information given in "The Environment in your Pocket" is a distillation of some of the key statistics published in detail in the annual "Digest of Environmental Statistics". Full, detailed statistics on performance of all bathing waters against bathing water directive standards for all parameters for which a mandatory standard is set will continue to be published in "Digest No. 19" in 1997 and on the Internet World Wide Web site—address: http://www.open.gov.uk/doe/epsim.

Seals

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what direct support in (a) cash and (b) other forms his Department has offered to organisations actively engaged in caring for ill and injured seals in the United Kingdom. [7390]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 December 1996]: From a search of available information, my Department has not directly offered any cash support to organisations actively involved in caring for ill and injured seals in the United Kingdom. However, in conjunction with the Welsh Office, my Department is providing significant funding for investigations of marine mammal strandings, including seals, in England and Wales in order to monitor causes of disease and death and changes in their patterns of incidence.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many post mortems carried out on seals from west Wales have established the presence of the herpes virus in the last two months. [7392]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 December 1996]: Five post mortems were conducted on grey seals washed up on the west Wales coast in the last two months under the Government-funded marine mammals strandings project. None of the carcases had lesions consistent with seal herpes virus infection. Post mortem examination of a larger number of carcases was not possible due in some cases to the decomposed state of the stranded animals and others being washed back to sea before collection was possible.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests his Department has received for help from organisations actively involved in caring for ill or injured seals in the last 10 years. [7394]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 December 1996]: From a search of available information, my Department appears not to have received any requests for help from organisations actively involved in caring for ill and injured seals in the last 10 years.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many post mortems have been carried out on dead seals on his Department's behalf by the Zoological Society of London and by Liverpool university in each of the last five years. [7391]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The table records the numbers of post mortem examinations of stranded seals which the Zoological Society of London has carried out under contract to my Department during the last five years.

1994	1	4	0	20
1995	1	3	0	5
1996	0	1	0	5
Total	6	38	1	79

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to provide information gained from post mortem reports on dead seals to those individuals and organisations actively engaged in caring for seals; and if he will make a statement. [7393]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 December 1996]: Results of post mortem investigations carried out as part of the Government-funded marine mammals strandings project are periodically published in scientific journals. Data are also available via published annual and five-yearly reports.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what (a) discussions and (b) exchanges of information have taken place between his Department and the seal rehabilitation and research centre, Pieterburen, the Netherlands, and Professor Osterhaus of Erasmus university, Rotterdam, about the discovery of a herpes virus in dead Atlantic grey seal pups washed ashore in south-west Wales in recent weeks. [7395]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 December 1996]: No discussions or exchanges of information have taken place between my Department and the seal rehabilitation and research centre, Pieterburen, or Professor Osterhaus or Erasmus university, Rotterdam. However, under the marine mammals strandings project, results of post mortem investigations are made available via published articles and reports. The information contributes to an international pool of knowledge on the autecology of marine mammal species.

SCOTLAND

Funicular Railway, Cairn Gorm

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to ensure that a section 50 agreement between Scottish National Heritage and the developers of the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm conforms to the requirements of the EU birds and habitats directives (79/409 and 92/43). [7097]

Mr. Kynoch: I understand that the Highland council has indicated that planning permission for the development of a funicular railway on Cairn Gorm will be conditional on completion of an agreement under section 50 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 and section 49A of the Countryside (Scotland) Act 1967, designed primarily to ensure that there is no breach of the birds and habitats directives, and the withdrawal of the objection lodged by Scottish Natural Heritage. Scottish Natural Heritage, which has a statutory duty to exercise its nature conservation functions to secure compliance with the habitats directive, will withdraw its objection only if it is satisfied that the section 50 agreement will ensure that the operation of the funicular railway would not result in a breach of the requirements of the directives.

Deaths

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths were registered in Scotland between (a) 1 April and 30 September 1994, (b) 1 October 1994 and 31 March 1995, (c) 1 April 1995 and 30 September 1995 and (d) 1 October 1995 and 31 March 1996 for people aged (i) 60 to 69, (ii) 70 to 79, (iii) over 80 years of age and (iv) in total. [7421]

Food Poisoning

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of food poisoning have been diagnosed in each of the last 10 years in each health board area in Scotland; and how many people were resident in each health board area during this period. [7431]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the tables. The information in the first table relates to notifications of cases of food poisoning to the Common Services Agency for the Scottish health service.

Public Defender Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposals for a public defender service. [7515]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Clause 45 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill seeks to empower the Scottish Legal Aid Board to employ solicitors to provide criminal legal assistance, the aim being to set up pilot studies to assess the realistic cost of criminal legal assistance and to compare the costs and benefits of in-house and external provision. In Committee, I undertook to clarify this power by providing for the number of solicitors to be employed by the board to be restricted to six, for the Secretary of State to be required to report to Parliament within three years of the provisions coming into force and for the provisions to lapse five years after coming into force, subject to any transitional arrangements. I shall bring forward amendments to this effect on Report.

Overseas Travel (Diseases)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much it has cost the national health service in Scotland to administer immunisations against rare or tropical diseases to people travelling abroad from the United Kingdom; [7530]

(2) how much the national health service spent in the last financial year treating rare or tropical diseases contracted by visitors to foreign countries. [7529]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not collected.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year. [7580]

(2) how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7558]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Christmas cards will be sent to some organisations and individuals who have worked closely with the Department and its agencies during the past year. The precise numbers and total costs are not yet available. Four fir trees grown in Scotland have been purchased for buildings in Edinburgh and Glasgow at a cost, including containers, of £115 each. Decorations purchased in previous years will be reused. The total labour costs of delivering, installing, decorating, lighting, dismantling, removing and recycling the trees are estimated to be £550.

Roads Programme

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the Budget statement on the Scotland roads programme; and if he will make a statement. [7831]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will make a statement on these matters in the near future.

Community Care

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the costs of preparing and producing the report on the provision of community care services in Angus, Dundee and Perth and Kinross. [7815]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The costs of preparing and producing the report on the provision of community care services in Angus, Dundee and Perth and Kinross were as follows:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current estimate of the number of children dying of hunger and disease each week in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [7522]

Dr. Liam Fox: We do not have reliable estimates. Figures produced by the Government of Iraq cannot be relied upon, given their history of deceit.

This year we have spent some £6 million on emergency assistance for Iraq through non-governmental organisations and United Nations agencies. Of this, some £1.6 million was targeted on children's needs—£0.5 million in northern Iraq and £1.1 million in Baghdad-controlled Iraq.

The Government are pleased that Iraq has now finally agreed to the implementation of Security Council resolution 986, as we have urged them to do since its adoption in April 1995. Saddam Hussein's refusal to implement it for so long has caused much unnecessary suffering for the Iraqi people.

Paraguay

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government of Paraguay are required to settle the indigenous peoples' land claims in the Paraguayan Chaco before the second phase of the EU project on sustainable development in the Paraguayan Chaco begins; and if this is a precondition for the United Kingdom Government voting for the second phase to proceed. [7704]

Dr. Liam Fox: With other EU member states, we approved a proposal for the sustainable development of the Chaco region of Paraguay in September 1994. Approval was given subject to several conditions, one of them being that the Government of Paraguay would be required to settle the indigenous peoples' land claims in the project region before the start of the second operational phase. UK support for the second phase of the project remains conditional on this requirement being met.

Indonesia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 1980 the prospect of arms sales for United Kingdom companies has been a factor in the granting of aid to Indonesia. [7527]

Dr. Liam Fox: In no instance has the prospect of arms sales been a factor in decisions by the Overseas Development Administration concerning the granting of aid to Indonesia.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Yorkshire County Cricket Club

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the eligibility for EU and lottery funds of the proposed move of Yorkshire county cricket club to Wakefield. [7037]

Mr. Sproat: It would not be appropriate for me to comment at this stage on the eligibility of possible applications by Wakefield metropolitan city council for European and national lottery funding for the proposed new ground for Yorkshire county cricket club in Wakefield. Any such applications will be treated on their merits. In general terms, applications to the European structural fund must demonstrate that new investment will be attracted to the region in which the project is sited, while applications for lottery moneys for sports projects must demonstrate that the proposed facilities will benefit the whole community. The Sports Council has already advised YCCC that applications to the lottery sports fund for spectator accommodation currently have relatively low priority, but the policy is under review, in discussion with a number of sports including cricket.

TRANSPORT

A205, Catford

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the status of the A205 Catford town centre improvement within the trunk roads programme; and when he expects construction to start. [7385]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 6 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the A205 Catford Town Centre improvement scheme.

The Secretary of State announced on 26 November that this scheme has been retained in the trunk road programme. However, the planning consent which was granted to the Greater London Council has lapsed and we propose to publish fresh draft Orders under the Highways Act 1980. It is therefore too early to say when construction will start. That will depend upon the satisfactory completion of the statutory planning procedures and the continuing availability of funds.

Publicity

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what promotional and public information campaigns his Department is (a) currently running and (b) planning to run during the next six months; and for each campaign (i) how much it will cost, (1) in total and (2) to his Department, (ii) what agencies or bodies are undertaking the work and (iii) what is its planned duration. [7407]

Mr. Bowis: Information relating to the promotional and public information campaigns run by the Department of Transport through its agencies is not collected centrally. The information below relates to the central transport group of the Department of Transport only.

The bulk of the Department's promotional and public information work concerns continual campaigns to encourage safer road use.

(a) The annual Christmas drink drive advertising campaign is currently running. It will run throughout December and will cost £1.2 million.

(b) Child pedestrian safety advertising will run in January and February 1997 costing £800,000. Over the next six months it is planned to spend a further £400,000 to publicise various road safety topics.

The Department works with advertising agencies Abbot Mead Vickers and D'Arcy Masius Benton and Bowles to secure creative advise in addressing its road safety messages through advertising campaigns to the public; it works with the Central Office of Information to ensure that it secures effectiveness and value for money in the purchasing of advertising media. In other areas of providing information for the public—advice on transport security, mobility for disabled people, vehicle emissions etcetera—it works with various suppliers of design, print, and other media.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on promotional or public information campaigns in each of the last five years; and how much he estimates will be spent on these campaigns during the (i) current and (ii) next financial years. [7539]

Mr. Bowis: Information relating to the promotional and public information campaigns run by the Department of Transport and its agencies is not collected centrally. The figures relate to the central transport group of the Department of Transport only.

The figures for the last five years are as follows:

1991–92: 8,270,000
1992–93: 8,760,000
1993–94: 8,275,000
1994–95: 8,039,000
1995–96: 8,356,000[1]

(i) estimate for current financial year:
1996–97: 9,648,000[1]

(ii) detailed budget estimates for the next financial years have not yet been finalised.

[1] Expenditure for 1995–96 and 1996–97 includes advertising in respect of the flotation of Railtrack.

Channel Tunnel (Safety)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 265, what is the estimated time delay between an incident in mid-channel tunnel and the arrival of firefighting teams during the night. [7663]

Mr. Watts: During normal operations, firefighting teams are usually based at night in the fire equipment management centres at either end of the tunnel. The maximum estimated attendance time for teams to reach the middle of the tunnel from the FEMCs is about 20 minutes. Under the current temporary arrangements, Eurotunnel has assured the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority that firefighting teams will maintain a permanent 24-hour presence in the service tunnel while the damaged section of the southern tunnel is repaired.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 265, what inspections have been undertaken by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority since the tunnel became operational. [7662]

Mr. Watts: Numerous regular inspections have been undertaken both by members of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority and by inspectors from national authorities.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the members of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority, together with the organisations that they represent. [7651]

Mr. Watts: There are 10 full members of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority. They are:

Roger Lejuez (current chairman of the Safety Authority), Inspecteur Général des Transports et des Travaux Publics, Ministère des Transports; Claude Charmeil, Ingénieur Général des Ponts et Chausées, Ministère des Transports; Pierre Desfray, Ingénieur Divisionnaire des Travaux Publics de l'Etat, Ministère des Transports; François Barthélémy, Chef de la Mission du Transport des Matières Dangéreuses, Ministère des Transports; and Jean-Pascal Cogez, Sous-Préfet du Pas-de-Calais.

Edward Ryder CB (current head of the UK delegation), formerly HM chief inspector of nuclear installations, Health and Safety Executive; Peter Moss, head of channel tunnel division, Department of Transport; Sandra Caldwell, head of division A—safety policy directorate, Health and Safety Executive; Jeremy Beech CBE, QFSM, chief fire officer of Kent; and Victor Coleman, deputy chief inspector of railways, HM railway inspectorate, Health and Safety Executive.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Kent fire brigade took part in the safety evacuation exercise carried out by Eurotunnel on Sunday 1 December. [7666]

Mr. Watts: Yes.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances decisions taken by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority can be vetoed by individual members. [7652]

Mr. Watts: Decisions by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority are taken by agreement between the UK and French delegations. There is no power to veto by individual members.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the minutes of the last three meetings of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority. [7650]

Mr. Watts: The Anglo–French Channel Tunnel Safety Authority does not publish the minutes of its meetings. A summary of the safety authority's proceedings is published in the annual reports of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority, which are placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 264–66, if he will place in the Library the inspection reports on the maintenance checks undertaken on the decoupling device involved in the fire on 18 November; [7661]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 264–66, if he will place in the Library copies of all incident reports not yet in the public domain; [7646]

(3) if he will make public the findings of safety checks conducted by Eurotunnel; [7667]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 264–66, what factors preclude him from placing in the Library correspondence between Eurotunnel and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority relating to the design of wagons; [7664]

(5) what independent research was conducted by the Fire Research Station on the safe design of the channel tunnel; and if he will place copies in the Library. [7653]

Mr. Watts: This is precluded under the terms of the channel fixed-link concession agreement dated 14 March 1986, which states

"Each of the parties hereto and the Intergovernmental Commission and the Safety Authority shall hold in confidence all Documents and other information whether technical or commercial supplied to them by or on behalf of any other party hereto relating to the Fixed Link and shall not save as required by law or procedural practices publish or otherwise disclose the same otherwise than for the purposes contemplated by this Agreement."

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representatives from (a) his Department, (b) the Health and Safety executive and (c) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority attended the recent evacuation exercise staged by Eurotunnel; and if he will list the independent observers attending the exercise. [7648]

Mr. Watts: Two representatives from the Department of Transport, three representatives from the Health and Safety Executive and three from the Channel Tunnel safety Authority attended the evacuation exercise staged by Eurotunnel on 1 December 1996. Representatives from Kent fire brigade, Kent county constabulary and Her Majesty's fire inspectorate were also present.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations there have been between the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority and people with experience in fighting fires in coal mines with particular reference to those familiar with the foam plug technique. [7462]

Mr. Watts: The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority is able to obtain information and advice from a number of sources, including the Health and Safety executive and Kent fire brigade.

Heavy Vehicles (Wheel Loss)

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the estimates of annual fatalities caused by the loss of wheels from heavy commercial vehicles which have been sent to him; what estimate he has made of the number of (a) fatalities and (b) incidents; what research he is undertaking into this problem; what assessment he has made of the availability of safety wheel nuts; and if he will make a statement. [7974]

Mr. Bowis: An analysis by the Transport Research Laboratory of fatal accidents involving heavy goods vehicles indicates that wheel detachment occurs in about one such accident in a hundred. Applying this estimate to available road accident data would suggest that there are approximately five to six such fatal road accidents a year. A further analysis by the Vehicle Inspectorate's accident and defect database shows that between 1982 and 1994 there were approximately 320 accident cases involving the loss of wheels from commercial vehicles.

I am currently investigating ways of improving the collection and collation of relevant data on wheel loss. I am pleased to announce that, following joint discussions with the Vehicle Inspectorate and the Association of Chief Police Officers, a nationwide survey of the extent of the problem is planned to take place at the beginning of February 1997. Further research will be considered in light of the outcome of this study.

My Department has received many representations from manufacturers of proprietary products which claim to address the problem of wheel loss. We have not commissioned research into such products or their availability.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7562]

Mr. Bowis: My Department does not keep a central record of expenditure on trees and decorations. Two British pine trees will be on display in our headquarters building.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year. [7577]

Mr. Bowis: My Department does not keep a central record of expenditure on celebrating Christmas and the new year.

French Lorry Drivers' Dispute

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that small businesses not in the transport sector receive (a) appropriate and (b) expeditious compensation for losses arising from the French lorry drivers' dispute. [7819]

Mr. Watts: We are seeking to clarify with the French Government whether they will consider claims from non-transport businesses which suffered losses.

Trunk Road Improvement Schemes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk road improvement schemes which he has reassessed following the recommendations of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment and indicate for each such scheme the impact on traffic induction forecasts and on economic appraisals. [3968]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 25 November 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Robert Key, dated 6 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if he will list the trunk road improvement schemes which he has reassessed following the recommendations of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment, and indicate for each such scheme the impact on traffic induction forecasts and on economic appraisals.

We are carrying out SACTRA assessments for all schemes in the National Trunk Roads Programme. So far, 63 schemes from the 1996 Trunk Road Programme have been assessed.

The schedule classifies schemes into simple, intermediate and complex categories. Simple schemes are those where induced traffic effects are not considered to be significant and no further traffic or economic assessment is required. They are listed at Annex A. Intermediate schemes generally require a more flexible test to assess induced traffic and economic effects. Complex schemes are assessed in the same way as intermediate schemes but also require further detailed analysis.

The further assessments for intermediate and complex schemes are being undertaken as part of general scheme preparation. Results are being produced for key stages such as public consultation and publication of draft Orders. Completion of all the assessments will, therefore, take some time. The table at Annex B shows the results for those schemes which have had detailed assessments completed. Annexes C and D are lists of the schemes in the intermediate and complex categories respectively for which the further assessments have yet to be carried out.

The assessments indicate that the volume of additional traffic induced by schemes is generally less than 10 per cent., and in many cases below 5 per cent. Nevertheless, there can be significant variations on this; for example where substantial new development follows a road opening.

The economic assessment process for induced traffic is still being developed and improved. For now, where induced traffic is likely to be a significant factor, we are undertaking sensitivity tests based on assumptions that provide an extreme test of scheme economics. For example, in some cases sensitivity has been tested with significantly higher volumes of induced traffic than are expected. I am pleased to say that, so far, although there are some significant reductions in Benefit Cost Ratio, none of the schemes assessed have failed the tests, even where unrealistically high levels of induced traffic have been assumed, and all have remained good value for money.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Investment (Belfast, West)

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what level of (a) public and (b) private investment has been secured by his Department for the constituency of Belfast, West since 31 August 1994. [5125]

Mr. Ancram: From the information available, it is estimated that direct departmental public investment commitments are in excess of £330 million for this period. Related private sector investment is estimated at £101 million. In addition some £33.8 million under "Making Belfast Work" has been spent for the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96. Figures for the Northern Ireland Office, and the Departments of Education and of Finance and Personnel are not included in these figures and can be made available only at a disproportionate cost.

Targeting Social Need Initiative

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implementation of the targeting social need initiative. [6784]

Mr. Ancram: The targeting social need initiative has made a valuable contribution to addressing the problems of areas and people in greatest need. Since 1994, the results of specially commissioned research have been available to assist Departments in identifying areas of greatest need on the basis of objective criteria. These data have been used in the targeting of relevant Government and European Union programmes. Annual statements on public expenditure in Northern Ireland have highlighted specific programmes where expenditure has been increased or maintained. In 1994, management consultants reviewed the implementation of the initiative in the Department of Economic Development and recommendations were adopted, including the establishment of action plans. Other Departments are currently initiating similar strategies.

Northern Ireland Forum

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which delegates to the forum have submitted their resignations to him and which have had their names submitted for removal by their party's nominating representatives; and which nominating representatives he has changed and for what reasons. [7187]

Mr. Ancram: Thirteen members of the forum have written to my right hon. and learned Friend purporting to tender their resignation from the forum. They are the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady), Ms Brid Rodgers, Mr. Patsy McGlone, Mr. Hugh Carr, Mr. Mark Durkan, Mr. Donovan McClelland, Mr. Tommy Gallagher, Mr. Frank Feely, Mr. Arthur Doherty, Mr. Alisdair McDonnell, Mr. Alban Maginness, Ms Dorita Field and Mr. Sean Farren.

No delegates have had their names submitted for removal by their party's nominating representative.

Since the talks started to Secretary of State has made one change concerning nominating representatives. Following a number of representations he concluded that Councillor Mark Langhammer, who was originally designated as the nominating representative of Labour had ceased to be

"the Leader ... or otherwise the most appropriate person to act on behalf of Labour", the statutory criterion for the post of nominating representative. The Secretary of State also concluded that that criterion was met by Mr. Malachi Curran. Notice that Mr. Curran was nominating representative of Labour appeared in the Belfast Gazette of 16 August.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many private finance initiative schemes have been used to date and how many are planned for implementing transport schemes in Northern Ireland. [7381]

Mr. Moss: The responsibility for implementing transport schemes in Northern Ireland lies with the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company and its operating subsidiaries Ulsterbus, Citybus and Northern Ireland Railways. I understand from the chairman of the NITHC that no private finance initiative schemes have been used to date but that three are being progressed.

Cycle Routes

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what progress his Department has made in implementing a pilot cycle route in the Belfast urban area; [7373]

(2) how many miles of dedicated cycle routes there are currently in Northern Ireland; and if he will list them. [7374]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 5 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your questions about dedicated cycle routes in Northern Ireland and about the implementation of a pilot cycle route in the Belfast urban area.

At present dedicated cycle facilities exist at:

Craigavon new town development: Some 15 miles

Belfast, Sydenham By-pass: Some 6 miles

Belfast, Tillysburn—Palace Barracks, Hollywood: Some 2 miles

You may also be interested to know that Roads Service has entered into a partnership with Sustrans, the Bristol based cycling charity, to assist in developing the Northern Ireland part of the National Cycle Network. This is expected to result in the development of some 380 miles of cycle route, much of which will be along lightly trafficked rural roads. The stage has been reached where the framework report has been largely agreed. Subject to a satisfactory outcome from an investment appraisal and subsequently, to the legislative and statutory consultative procedures, it is hoped to have the first lengths of the network under construction in the summer of 1997.

Unfortunately, legislative difficulties have arisen which have delayed introduction of the pilot scheme referred to in "Transportation in Northern Ireland: The Way Forward". It had been intended that a length of dedicated cycle route of mixed type—for example, segregated sections for cyclists only, sections shared by cyclists and pedestrians—should be introduced from the University of Ulster at Jordanstown to Rushpark on the Shore Road in Belfast. By mixing the types of route their relative performance could be monitored. Progress is continuing on this, but it has been slower than originally intended. This length will now be incorporated into one of the early stages of the National Cycle Network to be developed in 1997.

I hope that you will find this information helpful.

Road Safety Plan

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress his Department has made in meeting each target set out in the road safety plan published in July 1995. [7377]

Mr. Moss: The road safety plan for Northern Ireland covers the three-year period from 1995–96 to 1997–98 and is received annually with a major review and update during the third year.

A report monitoring progress will be available shortly and I will place a copy in the Library.

Park and Ride Facilities

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the results of the feasibility study for park and ride facilities at bus and railway stations cited in his Department's document, "The Way Forward". [7379]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company in conjunction with its operating subsidiaries—Citybus Ltd., Northern Ireland Railways Ltd. and Ulsterbus Ltd.—have now audited existing park and ride facilities and their usage at key locations in Northern Ireland. They are in the course of finalising a station modernisation programme to create improved or new interchanges providing secure parking for bicycles and private cars.

Transport (EU Funds)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what EU funds (a) have been used and (b) he proposes to use for (i) developing and improving transport within Northern Ireland and (ii) linking Northern Ireland with the Republic of Ireland, and if he will list the schemes. [7371]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is in the table:

	Grant committed to schemes within Northern Ireland	Grants committed to schemes linking Northern Ireland with the Republic of Ireland

Balance of grant to be committed:

1. Transportation sub-programme: £32.7 million (39.8 mecu)
2. Interreg II: £4.1 million (5 mecu)
3. Programme for peace and reconciliation: nil

It is not possible to anticipate how uncommitted grant will be allocated to schemes (i) developing and improving transport within Northern Ireland and (ii) those linking Northern Ireland with the Republic of Ireland.

The mecu value is provided using an exchange rate of £ = 1.22 mecu.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds from the transportation sub-programme of the European Commission 1994–99 have already been spent to date; and what are the projections of expenditure for the next three financial years. [7372]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

Forecast outturn to the end of 1996: £51.5 million (62.9 mecu)
Forecast outturn to the end of 1997: £22.1 million (27.0 mecu)
Forecast outturn to the end of 1998: £16.3 million (19.9 mecu)
Forecast outturn to the end of 1999: £23.9 million (29.2 mecu)

The information is given in calendar years consistent with Commission practice. The mecu value is provided using an exchange rate of £1 = 1.22 ecu.

"The Way Forward"

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress his Department has made in achieving its objectives set out in the document "The Way Forward". [7375]

Mr. Moss: Progress has been made in the key areas of management and co-ordination of public transport services and the introduction of further bus priority measures. Work is currently under way to bring forward changes in car parking policy; to extend provision of park and ride facilities; to improve cycling and pedestrian facilities; to reduce the mobility gap; and to develop a public travel awareness campaign.

Railways

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans his Department has to extend the railway system in Northern Ireland. [7382]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for operational matters, such as the extension of the railway system in Northern Ireland, lie with the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company and its operating subsidiary Northern Ireland Railways. I understand from the chairman of the holding company that, while there are no current proposals to extend the existing railway system, plans are progressing for the reinstatement of the line from Antrim to Bleach Green for passenger traffic. This line has not been used for regular passenger services for a number of years.

Bus Priority Schemes

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress his Department has made in respect of the programme of bus priority schemes; and when he expects them to be completed. [7378]

Mr. Moss: Bus lanes have been in operation on the Ormeau road and Nelson street, Belfast since 1992. Further bus lanes were opened on the Albert Bridge road and Queen's square in April 1996. It is hoped to begin implementation of a further three lengths of bus lane, on Great Victoria street, Lisburn road and Malone road, in mid-January 1997. Investigations are under way into schemes on a further eight lengths of street in Belfast city centre, which have been identified as having the potential to accommodate bus lanes.

A pilot study into the operational implications and potential benefits of introducing selective vehicle detection systems at signalised junctions has been under way on the Upper Newtownards road since spring 1993. Due to changing technology, this will of necessity be a protracted study. The intention is to assess the potential benefits of extending such a system to other routes in the city.

All these measures, together with others being investigated from earlier studies, feed into a rolling programme of bus priority development.

Retail Planning Policy

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress his Department has made in reviewing retail planning policy; and if he will make a statement. [7376]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 5 December 1996:

Mr Moss has asked me to reply to your Question about the review of retail planning policy.

The review has been completed and a Planning Policy Statement entitled Retailing and Town Centres (copy enclosed) was published in June 1996.

Transport (Belfast)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the public transport study of Belfast city centre to be completed. [7380]

Mr. Moss: A study was undertaken in 1995 specifically to explore the introduction of further lengths of bus priority lane within Belfast city centre. Other aspects of public transport in the city centre remain to be studied, to provide a comprehensive and detailed analysis of the issues.

Accidents at Work

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 18 November, Official Report, column 388, what is the fatality rate per 100,000 employees/self-employed in Northern Ireland. [7281]

Mr. Ancram: The fatality rate in Northern Ireland for employees/self-employed, as a result of accidents at work, has been assessed at 3.96 per 100,000 for the calendar year 1995.

Beaches

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year since 1991 those beaches which complied with the EU bathing water directive standard guide for (a) total and faecal coliforms, (b) faecal streptococci, and (c) coliforms and faecal streptococci combined. [7447]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Environment and Heritage Service under its chief executive, Mr. Robert C. Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert C. Martin to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 5 December 1996:

As Chief Executive of Environment and Heritage Service, I am responsible for all operational aspects of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland's environmental policies.

I am therefore responding to the Parliamentary Question which you put down in the House of Commons on 3 December 1996;

'to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will list for each year since 1991 those beaches which complied with the EU Bathing Water Directive Standard Guide for

(a) total and faecal coliforms,

(b) faecal streptococci, and

(c) coliforms and faecal streptococci combined.'

The information requested is best summarised on the attached table. Please note that monitoring for the faecal streptococci parameter commenced in 1992 and therefore the table is not complete for the year 1991.

I trust you will find this reply helpful.

Health and Social Services (Needs Assessments)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the information leaflets currently provided by health and social services trusts to individuals undergoing assessment of need for social services support. [7743]

Mr. Moss: Information relating to the range of leaflets currently provided by trusts to individuals undergoing assessment of need for social services support is not collected centrally.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the secretary of state for Northern Ireland if he will list for each health and social services trust the current procedures to monitor unmet need as a result of assessment and the procedures adopted by the Department of Health and Social Services management executive to collect such information. [7747]

Mr. Moss: Health and social services boards and trusts, in their respective roles of commissioners and providers of community care services, have the responsibility for assessing the needs of their resident populations, and for meeting those needs within the context of available resources and local priorities. Trusts supply their respective boards with information on the level of services supplied to meet assessed need, but details of these procedures is not held centrally. The HSS executive liaises with boards to identify any areas of service provision which are under particular pressure for consideration within the annual public expenditure survey and allocation process.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list by trust the number of assessments of needs of carers taken under guidance equivalent to the Carers Recognition and Services Act 1995; [7748]

(2) if he will list by health and social services trust the number of assessments provided for adult carers and carers who are deemed children under the guidance. [7749]

Mr. Moss: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms Mowlam) on 4 November 1996, Official Report, column 381.

Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1989

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to bring into effect the remaining parts of the Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1989. [7745]

Mr. Moss: None. The requirements of the remaining parts of the Act are, to a very large extent, reflected in the existing arrangements for community care.

Health and Personal Social Services Legislation

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to consolidate health and personal social services legislation. [7746]

Mr. Moss: None.

Emergency Provisions Acts

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he has made for the review of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts 1991 and 1996. [8326]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am pleased to say that Mr. John Rowe QC has accepted by invitation to carry out the annual review of the Acts for a further two years.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if a course of 16 guided learning hours a week funded or part-funded by the Further Education Funding Council is deemed part time under jobseeker's allowance regulations. [7686]

Mr. Forth: Yes.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if part-time students in receipt of jobseeker's allowance who have paid in excess of £250 in course fees will be deemed to have limited their availability for work. [7687]

Mr. Forth: The Employment Service would normally refer cases such as these to an independent adjudication officer for a decision on the jobseeker's availability for work. It is then a matter for the adjudication officer to decide.

Employment Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish a breakdown of spending in 1996–97 and proposed spending in 1997–98 on the Employment Service, giving the percentage change between the two years. [7472]

Mr. Forth: The following table sets out:

(a) figures for 1996–97 as shown in the 1996 departmental report. They do not reflect in-year changes, which have not yet been settled;

(b) figures for 1997–98 which take account of the plans announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement so far as the Employment Service 's programme and capital funding but not its running costs are concerned. This is because the final allocation of running costs as between the Employment Service and the rest of the Department has not yet been settled.

Since the figures do not reflect in-year changes in 1996–97 or the full outcome of the plans for 1997–98 announced in the Budget statement, the figures cannot be directly compared and hence no percentage change is shown.

[1] Figures for 1996–97 are as shown in the 1996 departmental report. They do not reflect in-year changes, which have not yet been settled.
[2] The figure shown is based on the figure given in the 1996 departmental report, increased by £71 million reflecting the transfer of former receipts from DSS to the ES baseline.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice she is giving to training and enterprise councils about the reductions that they should make in the delivery of local training programmes arising from planned reductions in funding for 1997–98. [7475]

Mr. Paice: The Secretary of State wrote to training and enterprise councils on 26 November giving details of plans for TEC programmes in 1997–98. A copy of that letter has been placed in the Library.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much her Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for her Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7565]

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 12 Christmas trees will be purchased for DFEE and Employment Service headquarters offices nationally, at a cost of £1,559, including decorations. Details of the type and origin of the trees are as follows: one artificial, made in England; one English pine; eight Norway spruce—six German, two Norwegian—and two Nordman firs from Holland.

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the largest annual amount paid to a single dentist offering NHS treatments in each year since 1990. [5242]

Mr. Malone: The information is contained in the following table:

The largest amount of general dental service gross fee[1] earnings[2] paid to a single dentist offering national health service treatment in each year since 1991–92[3]

1991–92	395,000
1992–93	486,000
1993–94	661,000
1994–95	617,000
1995–96	604,000

[1] Gross fees payments do not account for all NHS earnings. Other payments such as maternity and seniority payments would have been made in addition to gross fees.

[2] Rounded to the nearest £1,000.
[3] Data before 1991–92 are not available. The new contract in October 1990 resulted in major revisions to information systems.

Food Poisoning

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the past 10 years the number of cases of salmonella poisoning and the number of deaths where salmonellosis is mentioned as a primary or secondary cause. [7357]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of salmonella isolations and the number of deaths where salmonella was given as an underlying cause is:

Salmonella in humans in England and Wales

Year	Isolations[1]	Deaths
1986	16,976	40

Similar information for earlier than 1993 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning have been linked to the consumption of meat or meat products sold as fresh which were previously frozen. [7362]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7568]

Mr. Horam: No central record is kept of the annual expenditure on Christmas trees and decorations throughout the Department. Three trees will be bought for the Department's London headquarters offices this year, at a total cost of £1,546. Where natural trees are purchased they will be of Nordmaniana variety from sustainable forests in Norway.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year. [7582]

Mr. Horam: The headquarters of the Department of Health plans to spend an estimated sum of £1,120 on the purchasing and postage of charity Christmas cards for 1996. Any other costs which may arise are covered by the hospitality expenditure of the Department which is included in the running costs sum published in the annual report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Organophosphates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent communications he has had from his advisers on possible links between organophosphates and human ailments. [7996]

Mr. Horam: The Department receives advice and information on a regular basis about organophosphates and their possible effects on human health from a number of sources both external and internal. OP compounds have been reviewed several times by the independent expert committee which advise the Government on pesticides and veterinary products, which found that there was no evidence to support a ban or suspension on their use when used properly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many calls have been made to the benefit cheats hotline; and of those, how many were later found to be (a) confirmed fraud, (b) suspected fraud, and (c) no fraud suspected. [6054]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested because of the time taken to conclude investigations and to collate the data.

However, the national benefit fraud hotline has answered over 100,000 calls since the launch on 5 August 1996.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland Security what percentage of Coventry's target of £927,234 to be uncovered from benefit fraud has so far been received. [5863]

Mr. Heald [holding answer 27 November 1996]: Each local authority is set a threshold of weekly benefit savings to be made through the detection of housing benefit and council tax benefit fraud. Authorities can earn additional subsidy through performance in relation to their WBS thresholds, and can have subsidy withheld for poor performance.

As at 30 September 1996 WBS recorded for the city of Coventry were £647,341—70 per cent. of its threshold for 1996–97.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the yield of national insurance contributions at current rates, gross and net of rebates, in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2010–11, (c) 2020–21 and (d) 2030–31, if from 1998 the lower earnings limit were increased in line with prices and upper earnings limit were (i) increased in line with prices and (ii) earnings or (iii) abolished; and what would be the yield if, in each case, the lower earnings limit were increased in line with earnings. [5897]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available is in the table.

National insurance contributions: £ billion at 1994–95 prices

[2] Assumes that the current 10 per cent. contribution rate for employees would apply to earnings above the upper earnings limit.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take in the case of David Holmes, details of which have been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement on the implementation of incapacity benefit. [6249]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 5 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what action he intends to take in the case of David Holmes, details of which have been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement on the implementation of incapacity benefit.

I was very sorry to hear of the death of Mr. David Holmes and for reasons of confidentiality I will write to you separately to provide the relevant facts.

It may be useful if I briefly outline the All Work Test (AWT) which was applied to Mr. Holmes' Incapacity Benefit (IB) claim.

The AWT, which is an integral part of IB, looks at the effect of a client's illness of their ability to carry out a range of work related activities, rather than the condition itself. The test identifies various functional areas, such as walking or standing, which are relevant when assessing capacity for work. The medical test for IB is different from the more usual General Practitioner's (GP) examination in which the aim is to make a diagnosis and arrange appropriate treatment.

The information gathered for the AWT involves the views of the client, his GP and a Benefits Agency Medical Services (BAMS) doctor in an assessment of the effect of the medical condition on the client's ability to carry out the work related activities. The independent Adjudication Officer takes all these views into account and decides whether a person is capable of work. Neither the examining doctor nor the GP have a role to play in deciding the claim.

IB was successfully implemented on 13 April 1995, involving the training of 1,400 doctors and 40,600 administrative staff in the new procedures. New information Technology systems were developed to support BAMS and Benefits Agency staff. Performance has been maintained consistently and has not suffered as a result of implementation. IB is being constantly reviewed to ensure its continued efficiency.

Wrexham Benefits Agency Office

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of claimants who tried, but were unable, to contact the Wrexham Benefits Agency office by telephone during the periods of telephone service interruption between 27 and 29 November. [7457]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. John Marek, dated 5 December 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what estimate he has made of the number of claimants who tried, but were unable to contact the Wrexham Benefit Agency by telephone during the periods of telephone service interruption between the 27th and 29th of November.

On 27 and 28 November there was an interruption to the telephone service of 45 minutes and 2 minutes respectively. Wrexham office received 657 and 717 calls on those days against an average for November of 663. This would indicate that there was not a significant loss of calls.

On 29 November there was a prolonged interruption of 3 hours 45 minutes. Our information shows that 250 fewer calls were received than on average.

These interruptions are due to technical problems which are currently being investigated by engineers. Every effort is being made to identify and rectify this intermittent fault.

I apologise for this interruption to the telephone service.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year; [7583]

(2) how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7567]

Mr. Burt: The only departmental expenditure on Christmas and new year is for official Christmas cards, at an estimated cost this year of £3,240.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals were heard by the social security appeal tribunal covering the Newport, Gwent, area in October; in how many cases the appellant was neither present nor represented; and in how many of these cases the appellant had informed the tribunal of his or her intention not to attend the hearing. [6310]

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 27 November 1996]: The information is set out in the table.

	Total
Cases heard	43
Appellant neither present nor represented	15
Appellant informed tribunal of intention not to attend the hearing	1

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Publicity

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what promotional and public information campaigns his Department is (a) currently running and (b) planning to run during the next six months; and for each campaign (i) how much it will cost, (1) in total and (2) to his Department, (ii) what agencies or bodies are undertaking the work and (iii) what is its planned duration. [7415]

Mr. Hanley: The diplomatic wing information effort aims to promote the influence and prestige of the UK overseas and seek long-term friends for Britain. This activity is delivered via exhibitions, publications, films/television, sponsored visits, the Internet, etcetera. Expenditure for 1996–97 is estimated to be £13.9 million.

The only public information campaign is that directed at UK nationals travelling abroad, giving them consular advice and information. The estimated cost in 1996–97 is £310,000. On behalf of the consular division, the Passport Agency inserts the checklist for travellers leaflet in every passport issued. The cost is based on 2p per passport plus 6 per cent. administration costs. Actual cost to the consular publicity budget for 1995–96 was £116,000.

The ODA does not run specific campaigns. Its publicity budget covers development education, publications, exhibitions, the British Overseas Development newspaper, the ODA roadshow and the Internet. The budget for the current and the next financial year for this work is £1.5 million.

The work is on-going.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department has spent on promotional or public information campaigns in each of the last five years; and how much he estimates will be spent on these campaigns during the (i) current and (ii) next financial years. [7544]

Mr. Hanley: The diplomatic wing information effort aims to promote the influence and prestige of the UK overseas and seek long-term friends for Britain. This activity is delivered via exhibitions, publications, films/television, sponsored visits, the Internet, etcetera.

The only public information campaign is that directed at UK nationals travelling abroad, giving them consular advice and information. The figures for this are contained in the table.

The ODA does not run specific campaigns. Its publicity budget covers development education, publications, exhibitions, the British Overseas Development newspaper, the ODA roadshow and the Internet. These figures are also contained in the table.

Cyprus

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts he has had with the Greek Cypriot Government since 1 January. [7656]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary had talks with President Clerides and Foreign Minister Michaelides of Cyprus on 19 June. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary had further discussions with them in New York on 27 September.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of the advantages of acceptance of the application by Cyprus for membership of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [7659]

Mr. Davis: We welcome the European Union's acceptance of Cyprus's application to join the EU and the decision to open accession negotiations six months after the end of the intergovernmental conference. The UK shares the hopes of most EU member states that Cyprus will join the EU as a bi-communal, bi-zonal federation following a comprehensive political settlement. On that basis, it will bring considerable benefits to both communities on the island.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking in respect of proposals to reunify Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [7671]

Mr. Davis: We are determined to put our full weight behind UN-led efforts to achieve a just and lasting settlement in Cyprus on the basis of UN Security Council resolutions which call for a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary will visit Cyprus later this month to take forward discussions to this end.

China (Death Penalty)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise the issue of China's policy of executing Chinese nationals who commit tax fraud with the Chinese Government, before the transfer of Hong Kong's sovereignty. [7665]

Mr. Hanley: We and our EU partners have expressed to the Chinese authorities our concern about the use of the death penalty when this is in disregard of international legal safeguards.

The death penalty was abolished in Hong Kong by the Crimes (Amendment) Ordinance in April 1993. Under the Sino-British joint declaration, the laws previously in force in Hong Kong shall be maintained, save for any that contravene the Basic Law and subject to any amendment by the Hong Kong special autonomous region legislature.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year. [7585]

Mr. Hanley: The normal course of official entertainment in pursuit of the Department's objectives includes events during the festive season. Their cost is not recorded separately, but is included in the running cost expenditure which is published in the annual departmental report. To produce the information requested would require consulting all overseas posts and departments in London, and would involve disproportionate cost. The cost of the Department's staff Christmas parties is met by the staff themselves.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7570]

Mr. Hanley: This year, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will spend £1,126 on Christmas trees and decorations One tree will be brought for the main FCO building in King Charles street. It is a Norwegian spruce imported by the supplier from Norway and cost £325.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rural Newsagents

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the contribution of local professional newsagents to rural communities; what assessment his Department has made of the effect of a non-negotiable margin decrease on their businesses; and if he will make a statement. [7952]

Mr. Page: The Government made clear their commitment to rural communities in "Rural England 1996", Cm 3444. Newspaper retailing is a valued service in all communities. Newsagents margins on the sale of newspapers are a commercial matter for the parties concerned.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year. [7575]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. The Department's budget for official hospitality this financial year, excluding the net controlled agencies, is £515,000.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7563]

Mr. Taylor: As the Department and its agencies occupy some 220 sites, a global figure is not readily available. As to the six headquarters buildings occupied by the DTI in central London, the cost of decorating reception and public areas is estimated at £1,500, including the purchase of five Christmas trees of the Abies Nobilis variety from Scotland.

EU Telecommunications Council

Mr. Dover: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Telecommunications Council on 28 November. [8509]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I represented the UK at the Telecommunications Council held in Brussels on 28 November.

The Council unanimously agreed a resolution on illegal and harmful content on the internet, based on the self-regulatory principles of the UK's NetWatch scheme.

No progress was made on a draft directive on postal services. A number of compromises concerning the second stage of liberalisation were considered but none attracted sufficient support.

There was a short debate on key issues of a directive on the application of open network provision to voice telephony in a competitive environment. Additionally, the European Commission made presentations on: the work of an experts group on potential health risks linked to mobile telecommunications; the Commission's Communication "Europe at the forefront of the global information society—Rolling Action Plan", its Green Paper on numbering policy for telecommunications services in Europe; and on an informal meeting on satellite communications held in Paris on 10 October.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Dover: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his response to the rejection by the Court of Justice of the European Communities of the United Kingdom's application to have the EU working time directive annulled; what plans he has to consult on implementing the directive; and if he will make a statement. [8510]

Mr. Lang: The European Court of Justice has now given its judgment, and we will obey the law. In due course, we will secure changes to the EC treaty which will mean that the directive no longer affects the United Kingdom.

The directive is a complicated document. Its implementation will mean imposing novel limits and controls on working time. Unlike any other EU member state, we have no framework of law which we could easily extend or modify to comply with the arbitrary working time limits required by the directive. Implementation measures must be carefully tailored to the circumstances of British business, to minimise disruption and avoid imposing any unnecessary burdens. That is why we need to consult widely on all the issues and options arising from the terms of the directive.

I am today issuing a consultation document on implementing the directive. The consultation document seeks views on various issues, such as enforcement arrangements; taking advantage of "derogations" and "options" the directive allows; defining certain terms, for example, what hours are to count as "night time"; and setting particular limits, for example, the duration and terms of a standard "in work" rest break and the standard reference period for averaging night work hours.

The consultation period will last until 6 March. We will then take stock of the position in the light of responses.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 498, on small business statistics what plans he has to keep figures on (a) the percentage of United Kingdom small and medium enterprises which export, (b) the figures in each European Union country and (c) the European Union average. [7833]

Mr. Page: My Department plans to continue to assess information from any available source that might contain data on the percentage of United Kingdom SMEs that export, or similar data for all other EU countries, or an EU average.

Exports (Libya)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the goods and services in respect of which licences for export to Libya were issued in each year since 1992. [2969]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The export of licensable goods is regulated by both the Export of Goods (Control) Orders, the EC regulation on dual-use goods, and the associated Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Orders. These are supplemented in the case of Libya by the Libyan sanctions orders.

Table 1 lists, by legislation heading, the category of goods for which licences were issued, after full consideration under the EG(C)O and dual-use goods regulations.

The Libyan sanctions orders additionally confer licensability to the supply of materials to airfields, technical advice or training to air or ground personnel, direct insurance for aircraft, oil pumping or refining equipment and an assets freeze against the Government or public authorities in Libya. The types of goods for which licences have been issued again after full consideration by my Department since 1992 are summarised in the list.

WALES

Health Care (Private Sector)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent purchasing health care from the private sector in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [7234]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The amount spent purchasing health care from non-NHS providers—that is, the private sector together with non-profit-making organisations—for each of the last three years is as follows:

	£000
1993–94	11,775
1994–95	15,599
1995–96	23,396

It is for health authorities to purchase health care appropriate to the needs of their resident population.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department will spend on Christmas trees and decorations this year; how many Christmas trees will be bought for his Department's headquarters; and what are the type and country of origin of the trees. [7559]

Mr. Hague: Fifty pounds will be spent on decorations. No expenditure will be incurred on Christmas trees.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department plans to spend on celebrating Christmas and the new year. [7579]

Mr. Hague: My Department has no central budget for Christmas celebrations and no special expenditure is forecast beyond the purchase of departmental Christmas cards at a cost of £1,052.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has discussed with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and the relevant local authorities concerning the rental payments on private finance initiative deals entered into by the corporation after transfer of all assets and liabilities to the local authorities after the winding up of the corporation. [8000]

Mr. Hague: None. The corporation has not yet entered into financial commitments on any PFI deals. I will be considering wind-up issues, including the transfer of assets and liabilities, following receipt in March next year of the corporation's report on the outcome of its consultations with local authorities and other bodies about its draft wind-up action plan.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Gwent health authority regarding concerns expressed by the district auditor about the sum outstanding from the executive car loan of the previous chief executive. [7999]

Mr. Hague: None. This will be a matter for the health authority to address.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 402, if he will place a copy of the post-project evaluation on the move to Crickhowell house in the Library. [8023]

Mr. Hague: The report was prepared by the authority and I have asked the chief executive to let the hon. Member have a copy.

Meningitis

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 2 December, Official Report, columns 669–75, on the meningitis outbreak at the university of Wales, Cardiff, if the strain of the 14 October case in the tower block, Pen y Lan, has now been confirmed; and what it was. [8022]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which strain of meningitis was identified in the Cardiff student who fell ill with the disease in October. [7788]

Mr. Hague: Initial blood samples taken from the patient concerned did not confirm meningococcal infection. Further follow-up testing has identified meningococcal infection, although it has not been possible, to date, to identify the type.

TREASURY

Computers

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what resources he has allocated to enable all computer software operated by the Treasury to be adapted to deal with (a) the year 2000 problem and (b) the proposed single European currency; and if he will make a statement. [5740]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury has work in hand to identify and test computer software for year 2000 compliance. This work is being undertaken by a project team alongside existing responsibilities. The current plan is that any remedial work will be scheduled into the maintenance and upgrade cycle of computer systems concerned.

It was agreed at the European Council in Madrid in December 1995 that the single currency will be introduced over a transition period of up to three and a half years from January 1999 in those countries which participate. It is envisaged that public administrations in those countries which participate, along with many private sector operators, will change many or all of their systems around the end of that period, when euro banknotes and coins become available. Given that the Government have not decided whether the United Kingdom should seek to participate in the single currency and that, if it were to do so, there would be a transitional period after the introduction of the euro before its use would become necessary for all activities, the Treasury has not committed resources at this stage to adapting its computer software to deal with the single currency.

Tobacco and Alchol Duty

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the annual amount lost to the Treasury through evasion of duty on (a) wines, (b) spirits, (c) beer, and (d) tobacco products by (i) falsification of export documents, (ii) illegal imports and (iii) other means; what plans he has to counter such evasion; and if he will make a statement. [6786]

Mr. Oppenheim: There is no official estimate of revenue lost due to the falsification of export documents for alcohol and tobacco.

Customs' current estimate of the total revenue evaded—excise duty and value added tax—annually through the smuggling of alcohol and tobacco is set out in the table. The estimate does not include any amounts for commercial fraud. The amount actually lost to the Exchequer will be less than the amount evaded, because many smuggled goods, particular alcoholic products, represent additional consumption rather than substituting for similar goods purchased in the UK.

Product type	Revenue evaded (£ million)
Beer and Cider	110
Wine	50
Spirits	50
Tobacco Products	560
Total	770

The Chancellor announced in his Budget statement that the Government would be cracking down on the evasion of excise duty and VAT. To this end, a further allocation of some 190 staff will be made to customs for the financial year 1997–98 specifically to combat the smuggling of alcohol and tobacco, for the investigation of excise fraud and to improve compliance with excise regulations. This is in addition to the front-line, support and investigation staff currently deployed to combat this type of evasion.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further steps he is taking to protect (a) tobacconists and (b) others from (i) cheap and (ii) illegal imports. [4307]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 26 November 1996]: It is quite legal for travellers to other member states to purchase excise goods without the requirement to pay UK excise duty on their return home, providing the goods are for their own use. However, it is illegal for such goods to be imported for a commercial purpose without payment of UK duty.

Customs and Excise currently has over 250 excise verification officers employed directly to prevent single market smuggling of excise goods. The Chancellor announced in his Budget speech that a further 70 posts are to be added to this number. This front-line force is backed up by specialist intelligence and investigation teams, whose resources are also being increased under the Department's investigation and intelligence fundamental expenditure review.

"Financial Statement and Budget Report"

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the equivalent figures for the year 1996–97 to those given in table 5.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". [7220]

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown by Department of the £1.1 billion estimated capital expenditure under the private finance initiative in 1996–97, referred to in table 5.4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", 1997–98, along the same lines as the figures for 1997–98 in table 5.5 of the same report. [7195]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 December 1996]: The information requested is as follows:

£ million	1996–97
Defence	40
FCO/ODA	0
Agriculture	0
DTI	[1]—
DfEE	0
Transport	550
Environment	80
Home Office	120
Legal (LCD)	[1]—
Health	70
Social Security	130
Scotland and Forestry Commission	30
Wales	20
Northern Ireland	10
Chancellor's department	30
Local authorities	50
Total	1,130

[1] Less than £10 million.

The principal reasons for the reduction in the estimated outturn for 1996–97 from £1.9 billion in the 1995 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" down to £1.1 billion in the 1996 report are better estimates of the likely phasing of the capital expenditure on some signed transport projects, and somewhat slower than expected progress in procurement of some other projects.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts raised by the Treasury in each year since 1979 through taxation on beer. [7255]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 3 December 1996]: The information requested is given in the table.

	Total revenue—nominal £ million
1979	1,380
1980	1,760
1981	2,080
1982	2,330
1983	2,580
1984	2,800
1985	3,034
1986	3,130
1987	3,200
1988	3,420
1989	3,520
1990	3,780
1991	4,160
1992	4,300
1993	4,190
1994	4,560
1995	4,740

The figures cover excise duty and VAT. Value added tax has been estimated from Office for National Statistics figure for consumers' expenditure on beer.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Her Majesty's Government prepared the paper on budgetary discipline in stage three of economic and monetary union in respect of negotiations on a stability pact for economic and monetary union; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [6893]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The briefing note "Budgetary Discipline in Stage Three of Economic and Monetary Union" was prepared for the European Union Commissioners; Sir Leon Brittan and Neil Kinnock, in early October. The note was placed in the Library of both Houses on 25 November 1996.

Golden Shares

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) of 25 November, Official Report, columns 71-72, what powers the Government can exercise under the terms of each of the golden or special shares they hold. [7103]

Mr. Jack: Special shares are confined to those companies where the Government judge that they need to retain specific limited powers over the future ownership, control, or conduct of a privatised company. Powers are generally limited to:

(i) a clause providing that the holder of the special share may redeem the share at any time for its face value (usually £1);

(ii) a clause limiting shareholdings by any one person, or group of persons acting in concert, to 15 per cent., with powers for the board of directors to disenfranchise any shareholder in breach of this limit to the extent of the excess;

(iii) a clause entrenching itself, and the two clauses above, against amendment unless there is both a resolution passed by the ordinary shareholders at general meeting in the usual way and the holder of the special share has given written consent.

Certain other provisions are included in specific special shares, mainly in connection with defence or security issues, relating to the appointment and nationality, of chief executives, and other directors, the disposal of material assets and the aggregate level of foreign ownership.

Special shares do not enable the Government to interfere in the day-to-day conduct of the privatised business. They do not carry any rights to vote at general meetings and entitle the holder to speak only on matters relating to the rights of the holder of the special share.

VAT Inspection Duty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer against how many (a) importers and (b) agents value added tax inspection duty is being levied on imports of (i) prawns and (ii) cod from (1) Iceland, (2) Norway and (3) the Faroe Islands brought in under EUR 1 certificates accepted by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at the time of import and subsequently deemed invalid; and what amount is being claimed. [7277]

Mr. Oppenheim: The following customs duty demands are currently outstanding:

Country	Goods	Importers	Agents	Total (£)
Iceland	prawns	14	2	416,700
	cod	3	2	122,000
Norway	prawns[1]	3	—
	cod	3	—	56,300
Faroe Islands	prawns	6	5	1,143,000
	cod	—	—	—

[1] Not broken down to maintain confidentiality of individual business.

Government Departments (Payment of Bills)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish figures for the payment of bills by Government Departments based on amended monitoring arrangements. [7816]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I will publish Government Departments' payment performance shortly.

Privatisation Receipts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cumulative total for privatisation receipts from 1979–80 to 1996–97 expressed in 1996–97 prices. [7822]

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 8 July 1996, Official Report, column 36, to the hon. Member for Cunninghame North (Mr. Wilson). That reply shows cumulative proceeds from 1979–80 to 1995–96 of £83.86 billion in 1996–97 prices. Estimated proceeds for 1996–97 are £4.5 billion.

Finance Bill

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the Finance Bill. [8109]

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) yesterday, Official Report, column 744.

Arms Sales (Rwanda)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations have been undertaken by his Department concerning breaches of the UN embargo on arms sales to Rwanda. [5781]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 4 December 1996]: Customs is aware of the current allegations and will take appropriate action in the light of its assessment of the information obtained.

It is not, however, customs' general practice to comment publicly about the existence or nature of any investigations of individuals or companies not yet accused of criminal offences, since to do so would risk prejudicing any on-going inquiries or future criminal proceedings.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 286

SESSION 1996–97

25th November—6th December 1996

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
